The problem of finding food for the Allied Army is daily growing more pressing, and there is the ever present danger of being cut off from Tien-tsin. As Lord Roberts' rapid march on Pretoria left his communications seriously exposed, so the rapid march of the Allies on Peking have left their line of advance at the mercy of the Chinese. The great difficulty is, of course, the disappearance of the Government, an expression of that passive resistance in which the sons of Han are past masters. An Empire that defeated a noted pirate chief by removing the towns and villages on the coast of Fu-kien inland three miles is not likely to hesitate at transferring the seat of government inland to defeat the hated foreigner. Unfortunately such a policy is likely to lead to war on a big scale, or the despatch of Count Waldersee to the Far East has no meaning. One thing is certain—it is easier to provoke war in China than to end it. The Kaiser should remember that the experience of 1859 is not likely to shed much light on the operations of 1900.

The capture of General Olivier is a substantial success in the Orange River Colony. Alike in conception and execution, it reflects distinction on Major-General Bruce-Hamilton, who apparently played the Boer's own game, and played it better than they did. That the news was received in Cape Town with "the liveliest satisfaction" one can readily believe, for Olivier has always been the life and soul of Free State resistance. Up to February he was the most prominent general on the Boer side, Joubert and Cronje alone excepted. It was he whose skill in the Stormberg region brought disaster on Sir William Gatacre's Division last December, and it was he who, when the occupation of Bloemfontein rendered his position at Aliwal North untenable, retreated to Brandfort along the Basutoland border with a heavy convoy, one of the most masterly movements of the war. The miscarriage of our attempt to stop it cost us 1,100 prisoners and many precious lives. Olivier again swept southwards towards the Orange River, when Lord Roberts was forced by lack of transport to remain inactive at Bloemfontein. But there he was foiled by Colonel Dalgety, trained like himself in the school of South African experience. Of late, the achievements of Olivier have been dwarfed by the brilliant achievements of De Wet, but, of the two leaders, the former has done the most to prolong the war. When Prinsloo surrendered to General Hunter a month ago, he declined to take the same course, escaping with a force of 1,500 men. It is not too much to say that his personal influence has been the chief factor in Free State resistance since Paardeberg and the occupation of the capital. The burghers saw clearly enough that the game was up, and would no doubt, have surrendered without any severe fighting long ago, but, with Olivier irreconcilable and at large, they felt compelled to maintain the struggle to the bitter end. Now that he is prisoner, guerilla warfare in the Orange River Colony is likely to come to a speedy end. Consequently the burden of guarding Lord Roberts' communications is considerably lightened, and large force released for service in the Transvaal.

It is a great satisfaction to find that recent events, both in the Boer War and during the advance to the relief of Kumasi, have tended distinctly to maintain the reputation of the bayonet in the hands of British, or British-led troops. It is quite likely that in South Africa the actual loss to the enemy in killed and wounded by the bayonet has not been great because the early experiences gained by them in the actions of Talana Hill, Elands-laagte, Belmont, and Graspan, caused such a wholesome dread of that deadly arme blanche in the hands of resolute men charging at top speed, that position after position was afterwards evacuated before actual contact could be effected. But the gain is self-reliance and confidence to the assailants was great, while the loss to the Boers accruing from the consciousness that they were outmatched at close quarters by the despised and hated Rooinek, has been a leading cause of the repeated abandonment of natural positions deemed by them to be impregnable, and of their frequent disinclination, although armed with magazine rifles, to fight out an engagement to the last. The retreat of the enemy from their position after the battle of Modder River is a case in point. The battle lasted throughout an entire day, and as darkness fell the enemy's position was still intact, but on the British left flank a party had made good its footing on the north bank of the Riet, and the result of having their trenches outflanked and attacked with the bayonet next day decided the Boers to beat, during the night, a hasty retreat. The recent advance on Kumasi the bayonet proved that in the hands of Haussas and Zulus, and by British officers it can be equally effective. Colonel Willcocks made frequent and successful use of the bayonet charge, and in reporting on the defeat of the enemy before Kumasi he says that the final charge with the bayonet, to which he had recourse, having full confidence in officers and men, could not have been beaten in élan by any soldiers:—"The bayonet charge absolutely paralysed the enemy, who at once ceased firing and fled away in thousands." We have no wish to detract from the courage of the enemy in the South African War, nor do we desire to cloak the folly of charging in the face of entrenchments lined by a stubborn foe armed with magazine rifles. As to the latter point, a bayonet charge nowadays to be successful must—as a rule—take place after a flank movement infiltrating the enemy's firing line. As to the first point, the bayonet is not a weapon upon which, even for defence, the Boers look kindly. They are not professional soldiers, but farmers, who, in the pursuit of game, have become skilled in the use of the rifle. They have, therefore, not adopted it, but even had they done so, the result would practically have been the same, for British infantry in a thousand fights, whether with the bayonet or the ancient pike, have always excelled in the use of this formidable description of hand-to-hand weapon.

We can fully endorse the statement of the military correspondent of the Times as to the annoyance which has been caused to all ranks at Aldershot by reason of the remarks of the Commander-in-Chief on the occasion of his recent visit of inspection. From the letters we have received it is evident that the disappointment is deep-rooted, and we are bound to say that in some respects we sympathise with the writers, who naturally feel that some little more allowance might have been made for them, even if things were as bad as Lord Wolseley is said to have found them. As one commanding officer says, "The season has been exceptional. At the beginning of it the major-general in acting command was severely censured in Parliament because he had the men out in the sun. Tropical heat was the order of the day for a month on end. After what had happened, no one, not even a brigadier, cared to incur the displeasure of his military superiors. We were told to run any risk of sunstroke, and we obeyed orders. Then came a deluge of rain, followed by more tropical heat, and then a visit of the Commander-in-Chief who, taking no account of what had occurred in the previous two months, urged us all round. This was bad enough, the absurd and unjust attitude assumed by the Press is worse, for it has demoralised every one and done incalculable mischief, as cases of the local police courts show." We can fully sympathise with our correspondent, who only too well knows the feelings generally prevailing throughout the Aldershot district. He is one who will be the last to complain without cause. He said a fortnight ago, the manoeuvres at Aldershot on the 16th inst. were not worse, but rather of fact much better, than many performances of the kind witnessed on the same field in previous years. It does seem, therefore, in the highest sense unfair that the manoeuvres should have gone out of its way to make a mountain out of a molehill, and even pausing to think either of the consequences, or take into account the existing circumstances, of which there were many. Did none of the writers who wielded their pens so glibly in condemnation of the manoeuvres assembled at Aldershot experience the influence of the heat of the summer? Did none of them hear of the unfortunate parade which took place in the House of Commons so long ago, and which was the subject of so much talk about? Apparently not. The Commander-in-Chief of all ranks have a substantial grievance. It is, of course, to be expected that Lord Wolseley should have spoken his mind, when as Commander-in-Chief he could do so in an Army Order so much more freely, and without causing any bitterness.

But it was never supposed by his lordship, we may be certain, that his remarks would be commented upon as they have been. Had he imagined that such a result would follow he would have been the last to have wounded the susceptibilities of a body of zealous officers. But the fact remains, however, as the military correspondent of the Times said on Tuesday last, that the troops in the Aldershot command have taken the censure passed upon them by the Press to heart in a way that was not expected. They regard it as most unfair, and there is no disguising that there is justification for their view, after all that has happened during the exceptional season through which we have passed.

Few men living are better able to express an opinion on hospital arrangements in the field than Sir John Furley, Chief Commissioner of the Red Cross Society. Sir John Furley has not only experience, but his independence is proverbial. Sir John was examined on Monday at Cape Town before Lord Romer's Royal Commission, and he expressed himself on the whole satisfied that the very best it was possible to do had been done for the sick and wounded. The epidemic of enteric at Bloemfontein, he said, could not have been foreseen. It is not denied by the medical authorities in South Africa that the staff of doctors and R.A.M.C. orderlies proved insufficient; but everybody knew before the Army took the field that this was likely to be the case. We have for years past been representing the dangers to which we were submitting ourselves by our failure to maintain a proper medical staff. One thing to our minds the South African campaign has shown conclusively—the undesirability of reckoning too much on untrained, and undisciplined, assistance in military hospitals. In no department of an army in the field are training and discipline more essential than in the hospitals. How can there be proper control and proper treatment of sick and wounded without it? In South Africa we have been obliged to trust in a large measure to untrained hands, and to this it will be found, we believe, that much of the mischief will have to be attributed. But, from a statement which Mr. Wyndham made lately in the House of Commons, it would seem that the War Office has not yet learnt its lesson, for it talks of making arrangements by which medical aid will be improvised on the outbreak of future campaigns. It is early, of course, to pronounce any actual judgment, but so far as we have been able to gather, if this is done the experiences of the next big war will not be much better than they have been in that which is just coming to a close—that is to say, unless these civilian doctors who are enrolled for service are called upon to enrol themselves in the Auxiliary Forces and pass the necessary examinations for the certificate of qualification. We can imagine nothing more calculated to disorganise the medical arrangements in the field than the influx of a number of civil assistants and untrained orderlies, who have to be taught in face of the enemy the first rudiments of military hospital discipline. Against the adoption of any such policy it will be the duty of the heads of the medical staff of the Army to protest most vigorously, for such an arrangement could not fail to produce endless difficulty.

A correspondence has been published in reference to the scheme which has been set on foot for raising a memorial to those who have lost their lives in South Africa. As Mr. Theodore Cook, writing from the Savile Club, has made clear, such a scheme requires long and careful preparation. Nevertheless a widespread expression of sympathy has been obtained for the broad and general principle that the names of all our dead should be in some way permanently preserved in an appropriate building. In order to give this feeling a practical aspect, a large number of gentlemen have signified their willingness to become members of the first general committee, including members of both Houses of Parliament, the Lords-Lieutenant of Counties, &c. But what form should the memorial take? It is, of course, a matter of first importance that a decision should be arrived at on this point. We have, therefore, been at some pains to obtain the views of many well qualified to advise, and we find that feeling is largely in favour of a central soldiers' and sailors' home in the Metropolis to which men in London, and those passing through, could go for relaxation. There are one or two homes of the kind now existing, which are doing useful work. This proposed central home might be the means, it is thought, of doing good in many ways, provided that it was unsectarian. Of course, there may be other proposals which would better recommend themselves. The idea of a central home, however, possesses this great advantage—that it would be regarded for all time by those using it as proof of the gratitude of the nation for services nobly rendered. In some room of the building might be preserved a record of those who served in the campaign, with any particulars necessary to render the institution thoroughly representative. What seems us to commend this idea is that it would be a sort of connecting link between the home Army and those Colonial forces which have fought so well in South Africa.

Major Smithson, 13th Hussars, writes to us from South Africa that he has been practising his squadron at musketry and for the first time under the following conditions, the men having had no practice since leaving England, with the exception of firing at a target on board ship coming out. The different troops were taken out and practised separately at a target 2½ ft. by 9 ft., placed lengthways against a kopje. Each of the sections fired at its own target throughout the practice; none of the men had been near the ground, and the distances were quite unknown to them. Each officer and section leader gave the estimated distances to Major Smithson, but the men were ordered to fire at the distance they estimated it to be. The light was only fair and there was a light side wind. The troops advanced at a gallop from 1,000 yards and fired two rounds at 500 yards, three rounds at 1,000 yards, three rounds at 1,500 yards, and two rounds at 2,000 yards, total 10 rounds. They loaded from the belt. The horses were taken away at each distance and the time taken was not to exceed thirteen seconds. Ricochets counted as hits. The highest possible number of hits was 180, and the best troop made 51. When it is taken into consideration that the longest range fired at home is 800 yards, and that this was the first time these long ranges had been fired at by the squadron, the result may be considered very satisfactory.

The War Office having yielded to Parliamentary pressure and the expression of opinion at the front, it is now quite settled that a new silver medal—not a bronze star—shall be issued to all ranks of all services actively employed during the operations in South Africa. There was certainly little to recommend the idea of a bronze star, though it is true that such a form of decoration was distributed in 1844 to commemorate the battle of Maharajpore, fought on December 29, 1843. Within the last twenty years three bronze stars have been added to the list of war decorations worn by the officers and men of the British Army. First came that for the Kabul-Kandahar march; secondly the Khedive's, for the operations in Egypt and the Soudan 1882-97, and thirdly that for Sir Francis Scott's march to Kumasi in 1895. The latter was given in lieu of the Ashanti war medal on the plea that there having been no fighting a war medal would not be appropriate. But in South Africa there has been fighting, and of a very trying character. "Why, then," it was asked, "give a star in place of a war medal?" But all is now made right. The medal will be attached to a ribbon with an orange centre, having narrow Navy blue stripes on either side slightly wider, and deep outside stripes of red.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Families Association has been able to present a most encouraging report, showing at once how much can be done, even in a big war, like that in which we are engaged in South Africa, if only there is an organisation to distribute charity on broad and enlightened lines. It is fifteen years since this association came into existence. In that long period Colonel Gildea has devoted his best energies to its development as chairman and honorary treasurer, and to him, as the Prince of Wales said when presiding at the last annual meeting, the whole nation owes a debt of gratitude for all the work and time he has given to the wives and families of our soldiers and sailors. The figures of the report speak for themselves. In all £550,000 has been contributed, and in the first three months of the war the Association spent £45,361 in providing relief. Since then it has been spending at the rate of £5,000 monthly, which gave an approximate amount, from January 1 to June 30, of no less than £300,000, making, with the payment of the last quarter of 1899, £341,361, and leaving an available balance of £208,638. To the end of 1899 the number of wives, dependent relatives, and children relieved by the operations of the association was 60,485. Some 11,000 ladies and gentlemen are now engaged in carrying out this excellent work. Figures such as these tell their own tale. The interest which the Princess of Wales takes in the soldiers' and sailors' widows and children was acknowledged at the recent meeting by Lord Wolseley in eloquent language. There can be no doubt as to the part which this association plays in popularising service in the Army and Navy, and it must be to all interested in the welfare of the Service a source of satisfaction to feel, as the Prince of Wales stated, that the organisation of the association has now been almost completed, and that for the future it will be entirely carried out by its own members, without the help of any other charitable society.

A kindred organisation, and one which equally well deserves the support of the charitable, is the Officers' Families Fund. This is of recent origin. It may be said to have grown out of the present war, for it only came into existence six months ago, having been formed by the exertions of Ladies Lansdowne and Wolseley to fill an admitted want. For this fund the total amount of money raised, according to the last accounts to hand, was £67,089 7s. 11d. That the executive committee has realised the extent of its responsibilities is made clear by the fact that in six months it met forty-seven times. The number of cases dealt with was 464. The report tells that seventy-three ladies are receiving weekly allowances. These are granted for a term of three months, and it has seldom, if ever, been thought necessary to reject an appeal for renewal at the end of the term. Neither has it often occurred that a fresh application has had to be refused. Here and there an applicant has been passed on to another fund, and Mr. Soulsby, the secretary of the Mansion House Fund, has, it is stated, given prompt and ready help in this matter. The families of officers of every rank have benefited by the fund. The members of the committee, too, have acted as intermediary between the school masters and mistresses whose patriotic offers were announced some time ago and those for whose benefit these offers were made, and, as a result, a large number of sons and daughters of officers are enjoying the advantage of a free or partially free education. A very satisfactory circumstance is the admittance lately of one of the committee's recommendations to Christ's Hospital free of all fees. The almoners granted this presentation in view of the distinguished services rendered by the boy's father, a chaplain to the forces who was shut up with Sir George White at Ladysmith. It will be seen therefore that Lady Lansdowne and Lady Wolseley have not been idle during the war. There is no class of the community, we venture to say, upon which the campaign has told more severely than upon the wives and families of officers of slender means. For them every sympathy must be felt, and their thanks are due to Lady Lansdowne and Lady Wolseley for all they have done to bring home to the public their claims on their gratitude.

The decision to employ Volunteer officers as subalterns of the Royal Reserve Battalions we regard as a wise one, because it is difficult to see how subaltern officers could be provided otherwise, in view of the fact that all Militia units are embodied. The experience which Volunteer officers will gain cannot but prove useful, and they may be certain that the old Line officers with whom they will be associated will be helpful to them in every way, and make their service pleasant as well as profitable in a professional sense. There will be many, no doubt, who will be only too ready to accept service under the terms offered, but it seems a pity that the idea did not suggest itself to someone in authority a little earlier, as it would have relieved commanding officers of the battalions in question of difficulties, and tended greatly to lessen the work of field officers and captains, who have had enough to do to keep matters going, and have thus been sorely tried without any prospect of reward. But the Reserve Battalion feature has at least done this; it has taught us how wanting in organising capacity we are. It was four months ago that many of these battalions were brought into existence, and it is only now it has become evident that subaltern officers are necessary.

An attempt is being made to improve the existing system of purchasing horses for the Army. The War Office has decided to offer at various provincial agricultural shows £50 each for horses likely to make military remounts. But this will only be an additional benefit conferred upon the foreigner, who will immediately purchase all the good horses exhibited for this prize at a higher price than the War Office offers. Hence there is a strong movement in progress to establish State ownership of mares and foals. It is proposed that there should be a national stud of 10,000 mares, managed by the Hunters' Improvement Society, at the expense of the Government. These mares would be mated with thoroughbred stallions, and the young horses bred would be used for mounting the ranks of the Army, and would be sent direct to the regiments. Negotiations are now proceeding on the subject between the War Office and a sub-committee of the above-named society. There is no doubt that much might be done in this way. And the War Office should go further and do all in its power to encourage stud farms. More than once proposals on this subject have been made to it, but have received no support. However, it is certain now that we cannot go on as we have been doing, trusting to chance to mount our Army in case of war.

CONVALESCENTS from South Africa who have been not less than a month at home, are, if passed medically fit, to be considered eligible to be included in drafts to return to their units.

OFFICERS of Yeomanry Cavalry or Volunteers appointed to the personal staff of a general officer commanding will, in future, wear regimental uniform, with the addition of the staff distinction, silver being substituted for gold in all cases.

INSTRUCTIONS have been given which relieve young officers joining the Royal Artillery and Army Service Corps from the necessity of providing themselves with white sword and shoulder belts until further orders are given on the subject.

RECRUITING agencies have been directed to make special efforts to induce recruits of all trades to join the Army Ordnance Corps, as, owing to the large numbers now serving abroad, it is necessary that the vacancies at home should be filled, and the men be trained for future requirements.

DISMOUNTED drafts proceeding to South Africa are in future to go out equipped with double loop web bandoliers, in place of ammunition pouches. This bandolier will hold 100 rounds of ammunition, and should be demanded at the rate of one per non-commissioned officer or man to be equipped.

It has been notified that in the case of retired officers serving in the Militia under the provisions of the Royal Warrant, they may, during the embodiment of their corps, elect that any period for which retired pay is withheld shall not count towards the period of ten years which they are compelled to serve.

THE Secretary for War has decided that sanction cannot be given for the formation in Ireland of a detachment of Volunteers, members of English or Scottish corps, temporarily living in that country; neither can it be allowed that any drills performed by such Volunteers in Ireland shall be estimated in the number of drills required for efficiency.

SANCTION has been given for the issue of extra duty pay at the rate of 3s. a day to the officer who performs the duties of assistant adjutant for musketry in all cavalry reserve squadrons and infantry details which are not attached or posted to any unit. This pay may be drawn for the actual days on which the officer is engaged in the musketry instruction of recruits.

MILITARY WORKS.

A return has been issued showing the approximate estimate of expenditure under the Barracks Act of 1890, and Military Works Acts of 1897 and 1899:—

Estimated expenditure, 1900-1901.	Estimated expenditure, 1899-1900.	Actual expenditure to March 31, 1899.	Sums provided in Schedules to respective Acts.
20,000	60,000	1,882,242	1,980,000	BARRACKS ACT, 1890.
50,000	100,000	1,565,217	1,670,000	Construction and reconstruction of camps, including married soldiers' quarters
3,500	21,000	170,896	250,000	Provision of new and enlargement of present barracks and quarters for married soldiers
3,000	5,000	191,237	200,000	Purchase of land and buildings
76,500	186,000	3,809,591	4,100,000	Contingent expenses
500,000	246,000	445,144	2,120,000	TOTAL, BARRACKS LOAN
520,000	300,000	272,887	5,758,000	MILITARY WORKS ACTS, 1897 AND 1899.
350,000	280,000	603,103	1,189,000	Defence works
50,000	40,000	49,844	890,000	Barracks, including completion of large camps
1,420,000	866,000	1,870,478	9,458,000	Ranges, including accommodation for manœuvring and mobilisation
				Staff and contingencies
				TOTAL, MILITARY WORKS LOANS

* The anticipated excess under this sub-head will be met by savings on the other sub-heads.

The expenditure during 1900-1 under the Military Works Acts of 1897 and 1899 is now estimated at £1,420,000. The increase of £335,000, as compared with the amount shown in Command Paper 82 of 1900, is mainly on Heads 1 and 3, and arises in the case of the latter head from the policy partly of assisting Volunteer Corps to obtain Rifle Ranges and partly of enlarging the accommodation for Mobilisation Stores to provide for increased reserves.

BISLEY HOMES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In the article on the Bisley Homes in the ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE of August 25, the following sentence occurs:—"Lord Pirbright, Sir Theodore Martin, and the generous subscribers to the Building Trades Patriotic Gift have been left in ignorance as to the procedure of a society of the aims of which they apparently knew nothing."

If the writer of this article had taken the trouble to enquire at the office of the S.S.H.S. he would not have written this. Lord Pirbright has been on the Executive Committee of the S.S.H.S. for nearly a whole year until he resigned a week or two ago. Mr. Sachs, the Chairman of the Building Trades' Gift, has been a member of the Executive Committee of S.S.H.S. for many months, and is still a member of it. These gentlemen have been regular in their attendances at meetings of the Executive Committee of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Help Society, as can be seen from the minute book, and have had the same access to the books of the society as the other sixteen members of the Executive Committee.

Your readers will be able to judge for themselves whether it is possible that these gentlemen could, under such circumstances, have been ignorant of the procedure and aims of the society. If Lord Pirbright's friends, Mr. Walter and Sir Theodore Martin, and the subscribers to the Building Trades' gift were ignorant of the procedure of the S.S. Help Society, it is evident that they have only Lord Pirbright and Mr. Sachs to blame for not keeping them informed.

The majority of the subscribers to the Bisley Homes were well acquainted with the Soldiers' and Sailors' Help Society, and, like myself, approved of its works, and entrusted it with their money.

A SUBSCRIBER TO THE BISLEY HOMES.

[It will interest our correspondent to know that a very large number of subscribers take quite the opposite view to himself, and are quite with Lord Pirbright, Sir Theodore Martin, and Mr. Sachs.—ED. A. & N. G.]

Army Personal.

The Queen has erected in Whippingham Church a bronze tablet, the work of Countess Gleichen, in memory of General Sir Henry Ponsonby. In the centre is an excellent portrait of the late general, and on either side is a knight in armour. Above is the Ponsonby crest and motto, "Pro rege, lege, et grege," and the motto of the Order of the Bath. Underneath the medallion are the words:—"This memorial is placed by Her Majesty Queen Victoria in grateful remembrance of General the Right Hon. Sir Henry Ponsonby, G.C.B., Keeper of the Privy Purse and Private Secretary, who died November 21, 1895." The memorial is erected in the north transept of the church.

A correspondent writes from India:—"I enclose my card, which is proof, I hope you will think, that I have no interests to serve in writing as I do. I am a senior officer on the so-called Imperial List, and do not even know General Sir Power Palmer, but I express, I know, the views of all ranks of officers when I say that a huge mistake will be made if any steps are taken to supersede this capable and popular officer in the chief command which he is exercising with such admirable tact. Possessing, as he does, the confidence of the whole army, he had an opportunity lately of giving proof that this confidence was deserved in the selections he was called upon to make for the China expedition. I hear on all sides how well every detail has been thought out. He has allowed himself to be influenced by nobody, but has placed general and staff officers and selected regiments with an evenness and justice which augurs well for the future. If I had any personal object in writing this I should not do so; but there are reports that a young and distinguished general officer now in South Africa may be sent to Simla to supersede General Palmer. I can only say that if this injustice is contemplated it will be condemned from one end of India to the other. Is this desirable?" It may interest our worthy correspondent and others to learn that the rumour to which he refers is not likely to be justified by events, for nowhere are Sir Power Palmer's qualifications for high command more freely recognised than at the War Office.

Major-General Raper left England on Thursday for Jamaica, to take over command of the troops at that station.

Sir Frederic and Lady Hodgson, accompanied by Captains Bishop and Anderson, and Drs. Knight and Montgomery, left Accra for England in the steamship Fantee on Wednesday.

"One of the Imperial Yeomanry" writes to us from South Africa:—

"I wish Mr. Swift McNeill and some of the traducers of Lord Methuen would present themselves here one day to hear what we all think of our popular general. If ever there was a soldier who was conscientiously desirous of playing the game of war thoroughly, Lord Methuen is that man. As a result he is idolised by all ranks under his command. I can answer for the Imperial Yeomanry battalion to which I belong. They would go anywhere under Lord Methuen's command because they trust him implicitly. We have all been glad to see your generous references to him, for I give you my word for it they have been deserved. Under Lord Methuen's command work must be done, but there is no bullying and worrying. He is a soldier born. A better one we none of us want ever to serve under. I trust you will not allow the public to believe the scandalous attacks which have been made upon our good general in Parliament. What, I ask, can Mr. McNeill and others know? They are not here to see, as I and my friends are. We are quite as capable of forming an opinion as they can be, and I say unhesitatingly that there is not a trooper in my battalion who would not lay down his life for Lord Methuen, so thoroughly is it recognised that he is a good soldier, though, generally speaking, quiet and unobtrusive. In this age of talk, it may be reasonable to expect that earnest, thinking men may labour under some disadvantage, but there is such a thing as justice. It is only in justice to an able and popular general that I write as I do, with the approval of all my comrades."

Lieut.-General Sir Francis Clery will not return to the War Office as Deputy-Adjutant-General on being relieved of his command in South Africa.

Who his successor will be is not quite certain, though the fact of Lieut.-General Sir Leslie Rundle having been called on to officiate when General Clery left England in October last naturally points to him as a probable successor. But, as is pointed out to us, it would be premature to make any definite statement, as the views of the incoming Commander-in-Chief would very properly be consulted, the office of Deputy-Adjutant-General being one of considerable importance.

The casualty lists issued on Wednesday evening contained the name of Brigadier-General Little, who was severely wounded in the thigh in an unrecorded action at Mafeking on August 25. The officer referred to is, of course, Lieut.-Colonel Little, 9th Lancers, who has been for some time past commanding a brigade, with the local rank of brigadier-general.

Colonel F. G. A. Wiehe, half-pay, late Durham Light Infantry, who was Chief Instructor at Hythe from July, 1894, to July, 1899, has retired voluntarily on retired pay. Had he remained on and obtained further employment, he could have served until February, 1907.

Colonel A. F. Barrow, C.M.G., D.S.O., officiating chief of the Indian Intelligence Department, has been ordered home at once, his health having broken down.

Colonel R. A. Gilchrist, I.S.C., who has been a colonel on the staff since October, 1898, will officiate in command of a 2nd Class District, Madras, vice Brigadier-General J. T. Cummins, D.S.O., I.S.C., proceeded on active service to China.

Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. N. de C. Dalrymple-Hamilton, 1st Batn. Scots Guards, is the prospective Unionist candidate for Midlothian at the next General Election.

Lieut.-Colonel G. F. R. Henderson, half-pay, late York and Lancaster Regiment, who lately returned invalided from South Africa, has been appointed an extra A.A.G. at Headquarters, his health being now completely restored.

Lieut.-Colonel R. L. A. Pennington, half-pay, late Northumberland Fusiliers, has been appointed Chief Instructor and Staff Officer at the School of Musketry, Hythe, vice Major J. D. Hopton, Highland Light Infantry.

Lieut.-Colonel A. Masters, Central India Horse, officiates as A.A.G. Presidency District, Bengal, vice Colonel G. E. Money, I.S.C., proceeded home on two years' leave.

Lieut.-Colonel W. A. Yule, half-pay, has been selected to succeed Colonel E. C. Browne in command of the 21st Regimental District, Ayr, on October 1, with the rank of Colonel. Colonel Yule is a Staff College graduate and has held several important posts, such as D.A.A.G., Madras; A.G.M.G., Secunderabad; and until recently Chief Staff Officer at Bermuda. He served as Adjutant of the 2nd Batn. Royal Scots Fusiliers, and on the staff of Sir Donald Stewart in the Afghan War 1879-80.

Major S. C. N. Grant, R.E., has resumed duty as D.A.A.G. for Intelligence at the Horse Guards on return from active service in South Africa.

Major Sir A. A. Weldon, Bart., 4th Batn. Leinster Regiment, has rejoined Lord Wolseley's staff as A.D.C. on return from active service in South Africa.

Major P. E. F. Hobbs, A.S.C., who has been a D.A.A.G. in South Africa since October last, has been promoted to A.A.G.

Major A. Wallace, I.S.C., has been appointed to the command of the 27th Punjab Infantry.

Captain D. M. Stuart, 1st Batn. Royal Scots Fusiliers, who has been acting as District Inspector of Musketry in Ireland since May last, has been offered, and has accepted, appointment in the same capacity on the staff in Scotland for three years.

Captain A. F. Evans-Lombe, 2nd Batn. Highland Light Infantry, has been appointed Inspector of Musketry, North-Western District, Chester.

Captain the Hon. A. W. de B. Foljambe, M.V.O., 4th Batn. Rifle Brigade, has been appointed Staff-Captain, Dublin District.

Captain J. R. D. Robertson, 5th Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, has been invalided home from the West Coast of Africa. This young officer did exceptionally fine service during the rising in Sierra Leone last year. He was twice wounded, and captured no less than seventeen out of the eighteen rebel chiefs who were taken prisoners. These services were rendered in the densest jungle, at the most unhealthy period of the year, viz., in the middle of the rainy season. Captain Robertson has been recommended for the Distinguished Service Order, and well has he earned this decoration.

The Secretary of State for War has promoted Mr. A. F. Major to be a Principal Clerk, and Mr. E. V. Fleming, B.A., to be an acting assistant Principal Clerk in the War Office. Mr. Major was at the Admiralty from 1878 to 1884, since when he has been at the War Office. He became a senior in 1895, and has had since 1897 the allowance of an assistant principal. Mr. Fleming, who became a Higher Division clerk at the War Office in 1893, is a graduate of Caius College, Cambridge. He secured first class honours in classics and second class honours in comparative philology with Sanskrit. He obtained the Tancred studentship at Lincoln's Inn in 1890, and the University gold medal for Latin verse in the following year. Since 1898 he has had the allowance of an acting principal. During the present South African campaign his duties have included control of the department which dealt with the preparation of casualty lists and other documents issued for publication.

THE TRAINING OF OFFICERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Lately, when visiting Germany, I was much surprised at three or four of the garrison towns which I stayed at to find the interest which officers of all ranks took in the war games, which were played constantly. I was asked to attend many of these games, and found an enthusiastic crowd of interested onlookers. How different is it at Aldershot. I live near there, and am much in touch with the officers of the garrison. I once remarked to a friend of mine, a senior officer of a cavalry regiment, that I was surprised the war game was not more encouraged. My friend replied, "You see, our people are not educated up to the German standard. I assure you it would be impossible to do here what the Germans do." This is all very wrong, it seems to me. We have been told so frequently by our present Commander-in-Chief that the officers of the Army have made such vast strides in the direction of professional study since he took them in hand that it is somewhat a shock to the old school, of which I am one, to find that the result leaves so much to be desired, according to his lordship's own showing. Perhaps if when the war is over more attention could be devoted to war games and less to social functions—the curse, as I am beginning to think, of the British Army—it would be better for everybody. But the way will have to be led by those in high places, or no great amount of headway will be made in the direction of that true military efficiency, for which all yearn.

A GENERAL OFFICER ON THE SHELVE.

[WITH COLOURED SUPPLEMENT.]

The Cape Mounted Rifles and the Volunteer corps of Cape Colony and Rhodesia have played a great part in the operations in South Africa. At the beginning they suffered under a disadvantage as compared with the forces of Natal, which were directed by a Government fully united. The attitude of the Cape Government long stood in the way of those wishful to volunteer, and many loyalists anxious to serve bitterly resented the restrictions placed upon their zeal. There was no lack of enthusiasm in any part of the colony among men of English race, but the military spirit was, perhaps, most strongly displayed in the old Crown colony of British Kaffraria, where it is recorded that every second man in the various districts was recruited for military service. The forces of Cape Colony are the well-known Mounted Rifles, which, under command of Colonel Dalgety, have been so very prominent in the operations in the Orange River Colony, and a number of Volunteer corps, including the Field Artillery, Prince Alfred's Own Cape Artillery, the Cape Garrison Artillery, the Frontier Mounted Police, the Albany Mounted Rifles, the Diamond Fields Artillery, the Kimberley Rifles, the Komgha Mounted Infantry, the Duke of Edinburgh's Own Volunteer Rifles, Prince Alfred's Volunteer Guard, the 1st City (Grahamstown) Volunteers, the Queenstown and the Kaffrarian Rifles, the Cape Town Highlanders, the Western and the Bechuanaland Rifles, with some other local corps. It is, of course, impossible to do any justice in brief space to the zeal or the services of the many corps of Cape Colony and Rhodesia. They have all displayed qualities in the field which have excited the admiration of seasoned soldiers, and have been particularly distinguished at Wepener, Kimberley, Mafeking and in some actions of Lord Roberts's advance from Bloemfontein.

The Frontier and Cape Mounted Rifles, with a body of Cape Police and the Kaffrarian Rifles, did excellent work in the operations of General Gatacre, and the Grahamstown Volunteers, Prince Alfred's Volunteer Guard from Port Elizabeth, and some other corps were soon at the front. It was out of these forces that General Brabant organised the Colonial Division, adding to it two regiments of Brabant's Horse. The admirable services rendered by that division in the advance on the right flank through the Orange River Colony make a very notable page in the history of the war, and the defence of Wepener is one of the brilliant episodes which added fame to the operations of the Cape Colony forces. This notable service was quite apart from the great achievements of the Colonial troops on the Western Frontier—the Diamond Fields Horse, the Protectorate Regiment, and other troops which existed or were raised at Kimberley and in its neighbourhood.

That lamented officer, Lieut.-Colonel Scott-Turner, displayed very conspicuous qualities in his handling of his men during the siege of Kimberley, and, while the Kimberley Light Horse were embodied through the instrumentality of Mr. Rhodes, it was Colonel Scott-Turner who took the largest part in organising the volunteer forces which were so active in the defence. It was out of the Colonial forces on the Western border that the Mafeking relief column was formed, every man being selected as an athlete, and the Kimberley Mounted Corps, which consisted of the Light Horse and some Cape Police, as well as the Imperial Light Horse, which has been brought round from Natal, did splendid service at that time. The zeal of Cape Colony did not end, as will have been seen, with the corps already in existence, and many irregular bodies of troops were formed and trained—such as Colonel Bayly's and Colonel Nesbitt's Horse, and Rimington's and De Montmorency's Scouts—the last two of which have played a very notable part, and been engaged in some brilliant and exciting episodes. Enough has been said to show that the Cape Colony forces—though they had not the encouragement which fell to the men of Natal—were in every way equal to them, and a more splendid body of volunteers than the colony placed in the field it would be difficult to conceive.

SOME LESSONS OF THE WAR.

Sir Power Palmer is proving himself quite the right man in the right place as officiating Commander-in-Chief in India, and is making his influence felt for good in all directions. He had the advantage of the confidence of his lamented predecessor, and this has enabled him to pick up the ropes of administration where Sir William Lockhart laid them down, when failing health compelled him to hand over his duties to a colleague between whom and himself the most friendly relations had existed during many years. It is fortunate for the Indian Army that an officer of Sir Power Palmer's experience and capacity was at hand to take over the control of affairs at Headquarters when General Lockhart died. It is not only as an administrator that General Palmer has added to his reputation during the last six months. He has displayed a grasp of professional details. We could have no better proof of this than the memorandum which he has lately issued on the subject of training. In this he deals categorically with lessons of the war in South Africa. No attempt is made to over-estimate the value of these lessons. On the contrary, it is explained with a wisdom that is to be commended, that it is early yet to base a hard and fast system of tactics on the experiences of any one campaign. It is nevertheless desirable, as General Palmer insists, that we should show ourselves sensible of the many points in which the Boers, farmers as they are, have been able to hold their own in the field, when pitted against disciplined troops led by officers trained in accordance with European ideas. Sir Power Palmer thus summarises the main lessons which the Army in India has to draw from the events of the last ten months of fighting in South Africa:—

- i. The great value of entrenchments, the change in their character which will be introduced, and in the accepted views as regards the position in which they will be placed.
- ii. The enormous distances up to 2,500 yards at which long-range rifle fire can be used with effect especially against masses.
- iii. The power of acting on the defensive on a broader front than heretofore recognised, owing to the containing power of the magazine rifle, and the great importance of this to the defence.
- iv. The importance of great mobility on the part of the defence, so that a comparatively small force can be rapidly moved to threatened points. This necessitates high physical training or the use of mounted troops, when available.
- v. The impossibility of successfully carrying out frontal attacks on anything like open ground unless the defenders have been drawn off or weakened by flank attacks.
- vi. The difficulty of locating the enemy's fire and consequently of replying to it, due to long ranges and smokeless powder, and the well-selected position of entrenchments.
- vii. The necessity of a longer preparatory artillery fire. This is not always recognised in peace manoeuvres; and that artillery fire is required at much longer ranges than heretofore accepted.
- viii. The great value of independent fire at all ranges as compared with volleys, and the importance of individual marksmanship.
- ix. The importance of entrenchments on the offensive in holding positions won (e.g., Spion Kop) as a base for further advance.
- x. The great difficulty of reconnoitring the enemy's position before committing troops to the attack, and consequently (given plenty of ammunition) the difficulty of estimating the strength of the defence, as magazine rifles lead to over-estimating the number of defenders.
- xi. The great containing power of small rear-guards due to magazine rifle and long-range fire.
- xii. The necessity for teaching officers and non-commissioned officers the value of cover and not to expose themselves as they now do, especially on the sky line in hill warfare.

xiii. The necessity in cavalry and artillery for learning to spare their horses as much as possible; this is especially applicable to cavalry at manoeuvres, when every man should dismount if halted for even a few minutes, and occasionally horses should be led.

xiv. That no real successes, but only temporary checks, can be obtained without counter-attacks and following up successes; this was conspicuously absent on the Boer side.

In Sir Power Palmer's opinion, the general experience gained during the war proves that, far from laying down any special system of tactics for general use, it is absolutely necessary to adapt organisation and tactics to those of the enemy. "We are very prone to run to extremes," it is said, "and copy too servilely, or change our tactics after each war, small or great, so it would be in the highest degree dangerous to deduce any special system of infantry tactics from the Boer War beyond the fact that looser formations are imperative, and light infantry and skirmishing training a sine qua non against the magazine rifle. The training which we have been lately inculcating as the best for frontier warfare is sound under all conditions—i.e., loose formations on a broad front, but demanding the highest discipline and individual intelligence, and the less there is of the latter the greater is the need for the former." Much emphasis is laid on the subject of scouting, which, it is held, is as a rule seriously neglected in the British Army. The importance of the training of infantry in scouting duties, more especially when cavalry cannot act, is too often overlooked, General Palmer thinks. Where ground fit for cavalry does not exist the scouting should be done by infantry mounted officers on active ponies, or by active foot soldiers, or both. To quote another passage: "The transmission of intelligence is often performed in a perfunctory manner, especially by infantry scouts, who do not realise that they are sent forward to assist the force in rear and often try to fight a little battle on their own account. The importance of sending back information not only of where the enemy is located, but of the positions that he has evacuated, must be more particularly impressed on scouts, who should be encouraged to be as enterprising as possible. Often, owing to want of enterprise on the part of scouts, an enemy is able to evacuate a position, and the opportunity is lost of inflicting severe loss on him while he retreats."

These are words of wisdom from one whose wide experience and high reputation entitle him to sum up the situation with the authority of rank and position in the Army, and they ought not to be disregarded. There may be details upon which opinion may differ from the views expressed by the Indian Commander-in-Chief, but, after reading his memorandum carefully, we are bound to say that it furnishes little ground for controversy. The principles enunciated by General Palmer for the careful consideration of those under his orders have been conceived in a broad and soldier-like sense, and are calculated to produce much benefit in the case of the Army in India, if they are accepted, as we may be certain they will be, in a proper spirit.

REGIMENTS ON SERVICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Every week steamers arrive from South Africa bringing home numbers of wounded and invalided officers, and yet convalescents are not despatched to fill in their places. At the present rate in some regiments, especially in the cavalry, there will be hardly any officers left for duty. For this state of affairs who is responsible? How can any regiment be kept in an efficient state when nearly all its officers are absent either on sick leave, or what is worse, staff employ?

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, Aug. 25.

Lord Roberts, in a telegram received during the night from Wonderfontein, said:—"Gen. Pole-Carew reports having occupied Belfast to-day. The enemy are holding the ridges between Belfast and Dalmanutha. Gen. Buller's column is at Leeuw-kloof, about six miles south-west of Dalmanutha. Gen. French, with four brigades of cavalry, is moving to the east of Machadodorp. Lord Methuen reports his arrival at Zeerust, he being in communication with Gen. Carrington."

Telegraphing later, Lord Roberts said that Gen. Buller reported having met with considerable opposition from the enemy on Thursday. They tried early in the day to entrap the cavalry, and opened on them at fairly short range with a long-range 15pr. and "pom-pom." These guns were, however, silenced by a section of the 21st Battery, and the trap failed. The firing had ceased, and pickets were being set for the night, when by some mistake the firing line of two companies of the Liverpool Regiment advanced about 1,500 yards into a hollow, out of sight of the main body, where they were surrounded by the Boers and suffered severely, losing 10 men killed, an officer (Capt. Plomer) and 45 men wounded, and 32 "missing." The other casualties of the day were about six killed and 11 wounded.

Lord Roberts arrived at Belfast to-day, and met Gens. Buller, Pole-Carew, and French.

A Krugersdorp telegram received to-day said that Gen. Delarey and a large Boer force appeared in front of Banks Station, on the Johannesburg-Potchefstroom line on Thursday, and summoned the garrison, which consisted of C.I.V.'s under Lord Albemarle, to surrender. Lord Albemarle refused, and Delarey afterwards crossed the railway near Banks, moving towards the Orange River Colony.

The sentence of death passed by the court-martial on Lieut. Cordua was carried out yesterday within the precincts of the prison at Pretoria.

Sunday, Aug. 26.

During a reconnaissance to Brandwater Basin to-day, by direction of Sir Leslie Rundle, Capt. Clarke, Wiltshire Yeomanry, was killed, and Lieut. Barclay, of the same regiment, seriously wounded in the arm and shoulder. Capt. Harrison, of the Yeomanry, who commanded the party, states that one Boer was killed, 17 were made prisoners, and 700 head of cattle were captured.

Gen. Baden-Powell reported that he pushed on north of Warm Baths, and occupied Nylstroom without opposition. The country in which he and Gen. Paget had been operating was dense bush veldt, and, as it was not thought desirable to proceed further north, their troops were returning towards Pretoria.

Monday, Aug. 27.

Four despatches received at the War Office from Lord Roberts were issued during the day. In the first, dated from Belfast after noon yesterday, Lord Roberts announced that the enemy attacked Winburg during that morning on three sides. They were beaten back with considerable loss by Major-Gen. Bruce Hamilton, who succeeded in capturing Gen. Olivier and his three sons. Lord Roberts did not exaggerate in describing this as a "very important capture," as Olivier has been the moving spirit amongst the Boers in the south-east portion of the Orange River Colony throughout the war.

In his further despatches Lord Roberts devoted himself to explaining what had happened as regards the series of operations against Gen. Botha which were being conducted under his personal direction in the neighbourhood of Belfast. These operations commenced yesterday and were in progress all day. The theatre of war for the time being extended over a perimeter of nearly 30 miles. Sir Redvers Buller, with Lyttelton's Division and two brigades of cavalry, operated south-west of Dalmanutha. Gen. French, with two brigades of cavalry, moved north by the west of Belfast, driving the enemy to Laken-vley on the Belfast-Lydenburg road, and was then supported by Gen. Pole-Carew, with the Guards' Brigade. The enemy had evidently been considerably strengthened on the north and east, and stubbornly opposed both Buller's and Pole-Carew's advance. They brought into action three long-range guns, many other cannon, and "Pom-poms," and the firing until dark was hot and persistent. The country was said to be difficult and well suited to Boer tactics and less favourable to cavalry movements than any previously worked over.

One despatch gave particulars of another success by Sir A. Hunter. To quote Lord Roberts's words:—

"On Friday afternoon I received a report from Winburg that Lieut.-Col. Ridley, of the Imperial Yeomanry, 250 mounted men and 25 infantry, had been attacked while out reconnoitring by a very much larger body of the enemy, and it was feared he would be overpowered. I ordered Hunter to proceed at once from Heilbron to Kroontad and to despatch as many of Bruce Hamilton's Brigade as could be sent by railway, the mounted portion of the brigade to move by forced march to Ventersburg, and to co-operate with the Winburg troops. These moves were carried out most expeditiously, and I have just had the satisfaction of hearing that Ridley's small force was relieved early this morning by Bruce Hamilton. Ridley seems to have taken up a position in a farm, and to have defended it very skilfully. He was opposed by about 1,000 Boers with two guns, and had some 30 casualties. A small movable column, under Lieut.-Col. White, R.A., was despatched by Gen. Kelly-Kenny in the hope of drawing off the enemy's attention from Ridley's party. His casualties were:—Yeomanry: Lieut. B. H. Jones, wounded in arm, slightly; Farrier-Sergeant 4128 R. P. Williams killed, and five men missing. Rundle reports that 169 Boers have surrendered at Harrismith, and that the mounted troops of Boyes' Brigade have reached Vrede."

Lord Roberts, in a telegram despatched from Belfast at 7.20 p.m., announced that Sir Redvers Buller had captured Bergendal, a very strong position, about two miles north-west of Dalmanutha railway station. In his first sentence his lordship explained that his movements were necessarily slow, on account of the great extent and difficult nature of the country over which his troops were operating, but that satisfactory progress had been made, thanks to Sir Redvers Buller's good generalship. The work to-day fell entirely on Gen. Buller's troops. Lord Roberts thus described the incidents:—

"I met Buller at Bergendal shortly after it was reached by our troops, and was glad to find that its occupation had cost us less than I feared might be the case, on account of the approach to the position being across an open glacis for two or three thousand yards, and the determined stand made by the enemy. The 1st Batn. Inniskilling Fusiliers and the 2nd Batn. Rifle Brigade formed the attacking party. The latter regiment suffered most. Buller could not give me the number of casualties. I hope they do not exceed 50 or 60. Capt. G. L. Lysley is killed, and Lieut.-Col. Metcalfe and Capt. W. O. W. Stewart wounded, the latter very seriously. A good many Boers were killed, some, who were on a rocky knoll, by Lyddite shells. A pom-pom was captured. It was a fine performance. Gen. Buller managed his troops very skilfully, and the combination of artillery and infantry fire was most effective. On the left of our position French advanced to Swartz Kopjes on the Lydenburg road, and prepared the way for the movement of Pole-Carew's Division to-morrow."

Wednesday, Aug. 29.

A telegram was issued from the War Office during the morning giving Lord Roberts's account of the position of affairs up to last evening. Sir Redvers Buller's advance troops occupied Machadodorp yesterday afternoon. The enemy made a very poor stand, and retired in a northerly direction, followed by Lord Dundonald's mounted troops. These, however, could not proceed beyond Helvetia, owing to the difficult nature of the country. Gen. French yesterday turned the Boers out of Elandsfontein. The enemy retired very rapidly, leaving their cooked food behind them. Sir Redvers Buller, reporting to Lord Roberts on the capture of the kopjes at Bergendal Farm, states that the place is a natural fortress surrounded by a glacis of about 1,500 yards, absolutely without cover. It was taken with great dash by the 1st Batn. Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers and 2nd Batn. Rifle Brigade, and a "pom-pom" and mules complete secured. The capture of the kopjes enabled the British to occupy the whole ridge, from both sides of which the enemy appeared to have retreated. The casualties were chiefly among the Rifle Brigade. Capt. Lysley and 13 men were killed, seven officers and 57 non-commissioned officers and men wounded. Among the wounded officers were Lieut.-Col. Metcalfe, right arm, severe; Capt. Alexander, right fore-arm, slight; Capt. Heriot-Maitland, right shoulder, severe; Capt. Campbell, shoulder, severe; Capt. Steward, abdomen, dangerous; Lieut. Turner, hand, slight, returned to duty; 2nd Lieut. Bassett, right arm, severe. Lord Roberts said:—"I much regret to have to report that Col. Metcalfe, who led his regiment most gallantly, and whose dispositions were excellent, was severely wounded." All the wounded who could be moved were being taken into Belfast by train, and will be sent on to Pretoria. The bad cases remain at Bergendal for the present.

The Boers had determined to make a desperate resistance, but about noon a rumour was spread that the whole of the Johannesburg Police, by whom the kopje was chiefly defended, were killed, and the force broke up.

Thursday, Aug. 30.

No official telegrams were issued.

Friday, Aug. 31.

The following telegrams from Lord Roberts were issued from the War Office during the day:—

"Belfast, Aug. 29, 9.45 p.m."

"Buller telegraphs from Helvetia, four miles north of Machadodorp, that only a few of the enemy were left there this morning. French's and Pole-Carew's move from the Belfast-Lydenburg road on their flank, added to the advance of Dundonald's mounted men in their front, caused them to abandon what is a very strong position. The country being thus cleared, our troops moved eastward. The South African Light Horse after some little opposition entered Waterval Bowen and drove a scattered remnant of the enemy through the town. French's cavalry reached Doornhoek, overlooking Waterval Onder. Meeting with slight opposition. Dundonald, with Strathcona's Horse, is still further east, not far from Nootgedacht. The progress of the troops was much retarded by wet mist and difficult country."

"Belfast, Aug. 30, 6.10 p.m."

"We have occupied Waterval Boven and Waterval Onder, and Buller with some mounted troops is overlooking Nootgedacht. He telegraphs that the place is apparently deserted except by British prisoners who are passing in a continuous stream westward, up the line towards Waterval Onder. No Boers are visible, and the natives report that Kruger and all the commandoes left yesterday for Pilgrim's Rest. French reports that the railway is intact as far as Waterval Onder, except a small bridge close to the station which has been destroyed. He found one of our prisoners and a few wounded Boers in hospital. I regret to state that Capt. Steward and Campbell, 2nd Batn. Rifle Brigade, have died of their wounds."

Total casualties since the beginning of the war up to the end of last week:—

	Officers.	N.C.O. & Men
Killed	281	2,599
Died of wounds ...	79	732
Missing and prisoners (excluding those who have been recovered or died in captivity)	55	2,778
Prisoners died in captivity	1	85
Died of disease ...	148	5,215
Accidental deaths ...	1	90
Sent home as invalids ...	1,188	27,309*
	1,753	38,808

Total Losses (exclusive of sick and wounded men now in British Hospitals in South Africa) ... 40,561

* Of these 163 have died, 659 have been discharged from the service as unfit, and 990 are in hospital.

THE ASHANTI RISING.

Col. Willcocks telegraphed to the War Office from Bekwai on Saturday last stating that two flying columns under Lieut.-Cols. Wilkinson and Henstock, after ten days' very successful work, returned to Bekwai on the evening of the 24th ult., having cleared the whole of the country in an easterly direction as far as Lake Busumakwe. Flying column under command of Lieut.-Col. Brake, R.A., Central African Regiment, left on the 24th in order to capture large town Dewtechie, six miles from Kokofu in a northerly direction. The enemy's forces, commanded by rebel chief Opoku, completely defeated by bayonet charge. Major Stansfeld, 1st Batn. West India Regiment, Capt. Gordon, 1st Batn. Gordon Highlanders, Central African Regiment, are brought specially to notice. The two punitive columns, according to Reuter's Correspondent, report enthusiastically upon the scenery and surroundings of Lake Busumakwe. The country is said to be rich in fruit and live stock, and all ranks returned not only delighted with the expedition, but laden with loot. The Akim levies, under Major Cramer, now occupy the lake district and are living upon the country. Col. Burroughs has been appointed President of a Military Commission for the trial of rebels.

MILITIA DESERTION.—In consequence of there being misapprehension on the part of some Militia commanding officers as to the penalty in the matter of forfeiture of service which Militiamen incur in connection with the offence of desertion while subject to the Army Act, and in order to prevent the possibility of action which is not legal being taken in such cases, the War Office has notified that Militiamen dealt with for desertion do not come within the provisions of Section 79 of the Army Act, and that the only forfeiture of service to which they are liable, even though embodied, is that prescribed by Section 27 of the Militia Act of 1882. The attention of officers concerned is directed to Section 78 of the Army Act, under which the conditions of service of men belonging to the Auxiliary Forces are not affected by the fact of their being subject to military law.

THE WAR OFFICE AND THE ARMY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It is now generally admitted that there is something absolutely wrong in our system of land defence, if a system it can be called. This has been brought home to us by the rather painful experiences of the war in South Africa. But is the awakening really a surprise? It may be to the general public, but it is not to the officers of the Army, who have been saying for years, as you know well, that the system was faulty and would produce the most indifferent results if put to the test of a big war. I have heard it asserted a thousand times in Service clubs that our War Office was working on false lines. Yet, whenever it has been hinted in the Press that such was the case the charge has been indignantly resented, and by no one more stoutly than by the present Commander-in-Chief. We have not to go far back to obtain proof of the truth of my statement, for on the occasion when Lord Wolseley spoke at the Authors' Club, at the outset of the present campaign, he went out of his way to condemn the critics and extol the system introduced by Lord Cardwell; and Sir Ralph Knox, the Permanent Under-Secretary for War, also delivered himself in much the same strain. Within the City boundaries I have heard it said frequently by military friends in office that those who foresaw the breakdown of War Office theories were unworthy of a hearing. It seems to me, however, that they have been right and their traducers wrong. If they had been listened to earlier many of the shortcomings which have been rendered so apparent would have been remedied long ago.

I happen to belong to two Service clubs, and I find that among my friends there a strong feeling exists of sympathy for the War Office at the present moment. If the advocates of Cardwellism have been sincere, as presumably they have been, then many of the shortcomings of our military system are explained. In theory, Cardwellism was, undoubtedly, absolutely sound; but it has been made such a fetish of by many highly placed in authority that the difficulties of any War Minister who desired to modify it for the general good of the Army became enormous. Lord Lansdowne, it is recognised by all soldiers who have studied the matter of Army organisation—I hope I may be permitted to say intelligently—has been the one minister who has really shown a disposition to move in the direction of beneficial reform, and he has managed to remedy many of the worst features of Cardwellism, and thereby pave the way for other changes which are urgently needed. It is only those who have been well behind the scenes who can appreciate what the securing of even these small concessions has meant, having regard to the difficulties placed in his way. It is right that the facts should be made known, for they explain much that is at present a mystery to the public. Yet they are no secret in places where soldiers of standing and experience are to be found, for I hear them spoken of daily, not only in London clubs, but in country houses where I am in the habit of visiting.

For thirty years, for some reason, the British Army has been called upon to worship at the shrine of one War Minister who, in the opinion of a small body of officers, was its regenerator. Every Secretary of State for War who has held office since has had to accept the principles which Lord Cardwell enunciated en bloc. And at the end of thirty years do we find our Army so much better? It is the same fighting Army that it always has been, but I defy anybody to say that it is what it ought to be considering the vast sums that have been spent upon it. The reason for most of the defects rendered so apparent of late is that childish adherence to all systems established by Lord Cardwell. The first, as I am, to recognise the great service which that capable Minister rendered to the Army, he, able man as he was, would, I feel sure, have been the last to have desired that progress should be retarded for thirty years in respect for his memory, which really has been the case. I am old enough to have served at Headquarters in an important position at the time that Lord Cardwell held office, and I am, therefore, in some measure qualified to speak of him from personal knowledge. He was a very enlightened minister and an administrator of the highest order, but I can assert positively that he never pretended that the system which with the help of others he brought in was an ideal system; indeed, he told me more than once that he regarded it simply as a makeshift. To the unfortunate view taken by many prominent officers in the Army, quite as much as to the maladministration in the War Office itself, the present outcry of the press for a more up-to-date Army is to be attributed, and it is but fair to the British Empire that this should be acknowledged by civilian politicians, as I can answer for it it is by those soldiers of independence who have watched the progress of events since 1870.

In the name of Lord Cardwell, every reform calculated to benefit the Army has been resisted by a few who were his lordship's friends and colleagues. There is not a soldier of any standing in the Army who does not know this to be the case. It has been the subject of conversation in all Service clubs and in all garrisons for years past, and not a few have pointed out the serious consequences which would follow upon such proceedings. But those who have done so have had to bear the penalty. And now, when the bubble has fairly burst, we are told that it is all the fault of Lord Lansdowne, the War Office, the Government, and the Treasury. I ask—Is this fair to the British taxpayer? Is it likely to advance the best interests of our Army if the taxpayer is led to believe that the War Office and its political head are wholly and solely responsible? It is because I think not, and find so many others who are qualified to express an opinion endorsing my view, that I ask you, Sir, to allow me space in which to put matters forward in their true light, at a moment when much mischief may be done by misrepresentation. The War Office has sins enough to answer for without its being saddled with a burden, which it cannot fairly be asked to bear. I would not write as I do were it not that I find in a large section of the press a disposition—due no doubt to ignorance—to overlook one all-important factor in the discussion. What the public should do now is to call for a general stocktaking. The season of war in South Africa will soon be over, and the wisest course would be to take Cardwellism, modified and improved as it has been by Lord Lansdowne, and say, "How has it answered, where has it failed?" I give you my word for it that every soldier almost to whom I speak is agreed as to the wisdom of Lord Lansdowne's modifications. What they say is that they have not gone quite far enough. As to the direction which further reform should take I leave for others better qualified than myself to decide, but do not let us close our eyes to the fact of the incalculable mischief which the fetish of Cardwellism has produced, good, well conceived, and practical as the reforms of that revered War Minister were at the time they were introduced in 1870-71—30 years ago be it remembered.

ARMY AND NAVY CLUB, AUG. 27.

THE HOSPITALS INQUIRY.

At a sitting of the Royal Commission on the hospital arrangements at Cape Town on Monday Col. M'Namara, R.A.M.C., was examined. He stated that there were not sufficient trained Army medical men available at the beginning of the war, when it was only intended to put one Army Corps into the field. When Lord Wolseley notified the despatch of a second Army Corps the Royal Army Medical Corps contended that they were unable to make the necessary medical provision. As a matter of fact, they had had to provide for five corps. Col. M'Namara maintained, however, that the arrangements were better than in previous campaigns. Owing to the insufficiency of R.A.M.C. men discipline suffered, and with a more adequately trained staff he was convinced that a greater proportion of the men might have been kept in the fighting line. The wounded in many instances were deprived of their money before reaching hospital. He admitted that patients travelling in ordinary trains suffered a good deal of hardship, while at the base, owing to the pressure, convalescents had occasionally to sleep on mattresses placed on the floor.

Col. Herbert reiterated the complaints against the management of the Wynberg Hospital.

Sir John Furley, Chief Commissioner of the Red Cross Society, said that in no war had so much been done or so well done for the sick and wounded as in the present one.

The Hospitals Commission concluded its sittings in Cape Town on Tuesday.

Dr. Bowlby stated that many sick officers and men failed to report themselves until absolutely compelled to do so, and those wounded in the field included officers and men who were already suffering from enteric fever. In this way infection was spread. Generally speaking, the troops had suffered owing to the hardships they had had to endure, and comparatively few escaped touches of fever.

He declared that the epidemic which broke out subsequent to the Paardeberg affair could not possibly have been anticipated. He controverted Mr. Burdett-Coutts's statement regarding the insufficiency of milk.

The Commissioners proceeded up country on Tuesday.

OWING to the paucity of subaltern officers in the Royal Reserve Regiments a large number of 2nd lieuts. recently commissioned are being attached for duty.

A NEEDED REFORM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE"

SIR,—I have read the remarks of your correspondent in your issue of the 18th inst. with interest and satisfaction. Endorsing, as I do, every word he says, I feel certain that his suggestion offers a practical solution of present difficulties. The part that strikes me as being most commendable in your correspondent's proposal is that he lays it down as a main feature that the report of the Commander-in-Chief should only be made public on a vote of the House of Commons. This is at once a guarantee that the Commander-in-Chief of the Army would be relieved from the pressure of political influence. The suggestion of Lord Rosebery is one which must cause all soldiers to shudder. I can imagine nothing more calculated to injure both the character and the efficiency of the Army than a Commander-in-Chief placed in the position which Lord Rosebery favours. It would simply mean this, that the military head of the Army would become a tool in the hands of political wire pullers. It would be his duty to give support to the Government in power. Failing to do that, he would be an instrument, more or less at the use of the Opposition. The whole aspect of affairs would thus be changed in a political sense, and soon we should find that the Commander-in-Chief of the Army would be constituted a buffer between two parties. Such a condition of affairs would produce endless difficulty and would be ruinous in its effects. I agree with your correspondent that it would be madness to create between parties such an element of discord. I have looked at the matter from all points of view, and I cannot see one argument which can be adduced in favour of the idea which Lord Rosebery has ventilated so eloquently in the House of Lords. The report which your correspondent proposes would be a protection to everybody. It would in no way compromise the Commander-in-Chief, whilst it would, at the same time, keep him perfectly free from political influences. It would be a guarantee that he was watchful of the interests of the Empire; it would constitute a very necessary check on the Treasury; it would establish a proper system of Parliamentary control over the War Office; it would satisfy the public that the military head of the Army was discharging his duties in the best interests of the Empire; it would be a basis on which the Minister for War could proceed in forming his annual estimates; it would create a proper feeling in the War Office that business was being conducted on business lines; and, above all, it would act as an invaluable record which would fix responsibility. The report would show from time to time where the fault rested when the nation, having become involved in a campaign, found that administration, armament, equipment, and system, one or all, had failed to produce the results looked for. We have had many letters in the Times and other papers of influence during the last few years all condemning the War Office and its methods, but none indicating a policy of what I may call betterment. Your correspondent, I believe, has been the first to suggest any practical means by which responsibility could be fixed, so far at least as the Commander-in-Chief and the Minister for War are concerned. With such a report in the archives of the War Office, Treasury officials would think twice before they tampered unduly with estimates, and the Minister for War would feel that his hands were strengthened by expert opinion. At present the administration of our land defences is left in the most unsatisfactory state. Perhaps some influential member of the Lords or Commons will take the lead in bringing about reform on the basis that your correspondent suggests. By doing so more good would be accomplished than by attacks on the War Office, which, it seems to me, is placed, under existing conditions, in an impossible position, and is prevented from satisfying anybody by a system, which possesses only one merit—that of having no merit at all, as the Irish member once said in the House of Commons.

ADMINISTRATOR.

St. Moritz, Aug. 24.

It is notified from the War Office that Reservists of Sections A, B, and C of the 1st Class Army Reserve, on rejoining the colours on mobilisation, being soldiers of the Regular forces, are eligible for extension of Army service under the usual conditions, as laid down in Paragraphs 1742-1746 of the Queen's Regulations.

Obituary.

NAVAL.

Paymaster-in-Chief Charles Henry Ceely died at Montreal, Canada, on the 24th ult., aged 63 years. He joined as Assistant Clerk, 1854; became Assistant Paymaster 1859; Paymaster, 1868; Fleet Paymaster, 1886; and retired as Paymaster-in-Chief, 1893. Served during the Crimean Expedition, 1854-55, in the Highflyer and Princess Royal (medal and Sebastopol clasp), and in the Imperieuse during the China War, 1860-61 (medal); was Paymaster of the Cadmus, 1870-74; Implacable, 1876-79; Orontes, 1879-82. He subsequently served for short periods at home and in stationary ships abroad, as his health was too much impaired to admit of sea service, and was eventually obliged to retire.

ARMY.

Gen. Sir John Miller Adye, G.C.B., Colonel-Commandant Royal Artillery, died on Sunday last at Cragside, Rothbury, Northumberland, where he was on a visit to Lord Armstrong. Sir John Adye was born in 1819, the son and grandson of soldiers; he was educated at Woolwich and was gazetted to the Royal Artillery Dec. 13, 1836, becoming Captain July 29, 1846. When the Crimean War broke out he was selected to serve as Brigade-Major to the artillery under Gen. Cator, afterwards becoming A.A.G. for R.A. He was present at the affairs of Bulganac and Mackenzie's Farm, at the battles of Alma, Balaclava, and Inkerman, and at the siege and capture of Sebastopol (medal with four clasps, C.B., brevets of Major and Lieut.-Colonel, Commander of the Legion of Honour, 4th Class of the Medjidie and Turkish medal). He served in the Indian Mutiny campaign—also as A.A.G. for R.A.—and was present at the action of Pandoo Nudée, Nov. 26, in the operations before Cawnpore under Gen. Windham, Nov. 27-29; at the battle of Cawnpore and defeat of the Gwalior contingent Dec. 6 (three times mentioned in despatches and medal). Remaining in India after the war was over he became a substantive Lieut.-Colonel Aug. 19, 1857, and a Brevet-Colonel May 19, 1860. In the latter rank he was able to see service in 1863, when he was specially employed in the North-West Frontier Expedition, 1863, and was at the storming of Laloo, the capture of Umbeyla (medal with clasp). On March 3, 1866, he took up the duties of D.A.G. for R.A. in India, which position he retained until March, 1866, when he returned to England. On April 1, 1870, he was selected, on the reorganisation of the War Office, to fill the office of Director of Artillery and Stores. Mr. Cardwell was at that time developing his scheme for the reorganisation of the Army, and the introduction of the system of short service. Sir John Adye gave him ready support. In 1872 he was chosen to accompany Gen. Gordon to the Crimea to report on the condition of the British graveyards, and in the following year obtained his K.C.B. Becoming a Major-General Nov. 17, 1875 (with antedate to June 28, 1868), he was appointed Governor of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, Aug. 1, 1875; became Lieut.-General June 27, 1879; and rejoined the War Office Staff on June 1, 1880, as Surveyor General of the Ordnance. On the despatch of the expedition to Egypt, under Sir Garnet Wolseley, in 1882, Lieut.-Gen. Adye was offered the position of Chief of the Staff with the rank of General, and in that capacity was present at the engagements of Tel-el-Mahuta, Kassassin (Sept. 9), and in the battle of Tel-el-Kebir (twice mentioned in despatches, received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, G.C.B., medal with clasp, Grand Cross of the Medjidie and Khedive's Star). On his return to England, Sir John resumed duty at the War Office in October to finish up the "business" of the war, but in January, 1883, went to Gibraltar to succeed the late Field-Marshal Lord Napier of Magdala as Governor. There he remained until Nov. 1, 1886, when having reached the limit of age for retirement, he had to accept pension, much to his disappointment. He had been appointed a Colonel-Commandant R.A., Nov. 8, 1880, and a General, April 1, 1884. He made several attempts to enter Parliament in the Liberal interest, and at the General Election of 1892 stood for Bath, but was non-successful. Curiously enough, though Sir John was a Radical in politics, he was more than Conservative in professional matters, for he was the last to admit the superiority of breech-loading guns, and bitterly opposed the re-organisation of the Royal Artillery, which has resulted in separation of the mounted and dismounted branches.

He was a frequent contributor to the Nineteenth Century on his pet subject of Army Reform, being a strong advocate of Cardwellism. He also held fixed views, which he often ventilated in the columns of the Times and elsewhere, on the North-West Frontier of India. His work "Recollections of a Military Life," was most favourably received when it appeared a few years ago. Sir John Adye married in 1856 a daughter of the late Vice-Admiral the Hon. Sir Montagu Stopford. His son, Lieut.-Col. Adye, R.A., is now on the Staff in South Africa, where he has more than once distinguished himself in command of a column in Cape Colony.

Lieut.-Gen. William Rickman, Colonel, Royal Munster Fusiliers, died at Barkham Manor, Wokingham, on the 22nd ult., aged 73. Gen. Rickman entered the Service Sept. 12, 1848, as Ensign in the 77th Regiment, becoming Lieut. Oct. 31, 1851, and Captain March 24, 1854. He served in the Crimean campaign, being present at the siege and taking of Sebastopol, and the sortie of March 22. He was twice mentioned in despatches, and was recommended for a Victoria Cross by his colonel and the general of the Light Division, but the committee which sat in London after the war disallowed his claims with many others. Kinglake says of him in his "History of the Invasion of the Crimea":—"With his men of the 77th detachment, supported by that of the 88th, Capt. Rickman, after a well-sustained fight, and losing several men, defeated the venturesome column Zavalachine had led, and drove it back down the ravine" (medal and clasp, brevet of Major, Knight of the Legion of Honour, and 5th class of the Medjidieh and Turkish medal.) He was a justice of the peace of the county of Berks. He married, in 1857, Mary Pulsford, only daughter of Sir William Hayter, and leaves two sons, who are both fighting in South Africa, in the Royal Welsh and Northumberland Fusiliers respectively, and four daughters, two of whose husbands are also serving in South Africa. He became Brevet-Major April 21, 1855; Major Feb. 1, 1856; Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel Feb. 12, 1863; Lieut.-Colonel May 17, 1864; Colonel June 23, 1870; Major-General May 19, 1880; Lieut.-General April 1, 1885; and Colonel, Royal Munster Fusiliers, March 26, 1899.

Lieut.-Col. Arthur Gregory Serocold Wade-Gregory, retired list, Royal Artillery, died at Durban, South Africa, on the 25th ult. Born May 6, 1849, son of the late Rev. W. Serocold Wade, vicar of Redbourne, Herts, he joined the Army July 23, 1870; became Captain Oct. 27, 1880; Major July 7, 1886; Lieut.-Colonel Feb. 24, 1897; and retired last year.

Capt. William Blakeney Norwood, Adjutant, Royal Horse Artillery, died on the 28th ult., from the effect of sunstroke received on active service in South Africa. Born July 9, 1865, he joined the Royal Artillery April 29, 1885; became Captain May 15, 1895; and Divisional Adjutant Nov. 27, 1899.

Capt. Charles Richard Stephens, R.E., died at his brother's house at Bhagalpore, Bengal, on the 14th ult., of enteric fever. Born Oct. 31, 1865, the eldest son of Sir Charles C. Stevens, K.C.S.I., he joined the Army Dec. 9, 1884, and became Captain July 10, 1893.

Capt. Reginald Eric Duncan Campbell, late of the Royal Irish Fusiliers, died at Asaba suddenly from apoplexy on July 21. Born Nov. 28, 1857, the youngest son of Sir Alexander Campbell, second Baronet, of Barcaldine, he was heir presumptive to his brother, the present Sir Duncan Campbell, of Barcaldine, Secretary of the Order of the Thistle. He was gazetted to a Sub-Lieutenancy in the Forfar and Kincardine Artillery Militia in 1877, and appointed 2nd Lieut. in the 89th Regiment in 1879. He retired from the Army as Captain on a gratuity in 1892. He entered the Colonial Service in that year, and was appointed Assistant-Inspector of the Lagos Constabulary. He served with the Lagos Expeditionary Force against the Jebus, under Sir Francis Scott, and commanded the rearguard in the engagement at Maghon (medal and clasp). He was promoted in April of this year to the post of Governor of her Majesty's prison at Asaba, Southern Nigeria.

Capt. William Henry Wemyss Steward, 4th Batn. Rifle Brigade, attached to the 2nd Batn., has died of wounds received in action during Sir Redvers Buller's operations at Bergendal on Monday. Born June 18, 1871; he joined the Rifle Brigade as 2nd Lieut. March 4, 1891; became Lieut. Nov. 23, 1892; and Captain Nov. 6, 1897.

Capt. Gerard Lowther Lysley, 2nd Batn. Rifle Brigade, was killed in action in the storming of the Boer position at Bergendal on Monday. Born Aug. 26, 1872, he joined the Rifle Brigade as 2nd Lieut. Oct. 5, 1892; became Lieut. May 11, 1895; and Captain Jan 19, 1900.

Capt. Ernest George Campbell, 4th Batn. Rifle Brigade, attached to the 2nd Batn., has died of wounds received in action in Sir Redvers Buller's action at Bergendal on Monday. Born June 28, 1873, he joined the Rifle Brigade as 2nd Lieut. Dec. 7, 1892; became Lieut. July 7, 1895; and Captain March 17 last.

Lieut. Albert Savory, 4th Hussars, doing duty with the South African Light Horse, was killed in action at Geluk on the 23rd ult., whilst serving with Sir Redvers Buller's column. Born July 7, 1870, the eldest son of Mr. A. Savory, Sun Rising, Banbury, he joined the 4th Hussars as 2nd Lieut. Oct. 12, 1892; and became Lieut. March 10, 1894.

Lieut. Douglas Morison Oliver, 1st Batn. Norfolk Regiment, whose death is reported in Lord Roberts's despatch from Belfast on the 28th ult., was born Sept. 11, 1874, and joined the Norfolk Regiment as 2nd Lieut. April 3, 1895; becoming Lieut. Sept. 15, 1897. He was attached until recently to the depot at Norwich, but went on service with the view of joining the 2nd Batn.

The Army.

CAVALRY.

1st Life Guards.—Major the Hon. C. E. Bingham who has been A.D.C. to Lieut.-Gen. French in South Africa, has taken up duty as a D.A.A.G. with the field force. The Hon. H. E. Butler, of Nidd Hall, Ripley, Yorkshire, and Eaglehall, Pateley Bridge, who served for a short time as subaltern, has succeeded to the peerage as fourteenth Viscount Mountgarret, by the death of his father on Sunday last.

1st (King's) Dragoon Guards.—Capt. Quicke, having returned to England from leave after two years' absence with the Cape to Cairo expedition, reverts to duty with his regiment. Capt. Quicke has lately been on active service at the Cape. Capt. Wickham has been invalided from the Cape, and sailed in the Assaye on the 22nd ult.

4th Dragoon Guards.—Lieut. Jerrard has been selected for duty with the West African Regiment.

5th Dragoon Guards.—Major Edwards has been doing duty for some time past as an A.A.G. in South Africa with the rank of Lieut.-Col.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers).—Major Butler is employed as a Brigade-Major in South Africa.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys).—Lieut. Swetenham, invalided from the Cape, sailed in the Assaye on the 22nd ult.

9th Lancers.—Capt. the Hon. C. H. Willoughby, invalided, sailed from Cape Town on the 22nd ult. in the Assaye.

16th Lancers.—Lieut. Adams, invalided from the Cape, sailed in the Assaye on the 22nd ult.

17th Lancers.—Major Portal, invalided from the Cape, sailed in the Assaye on the 22nd ult. Capt. Tilney, though the "Army List" does not record the fact, has been acting as A.D.C. to Lord Methuen in South Africa since the end of March last.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Lieut.-Col. J. W. Stirling, on promotion from D Battery, R.H.A., has been appointed to the command of the 24th Brigade Division, R.F.A., at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Capt. G. E. Tyrrell, R.F.A., is officiating A.D.C. to Lord Curzon of Kedleston, in India.

Capt. G. A. Fitzgerald, R.F.A., is on passage home from the Cape in the Assaye, invalided.

Lieut. T. R. Griffiths, district officer, has been selected for the adjutancy of the 1st Argyll and Bute Artillery.

The appointment of Commandant of the Albany Garrison, Western Australia, is vacant. The post, which is open to lieutenants of R.A., is for three years. Candidates must have at least four years' service, and, if possible, be in possession of the long course of gunnery and signalling certificates. The pay is £350 per annum, with fuel, light, &c., and £100 will be granted to pay all expenses in connection with the passage out.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Lieuts. E. E. B. Wilson and H. St. J. L. Winterbotham are on passage home from South Africa in the Assaye, invalided.

INFANTRY.

Coldstream Guards.—Major the Hon. W. Lambton has been asked to stand as Liberal candidate for the representation of Durham City in Parliament. Capt. Sutton, 2nd Batn., is employed as a Railway Staff Officer in South Africa, and Lieut. Longueville, 2nd Batn., as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Paget. Lieut. Lane, 1st Batn., is on passage home from the Cape in the Assaye, invalided.

Irish Guards.—The uniform of the regiment has at last been approved. It will in most respects be the same as the other regiments of the brigade, the tunic being scarlet with Royal blue facings. The Irish will be the fourth Guards' regiment, and this fact will be indicated by the buttons in front of the tunic being placed in groups of four, with an intervening space. The collar badge will be a shamrock leaf, and the band around the forage cap green. The full-dress headpiece will be a bearskin, with a plume of "Patrick Blue" at the side. "Patrick Blue" is a light shade, very much resembling that affected by Cambridge University, and is so called as being the colour of the ribbon of the premier Irish order—St. Patrick.

Queen's (2nd).—Col. Collins, 1st Batn., has taken over the officiating command of the Peshawur District. Brevet-Major Bird left Cape Town on the 22nd ult. in the Assaye, invalided. 2nd Lieut. Versturne, 3rd (Militia) Batn., is a passenger in the same transport.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—Major Sturges, 3rd Batn., sailed from Cape Town in charge of invalids in the Assaye on the 22nd ult., en route to join headquarters at York.

Royal Warwickshire Regiment (6th).—Major Landon, second in command of the 2nd Batn. in South Africa, has been transferred to the 1st Batn. in India.

Royal Fusiliers (7th).—Capt. McMahon left Cape Town in the Assaye on the 22nd ult. for England, invalided. Sergt.-Major Sutton, 3rd Batn., is ordered home from Gibraltar to join the 5th (Militia) Batn. at Salisbury Plain on promotion as Quartermaster.

King's (8th).—The Central News correspondent says the disaster to the 1st Batn., in South Africa, last week, reported in Lord Roberts's despatch of the 24th ult., was directly due to a tactical blunder. The two companies were sent forward at the end of the day to the support of the outlying cavalry, but they were taken too far, and, on marching over a ridge, were hidden to the view of the remainder of the force. Boers swarmed on the other side of that ridge, and the gallant King's immediately found themselves surrounded by the enemy at forty yards' range. Seeing the trap into which he had walked, the officer in command ordered a retreat, but it was then too late. The enemy opened a heavy fire, and men fell thickly as the two companies fell back. About 30 of them were soon cut off from the main body, and after fighting stubbornly for some time were compelled to surrender.

Norfolk Regiment (9th).—In a telegram to the War Office from Belfast on Tuesday, Lord Roberts says: "Paget reports the death of a very promising officer, Lieut. D. M. M. Oliver, Norfolk Regiment, who was killed in an encounter with one of the enemy's despatch riders."

Lincolnshire Regiment (10th).—Col. Lord William Cecil, M.V.O., commanding the 4th (Militia) Batn. at Parkhurst, dined with the Queen and Royal Family at Osborne on Wednesday evening. Capt. Thorold and 2nd Lieut. de Hoghton, in charge of the Queen's Guard at East Cowes, dined with the household, and were received by Her Majesty in the drawing-room afterwards. Major Herapath, 1st Batn., Lieut. and Adj. Grant, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from the Cape in the Assaye, invalided.

East Yorkshire Regiment (15th).—Lieut.-Col. Inglefield, 2nd Batn., is acting as an A.A.G. in South Africa. Capt. Maconchy succeeds Lieut. Wilson as Adjutant of the 2nd Batn. in South Africa.

Royal Irish Regiment (18th).—Capt. Crumpe and Lieut. Elliot, 1st Batn., sailed from the Cape in the Assaye on the 22nd ult., invalided.

Yorkshire Regiment (19th).—Capt. Sanderson, 3rd (Militia) Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 22nd ult. in the Assaye, invalided.

Royal Scots Fusiliers (21st).—Lieut. Paton sailed from Cape Town in the Assaye on the 22nd ult., invalided.

Royal Welsh Fusiliers (23rd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. with details, moved on Monday from Salisbury Plain to Plymouth.

King's Own Scottish Borderers (25th).—Lieut. Maclean, 1st Batn., is on passage home from South Africa in the Assaye, invalided. He sailed on the 22nd ult.

Gloucestershire Regiment (28th) is to be moved from South Africa to Ceylon to assist in guarding the Boer prisoners. It will embark in three transports, the Dilwara, Bavarian, and Mongolian, as quickly as possible.

East Lancashire Regiment (30th).—Capt. Hamber is acting as a Railway Staff Officer in South Africa.

Worcestershire Regiment (36th).—Lieut. Davidge sailed from Cape Town on the 22nd ult. in the Assaye, invalided.

Black Watch (42nd).—2nd Lieut. Stewart sailed from Cape Town on the 22nd ult. in the Assaye, invalided.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (43rd).—Lieut. Forrest left Cape Town on the 22nd ult., invalided, in the Assaye.

Sherwood Foresters (45th).—Capt. Weldon has been appointed a D.A.A.G. in South Africa.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (52nd).—Col. Plowden has taken over the officiating command of the Belgau District.

Border Regiment (55th).—Lieut.-Col. Ovens had proceeded to India when the mail left to take over command of the 1st Batn. (34th) on promotion.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—Capt. Porter, 4th Batn., is on passage home from the Cape in the Assaye to join on promotion.

Durham Light Infantry (68th).—Lieut. Ainsworth who was taken prisoner at Venterburg on Aug. 3, is officially reported to have escaped on Aug. 16.

Highland Light Infantry (71st).—At a special meeting of the Glasgow Corporation Police Department, it was resolved to ask the Secretary of State for War that the Highland Light Infantry should be again made a kilted regiment, and that in recognition of the regiment's connection with Glasgow it should be termed the H.L.I. (City of Glasgow) Regiment.

Gordon Highlanders (75th).—Capt. Cameron and Murray, and 2nd Lieut. Hay, sailed from the Cape on the 22nd ult. in the Assaye, invalided.

Middlesex Regiment (77th).—Major-Gen. Talbot Coke, commanding the 10th Brigade in South Africa, addressed the regiment lately at Charlestown. Having praised all ranks for their conduct at Van Wyk and Almond's Nek, he said:—

"This regiment has always been very lucky in arriving at the critical moment. At Spion Kop you saved the position, and also the Lancashire Brigade, who were on the point of retiring. The Boers said they intended to make it a second Majuba, and to make the English run down into Natal, shooting them like rabbits as they ran; and perhaps they would have done so had not the Middlesex arrived just in time; but, thank God, they did not run. It is a matter of controversy whether it was a victory or not, but I say it was a victory, and it will be looked upon as such. As to the retirement, I had nothing whatever to do with that, but there will be more said about that in time to come."

Shropshire Light Infantry (85th).—Major Doyle has been appointed second in command of the 1st Batn. (53rd), vice Major MacLaughlin, retired.

Gordon Highlanders (92nd).—Lieut.-Col. Scott is acting as an Assistant Press Censor in South Africa. Mr. Harry N. Brooke, Fairley, Aberdeenshire, president of the Gordon Highlanders' Aberdeen Association, is appealing for funds to raise a memorial to commemorate the deeds and sacrifices of the Gordon Highlanders in South Africa. It is suggested that the memorial should take the form of a club in the Granite City, which would serve the purposes of a soldiers' home. Mrs. Dick-Cunyngham, feeling that such an institution would benefit the Gordons, and would have had the hearty support of her gallant husband, who fell at Ladysmith, has contributed £200 on condition that the name of the late Lieut.-Col. Dick-Cunyngham, V.C., is associated with the movement. Mr. Brooke has collected some £50 in addition to the sum promised by Mrs. Dick-Cunyngham, but from £1,200 to £1,600 will be required to carry out the object in view. It is pointed out that this proposal is not intended to prevent the erection of other memorials in Aberdeen or throughout that country.

Wiltshire Regiment (99th).—Major Beatson has been invalided home from the Cape, and sailed in the Assaye on the 22nd ult.

Leinster Regiment (100th).—Capt. R. H. Smyth, 3rd (Militia) Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 22nd ult. for England, invalided.

Royal Munster Fusiliers (104th).—Major Clough has been selected for the appointment of second in command.

West India Regiment.—Two companies 1st Batn. are due at St. Helena to-morrow from Bermuda. Two companies of the 3rd Batn. will leave St. Helena on Monday for Sierra Leone, arriving on the 8th inst.

Army Service Corps.—Assist.-Commissary A. B. Allen, Retired List, in charge of the Brighton Sub-District, having been nominated to take charge of barracks in the Thames District, has reported his arrival at Chatham.

Royal Army Medical Corps.—Lieut.-Col. R. D. Hodson sailed from Cape Town on the 22nd ult. in the Assaye, invalided. Reviews.

THE QUARTERLIES.

We have not hitherto found space to deal with the July Quarterlies, which, nevertheless, contain certain articles not to be overlooked. The Edinburgh discusses "Progress in Ireland," "Paris in 1900," "The Hudson's Bay Company," and a number of other topics of general or special interest. There is an article upon the last volume of Capt. Chevalier's "History of the French Navy," to which high praise is given, though with the limitation, which we may say applies to its predecessors, that the work is far from communicative as to details interesting to the student. The Reviewer has very high praise for the French Navy during the period described—1815 to 1870—and says that the record would do credit to any navy. Considerable stress is laid upon the final chapter, in which the French officer lays down the pen of the historian, and takes up that of the pamphleteer. He discusses, as our readers are aware, the conditions of war with England, his general view being that the French should not seek general engagements, but should have squadrons ready to go anywhere at the instant opportunity, and that, meanwhile, our commerce should be actively and vigorously harassed. As the Reviewer points out, there is something in this of a strategy attempting to make war without fighting. Another important article is upon Sir Herbert Maxwell's "Life of Wellington," to which also high praise is given as a most useful and readable work. At the same time the Reviewer expresses the opinion that this author has depended too much upon Mr. Ropes and M. Houssaye, and that he does not seem to know anything about the recent Life of Gneisenau, Blücher's chief of the staff and the organiser of his operations. Gneisenau had been with Wellington as a military attaché in the Peninsula, and had come back from those operations with a profound distrust of him. This feeling finds expression in Gneisenau's life, it being urged that the Prussians were induced to fight at Ligny by deceptive promises on the part of the Duke of Wellington. There is no getting over the fact that the Duke wrote a certain letter on June 16, 1815, wherein he was led to make a statement as to the position of his troops which was not accurate. Under the pressure of Blücher, who had an intense admiration for Wellington, Gneisenau undertook to march to the field of Waterloo, abandoning the Prussian communications, but he had ordered Bülow not to move until Wellington was expressly committed to a serious engagement, and it was Blücher himself who countermanded these orders, and pushed forward Bülow into the field. Many people have had reason to shroud the secret history of Waterloo, but it is gradually becoming known. Another article that is extremely interesting is upon "The South African War and its Critics," chiefly in relation to the views expressed last January by General von Schmeling, who saw no hope for us. It is pointed out that he entirely failed—like many of his countrymen—to understand our immense reserve of strength, and the contention is that he was misled by the despondent utterances of Mr. Arnold Forster, Mr. Spenser Wilkinson, and some others.

Amid a number of articles in the Quarterly we can only refer to two. The first is in relation to Dr. Theal's works on South African history. It is pointed out that this writer has changed his views, and that his latest utterances, which have been much quoted, do not rightly interpret the attitude of the Boers in relation to the natives. In short, the Reviewer contends that the Native question covers nearly every cause that has been assigned for the Great Trek, and even asserts that at the date of the Trek no other cause was generally recognised. The other article is upon the War in South Africa in its later stage, and is full of admiration for the operations conducted amid a hostile population not distinguishable from the enemy's army, and in a country offering greater difficulties of movement and fewer possibilities of local supply than most of those in which there is any experience of civilised war. The Boers are probably the best adepts in the world in the art of running away, but their military power appears at last to have been almost destroyed.

ALL THE WORLD'S FIGHTING SHIPS.

The third issue of Mr. Fred T. Jane's All the World's Fighting Ships (Sampson Low and Co.), published for "The Naval Syndicate," differs in some respects from its predecessors. We observe that directly reproduced photographs have been substituted for most of the old pen-and-ink drawings, although, if we remember aright, when the work first appeared, it was held that these latter, by enabling the artist to enforce points, were superior to sun pictures. On the whole, we like the change. For ships of lesser importance silhouettes have been adopted instead of small pen-and-ink sketches. Again, the number of plans has been increased, the indices are extended, and the silhouettes of the large liners are introduced. Classification troubles Mr. Jane as it does all other writers on the same subject, and he has boldly transferred the Royal Sovereign and the Kaiser Friedrich III. to the second class, while the armoured cruiser Drake is reckoned with second-class battleships. The plans are based upon the War Game scale, and each elevation carries its own scale, being divided vertically into 25ft. sections, so that immediate comparison is possible. The book is already well known, with its special features, and, although it does not displace other annuals, it is important, and for its particular purposes very valuable.

SOUTH AFRICAN LITERATURE.

The Boer Invasion of Natal, by Clement H. Stott (S. W. Partridge and Co.), is a narrative of events by a Natal Colonist. The events in that colony have been in many ways the most interesting in the South African campaign, and the little book is a useful record of them. To those whose business it has been to saturate themselves in the war news it teaches nothing, but there are thousands who will be glad to possess this simple story, and who may be glad to have a narrative of events, without being plunged into the mass of controversy that has arisen from them. Mr. Stott has a loyal appreciation of the fine qualities of the troops, both Imperial and Colonial, and he has done ample justice to their heroic self-sacrifice. It seems to us that the most instructive part of the volume is the picture it incidentally gives of the utter inability of men on the spot to gauge the strength of the Boers, or to anticipate in any degree the course of events. Everything was a surprise, and there were many rude awakenings. As to the cause of the war, Mr. Stott has no hesitation in ascribing it to the intense desire of the Boers in South Africa to secure national independence. Among other things he gives a sad picture of the wanton destruction effected by the commando which raided the Estcourt district. The interiors of farmhouses were wrecked, rain-water tanks were pierced, orchards were ravaged, and ruin fell upon many. Intense bitterness followed among the loyal colonists, but Mr. Stott's volume scarcely reflects it. Indeed, he restricts himself almost wholly to a simple narrative, and from that point of view his volume is very acceptable.

South Africa and the Transvaal War, by Louis Creswicke (P. C. and E. J. Jack, Edinburgh). We have already drawn attention to this history, proposed to be completed in six volumes, of which the third, covering the period from the battle of Colenso to Lord Roberts's advance into the Free State, February, 1900, is before us. We can give it hearty commendation as a spirited narrative, based upon careful consideration of authorities, and embodying much illuminative criticism. Mr. Creswicke is also full of wonderment at our inability to foresee or to prepare for the special conditions of South African warfare, and he strongly enforces the point that an almost superhuman task lay before our generals, since they were expected to make up for want of mobility by superior strategical qualifications. But, though this writer has much to say against our unpreparedness, he has nothing but praise for the qualities of the troops in the field. For the rest, he writes well and pleasantly ; and his work is one very desirable to be possessed. The form is good, and the type readable, which is a merit added to an excellent work. The black and white illustrations are interesting, but there are extraordinary vagaries in the coloured ones, the horses, for example, being of absolutely impossible hue.

A book that certainly deserves to sell widely is For Britain's Soldiers (Methuen and Co.). It is a collection of capital stories by Sir Walter Besant, Messrs. Crockett, Hornung, Outcliffe Hyne, Rudyard Kipling, Frankfort Moore, Max Pemberton, and others, given for the War Fund, and published gratuitously by Messrs. Methuen. The financial proceeds will thus be handed over undiminished for "the needs of our fighting men and their families." Excellent stories by well-known authors, published in pleasant form, and for such a purpose, should command a large sale, and we have the greatest pleasure in drawing attention to the book.

Those who wish to know how the Tintagel Castle conveyed in health and enjoyment a large body of troops comprising detachments for many various Regular and Yeomanry corps to South Africa cannot do better than procure O.H.M.S., or How 1,200 Soldiers went to Table Bay, by W. McLean, surgeon, and E. H. Shackleton, third officer, of the ship (Simpkin, Marshall and Co.). We can only say that the 1,200 went in the most favourable circumstances, and that this brightly written and well illustrated narrative and record should be very welcome as a souvenir to them and their friends.

We have received the first numbers of a series of art reproductions by G. Montbard. They depict troopers of several of the Colonial regiments now at the front, and they are really good illustrations in their way (A. V. N. Jones).

SHORT NOTICES.

Sport in War, by Major-Gen. R. S. S. Baden-Powell (Heinemann), is a book daintily produced and admirably illustrated by the gallant author's hand, which is sure to have a large sale. It consists of reprinted sketches from the Badminton Magazine, which have been produced because the personality of the general, and all that he said and did, became matters of intense interest, while the sketches themselves delighted Mr. Watson, the editor of the magazine, as they will all who read them, by their freshness, vigour, and charm. We can only say that the chapters are upon "Sport in War" (full of suggestion), "A Run with the Cape Foxhounds," "The Sport of Rajahs" (or pig-sticking), and "Hadj Ano," a very amusing sketch of French sportsmen.

Modern Rifle-shooting, by L. R. Tippins (Volunteer Service Gazette Office), is a capital manual, dealing with the flight of a bullet, range, rifling, elevation, lateral allowances, aiming, and a number of other subjects concerned with rifle and rifle-shooting.

Nautical Astronomy Made Easy, by A. C. Johnson, R.N. (J. D. Potter).—The purpose of this book is to present the rules of nautical astronomy modified so as to require one table only, and that of the smallest dimensions, for the solution of the various problems. The system is interesting, and we commend it to attention.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1900.

SIR EDWARD SEYMOUR AND THE FRENCH.

AMID the many difficulties that beset the march of Sir Edward Seymour, it is extremely pleasant to hear of the great cordiality that existed in the allied force. There were distinctions, no doubt, in the friendships between the contingents, but they all worked shoulder to shoulder in a common cause, and there has been little trace of anything but generous admiration for the qualities displayed by various nationalities in the utterances or writings of any who were with the column. Eminently gratifying on both sides of the Channel is the letter which Sir Edward Seymour addressed to Rear-Admiral Courrejolles, wherein he expressed unreserved admiration for the French seamen. He said that the energy and untiring zeal shown by officers and men in singularly critical circumstances was beyond praise, and he added that the courage shown was in accord with the noble traditions of the French Navy. Their fine conduct did not surprise him, for he expected that they would show themselves worthy of those who had gone before them. "Nevertheless, I feel a keen satisfaction in bringing their exploits to your notice," he wrote to the French rear-admiral. "When Commander de Marolles, finding himself before the forts to the west of the suburb of Hsiku, took the commendable course of seizing the arsenal and maintaining himself there, he chose the most dangerous task, and was placed thus at the post of honour, for the arsenal, which was situated in the most advanced position towards Tien-tsin, was full of ammunition, and the Chinese fire was continuously concentrated on the point. Commander de Marolles also undertook a reconnaissance in the direction of the railway, accompanied only by his detachment."

It was something of a surprise, perhaps, to the average Frenchman to find the national navy receiving praise in this way from a foreign admiral, and it was perhaps only human nature that prompted certain French papers to assume a slightly resentful tone. The generous sentiments of the French people at large, however, soon corrected any feeling of that kind, and the chief organs of the press cheerfully recognised the admirable spirit in which Sir Edward Seymour had expressed, with courtesy and chivalry, his appreciation of the service that the French contingent had rendered. The Gaulois said truly that the letter was indeed noble in thought and lofty in tone. "The British admiral pays to the French admiral a tribute of which our seamen may be proud, not only because the British know what they are talking about, but because, after what has passed between Great Britain and France, this tribute is of particular value. It honours equally him who receives and him who gives."

The particular value which the Gaulois attributes to the letter has, of course, reference to the relations between the two countries. Admiral Seymour himself is reported to have expressed a hope in his letter to the French admiral that the co-operation of British and French forces might serve to "cement the good feelings between our countries and the mutual consideration which happily now exists between our two Governments." Co-operation between British and French seamen is not by any means new. It is, of course, well known that they served together, and with great cordiality, in the Russian war; but it is worth while to record the fact that, in Captain Chevalier's recently published "History of the French Navy from 1815 to 1870," there are fourteen historical chapters, of which no fewer than eleven are devoted to operations conducted by the French in combination, or in formal alliance, with the English, and that to these operations seven chapters are wholly devoted. To explain the facts which underlie this co-operation would take too long, but they are certainly significant, and, although Frenchmen have latterly fallen into the way of considering war with England as possible, or even probable, we have often urged, and we shall continue to say, that there is no real ground for hostilities between the two countries. We cannot, therefore, but consider it highly interesting and important that Admiral Seymour should have found the occasion for expressing, what we believe is widely felt, our admiration for the gallantry and devotion of the French forces.

Navv Notes.

Although he had not the advantage of success in his recent march on Peking, the gallantry and tact displayed by Vice-Admiral Sir Edward H. Seymour, Commander-in-Chief in China, was largely appreciated by the forces of other nations that accompanied him. The senior officer of the United States naval contingent, Captain McCalla, in a letter to his Government, stated that during the almost continuous engagements Vice-Admiral Seymour "was constantly with the advanced guard, and so freely exposed himself that both his own officers and mine feared lest we should be deprived of his conspicuous skill in directing our movements. It would be a source of unqualified gratification to the officers and men of the Newark, who were associated with the vice-admiral's command, if our Government would offer this distinguished officer some appropriate and tangible recognition of his services to our nation."

By their exceptional efforts Captain George A. Callaghan, of the Endymion, and the officers and men of the Naval Brigade at Peking, have shown that they are worthy representatives of the gallant officers and men who brought their guns from Calcutta to Lucknow in 1857 for an almost similar purpose. The Lieut.-General commanding, Sir A. Gaselee, stated in his report last week that owing to heavy roads and forced marches the Naval Brigade was unable to participate in the entry at that city, but the way they brought their guns by boat and road from Tien-tsin is an achievement of which they may be proud. The Service will fully appreciate the disappointment of the bluejackets at not being in time on this memorable occasion of relieving their countrymen and women.

Sir Edward Seymour has issued a memorandum to the officers and men of the China Squadron, in which he says:—

"I desire to express to the officers, seamen, and marines comprising the late expeditionary force towards Peking my high sense of satisfaction with their general conduct therein during a time which comprised much discomfort, hard work, and want of food and water, with little rest and decided anxiety, in addition to the dangers of war. The above were encountered with a zeal, patience, courage, and cheerfulness worthy of the noble service to which we belong. Similar trials may be before us, but will, I know, be borne as the above were. To me personally the fine conduct of those belonging to the British China Squadron is a matter of special pride and pleasure, and I have no misgivings but that, whatever is before us, we shall, if possible, do better than before, and uphold the traditions of the British Navy."

Some interesting reminiscences by an old naval officer in connection with the China crisis have been sent to us by a correspondent. At the time referred to, February, 1881, there was no China Station, and there were usually about six ships in the East Indies. The flagship was the Southampton, a 52-gun frigate. Next in point of size and importance were three 28-gun frigates of the type known as "donkey frigates." They were the Orocodile, the Alligator, and the Imogene. They had very little space between decks, and they were armed with carronades. Following the "donkey frigates" came two sloops of about 450 tons, armed with sixteen carronades and two "long sixes"—that is, a gun firing a 6lb. solid shot. These guns were about equal in weight to a 32-pr. carronade. Finally, the squadron was completed by an 18-gun brig, the Zebra. It was not long after this period that the squadron began to grow, and was strengthened by the addition of the Magicienne and Ouvroir—almost the first, if not the first, of the razé corvettes—a vessel of this nature being a frigate that had been deprived of a deck and was then sent to sea as a corvette. Of course, when opposed to another corvette she had the advantage of having a frigate's scantling. In those days there was no Australian Squadron, but once a year or thereabouts one of the ships of the Indian Squadron paid a visit to some of the Australian ports. Plenty of work was to be done, too, in looking after pirates in the Malay Peninsula.

Lieut. Carlyon Bellairs, R.N., as well as six other writers, contributes an article on the China crisis to the August number of the American Review. Naturally the points of view are as numerous as the writers, but to us the naval officer's aspect is the most interesting. He tells this story to illustrate his argument that Japan is under no illusion as to the relative strength of Russia:—

"Some time back the Marquis Ito visited Russia. On his return a friend of the writer asked him what would happen when Japan and Russia fought. The great man threw out his arms, and said with emphasis, 'We will walk through them.' At that time corruption was known to vitally affect Russia's armed forces, but we had not before us the Black Sea scandals, which brought some 50 or 60 responsible naval officials before a secret court-martial. Apart from this, the Japanese count on actual physical superiority. If their officers lack the advantage of a high tradition, they have, on the other hand, the highest possible sense of personal honour in the service of their country, and the freshness of their army and navy has spared them from that dead weight of conservatism which causes so much that is obsolete to be retained. If Great Britain does not actually assist the Japanese, they rely on her to hold back France and to rigidly enforce the treaty provisions which prevent the Russian Black Sea Fleet from passing through the Dardanelles."

From Portsmouth a rumoured reorganisation of the First Reserve Squadron is reported and has been widely commented upon in the Press. It is stated that changes are to be made in October, having for their purpose the weeding out of certain of the more antiquated vessels and their replacement by modern ships. It is just as well, in considering this report, to give a list of the ships which at present form the First Reserve Squadron as, oddly enough, they are not grouped together in the "Navy List" as other squadrons are. The force consists of the Alexandra at Portland, the Australia at Southampton, the Benbow at Greenock, the Collingwood at Bantry, the Colossus at Holyhead, the Galatea at Hull, the Melampus at Kingstown, the Rodney at Queensferry, and the Severn at Harwich. In addition to these vessels there are those that are known as the Portguard ships, and two cruisers used as drill ships for the Royal Naval Reserve, which may be considered part of the First Reserve fleet. The Portguard ships are the Howe at Queenstown, the Nile at Devonport, the Sans Pareil at Sheerness, the Trafalgar at Portsmouth, and the Thunderer at Pembroke. The cruisers above referred to are the Medea at Southampton and the Medusa at Shields. With the cruisers we are not particularly concerned, but the battleships, ten in number, it is evident that they represent very different types and belong to varying periods in naval progress. These facts are alone sufficient to show that a reorganisation would be of advantage.

It is by no means certain that the changes contemplated in the composition of the squadron according to the rumour are of the right kind or calculated to add to the efficiency of the squadron. It may be taken for granted that what should be aimed at is homogeneity so far as it is possible to obtain it. The bulk of the squadron is at present formed of the "Admiral" class, since we find in the ten vessels the Benbow, Collingwood, Rodney, and Howe, while the Nile and Trafalgar may be looked upon as somewhat similar vessels. The odd ships, therefore, are the Alexandra, Colossus, Sans Pareil, and Thunderer. To place amongst the vessels the Albion, one of our newest ships, seems to be like putting new wine into old bottles; she would certainly be wasted there. Nor if we look at the battleships specially commissioned for the manœuvres do we find a large selection entitled to our confidence. They were the Camperdown, Conqueror, Dreadnought, Edinburgh, Hero, and Superb. The next step is to search the dockyards to see what balance of battleships we may find which have not yet been wholly relegated to the non-effective class. There are the Agamemnon, Ajax, Hood, and Temeraire. The only ship here of real value is the Hood, and she would make in all probability a much better successor to the Alexandra than any yet mentioned. With the five "Admirals," the Nile and Trafalgar and the Sans Pareil, probably the most workable nine could be found, although the last named has not much to recommend her choice. It is, however, to be remembered that it should not be long now before we are able to replace ships at present in the Channel and Mediterranean Squadrons by newer vessels, and a First Reserve, consisting of six of the Royal Sovereign class, would probably be better than the scratch crew selected above. This, we consider, should be the aim of the authorities, while it would be an effective move to organise a Second Reserve of six or eight ships to act independently. In war time it would certainly be necessary to have three battle fleets operating in what we are now accustomed to call home waters. One which could, if found desirable, be despatched to reinforce the squadron in the Mediterranean, another to operate from Portland, and a third for service in the North Sea.

This week we are reminded that the jubilee of submarine telegraphy occurs, and at the same time the circumstance is recalled to us that when it was proposed to the Admiralty that they should be put in electric communication with Portsmouth the First Lord of that day replied, "We have an excellent semaphore system which suits us well." In the last half century the Admiralty has learned a great deal, although with occasional lapses into the frame of mind which was illustrated by this classic reply. Simultaneously with the jubilee celebration it is announced that the naval authorities have definitely adopted the system of wireless telegraphy. Apparently the decision to largely adopt the Marconi system was brought about by the satisfactory result of some experiments made between ships so fitted at Portsmouth and Portland; at least this appears from the published announcements, although we are also informed that experiments made afloat have also had an important bearing upon the matter. It is too soon yet to prophesy that the result of wireless telegraphy will be on anything like the same scale as that which attended the discovery of the possibility of telegraphing between continents by cables laid under the sea. As was shown during the manœuvres, there are many difficulties yet to be overcome in connection with the utilisation of wireless telegraphy for naval purposes, but the best way to overcome those difficulties is to supply the Marconi apparatus to as many ships as possible. We trust, however, that it is not true that the Jackson system has been abandoned. It would be altogether a misfortune if the Navy were to become entirely dependent upon one private company for its supply of these machines.

There can be no question now that the new Royal yacht has turned out a complete success. Not only is this the case so far as machinery and boilers are concerned, but the vessel has proved herself in a heavy seaway and under trying circumstances a thoroughly steady and seaworthy vessel. The series of trials which the ship has undergone were carried out without a hitch, and were unusually severe, involving three runs of forty-eight hours, and one of eight hours. On the full-power trial with 11,298 i.h.p. a speed was attained of 20.53 knots, which is entirely satisfactory. Previously, with 7,640 horse-power, and an expenditure of coal of 1.87 lb. per horse-power per hour, she had attained 18.47 knots, and this latter is probably the speed which would be demanded on ordinary occasions, and which can be obtained with fair economy. The behaviour of the yacht in every respect is a triumph for all concerned, and we regret to see that, in consequence of continued ill-health, the Director of Naval Construction was unable to be present at the final trial.

Navy Personal.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir Algernon Lyons attained the age of sixty-seven on Thursday. The gallant flag officer has therefore three years longer to remain on the active list of his rank.

Admiral Sir Michael Culme-Seymour, Bart., Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, had the honour of dining with Her Majesty, at Osborne, on Saturday last. Sir Michael remained at Osborne until Monday, when he returned to his port duties.

Admiral Edward Field, M.P. for Eastbourne, contemplates withdrawing from Parliamentary duty at the next General Election.

Vice-Admiral Sir John Fisher, Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Squadron, arrived at the Dardanelles on Wednesday last, where he was received by Vice-Admiral Husni Pacha, who left Constantinople for the purpose on Monday last, as a preliminary to Sir John's visit to His Majesty the Sultan.

Rear-Admiral A. W. Moore, Junior Naval Lord, visited Cardiff this week in reference to the present aspect of the Welsh coal supply, and to endeavour to arrange future demands for the Royal Navy. His visit will, in all probability, lead to the Admiralty calling on coalowners to tender for supplies well in advance of the period for which the fuel is required, and thus secure cheaper rates for the Government and greater convenience to the vendors.

Captain A. A. C. Parr, on temporary duty in the new Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, and Captain C. R. Arbutnot, of the Cambridge, attended the private funeral, at Devonport, on Monday last, of the late Mr. Edward Binding, Inspecting Bandmaster, the deceased having served under both officers during their respective appointments as commander of the flagship at that port.

Captain Arthur W. Protheroe, of the Arrogant, will be detained at Devonport until early in November next, in consequence of the defects in the machinery of that cruiser.

Captain F. E. E. Brock, of the Eclipse, left Malta on Saturday last for Portsmouth to pay off that vessel after carrying the flag of the Commander-in-Chief of the East Indian station for the past three years. He passed Gibraltar on Tuesday last, but, in consequence of quarantine, did not call there.

Captain A. J. Horsley, of the Europa, arrived at Perim on Saturday, and left again on Tuesday last on his homeward voyage from Sydney, N.S.W., with paid off crews. Forty-eight days have elapsed since she left the latter port on July 9, or more than twice the period usually taken by mail steamers in making the passage to the entrance of the Red Sea from the capital of New South Wales.

Captain C. G. Robinson, of the Vernon, celebrated the jubilee of submarine cables on Tuesday last by effecting wireless telegraphic communication, with the Marconi system, from Portsmouth to Portland, a distance of sixty miles. Such a success had not been previously obtained.

Captain A. L. Winsloe, of the Niobe, left St. Helena on the 23rd ult. for Sierra Leone and Devonport.

Captain R. C. Sparkes left Liverpool on the 23rd ult. in the British African steamship Bornu, for passage to Sierra Leone, where he will meet the Forte, and take command of her in place of Captain E. P. Jones.

Captain Peyton Hoskyns, who commanded the Blenheim during the recent manœuvres, is to proceed to Sydney, N.S.W., to commission the Tauranga, in place of the Wallaroo, detached to China. It is to be regretted that earlier promotion was not accorded this able officer, as he is about to assume his first sea-going command as captain when within seven years of compulsory retirement. Captain Hoskyns embarks in the Orient steamship Austral for Australia on the 28th inst.

Captain C. R. Arbuthnot relieved Captain R. Craigie, in command of the Cambridge, on Friday in last week, in consequence of the latter officer's promotion to flag rank. As Captain Arbuthnot is thirty-ninth on the list of his rank, he will probably remain at the gunnery establishment of the western port for the usual period of three years. A considerable amount of additional responsibility devolves on him by the introduction of the new works at Trevoil, but his ability is equal to such important requirements.

Commander Clement La Primandaye (retired), Chief of the Police at Malta, arrived home on Monday last in the P. and O. steamship Palawan, on leave from his duties in that colony.

Commander R. H. Archer (1882), second on the active list of his rank, has voluntarily retired. He secured his lieutenant's commission by meritorious examination at the Royal Naval College, 1872, and was promoted Commander from the Royal yacht 1882. In 1885 he obtained the prize of £100 at Greenwich. He commanded the Fantome 1885-86, was Inspecting-Officer of Coast guard at Queenstown 1889-95, and commanded the Eagle, drill ship, 1895-98. He now leaves the Service nearly thirty-five years after entry.

Commander J. P. Robertson commissioned the Archer at Chatham on Thursday last for the Australian station to replace the Mohawk, recently sent to reinforce the China fleet. Staff-Surgeon W. J. Maillard, the first and only officer of his branch on whom the Victoria Cross has been bestowed, is medical officer of the Archer.

Staff-Commander William Way's promotion comes almost in the order of seniority, as, of the four officers senior to him, three are employed under the Hydrographer, and the remaining one is in the Royal yacht's tender, Elfin, the command of which he is not desirous of relinquishing. Staff-Captain Way became navigating lieutenant in 1874, and served in the Bittern (gun vessel) until 1881; Orontes (troopship), 1882-85; Phæton (cruiser), 1885-89; Bermuda Yard, 1890-95; and since then has commanded the Port Admiral's yacht, Vivid, at Devonport; therefore for the past ten years he has not been employed at sea, and, as he never served in a ship-of-war of the first class, which was usually a sine qua non for advancement to the highest grade of navigating officers, he obtains his step without special merit, or having performed any important service, while several of his contemporaries have distinguished records.

Lieut.-Commander Philip Walter, of the Britomart, arrived at Hong Kong on Thursday in last week, having made the passage from Plymouth in fifty-one days. The Argonaut was only ten days less in covering the same ground.

Lieut. W. C. Chaytor, who was flag-lieutenant to Admiral Sir Charles Hotham while Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, has been nominated to a similar position on Sir Charles' staff at Portsmouth.

Lieuts. A. H. Tremayne, A. R. Palmer, and K. G. B. Dewar, and Sub-Lieut. W. Cadman, embark in the P. and O. steamship Oceana for passage to China on Thursday next.

Lieut. M. Culme-Seymour and Sub-Lieut. Eric J. Fullerton, of the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, dined at Osborne on Saturday last and afterwards had the honour of being received by Her Majesty.

Lieut. G. E. Corbett, appointed to command the Karrakatta, embarks in the Orient steamship Ormuz on the 12th inst., with the necessary complement of officers and men, to commission that gunboat at Sydney, N.S.W.

Assistant-Paymaster W. F. Wells's appointment as acting paymaster of the Archer, commissioned yesterday at Chatham, is evidently due to a paucity of paymasters. As he is twenty-fourth on the list of his rank, and not likely to be promoted for two years, the advantage of securing senior service for that period is hardly just to the large number who precede him.

Major J. R. Johnstone, R.M.L.I., of the Centurion, commanded the Royal Marine Forces, when Vice-Admiral Sir Edward Seymour endeavoured to advance on Peking. Captain McCalla, of the United States warship Newark, who accompanied Sir Edward, remarked that it was an inspiring sight to witness the courage and promptness with which the line of British Marines, under Major Johnstone, sprang forward as one man and drove the enemy from the Western rampart (Tien-tsin), and on to the plain beyond. It is gratifying to know that Royal Marines are appreciated by officers other than those of their own nation.

Lieut. Leslie O. Wilson, R.M.L.I., who embarked for South Africa in November last, and is attached to the Naval Brigade serving with Field-Marshal Lord Roberts, was, we regret to say, seriously wounded in the thigh on Sunday last in the action at Belfast.

HARBOUR DEFENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—In your issue of Aug. 25, Capt. Eardley-Wilmot again raises a question which has already been very fully discussed in your columns and elsewhere, whether our harbour defences should be manned by forces under the control of the Admiralty or the War Office. He alludes in his letter to two alleged incidents of the naval manœuvres, and endeavours to find in them support for his opinion that the ports should be under Admiralty control. One of the minor objects of the recent naval manœuvres was the trial of one of the very points he raises, the best method of admitting friends and excluding foes from our ports both by night and day. This point is one of those which, in the allotment of responsibility for our coast defences, the Admiralty have always retained in their own hands and therefore should the arrangements at the ports which were manned for the naval manœuvres have proved inadequate, the Admiralty must take the responsibility of the failure and prepare a remedy.

Up to the present there has been very little experience of the arrangements for passing shipping into and out of our defended ports, and the difficulty of interfering in even the slightest degree with our commercial traffic makes a practical trial of the arrangements very difficult. More might however be done in this way if the Admiralty would co-operate rather more fully with the military authorities at our defended harbours. Personally, I think that extended trials would show the necessity of a considerable augmentation of the naval personnel detailed to regulate the traffic at each port, but the question is a difficult one, and demands careful experiment. A kindred point on which no action seems to have been taken is the necessity for the organisation of an intelligence department for reporting the movements of ships from one port to another round our coasts, and communicating to the ports concerned. Such an organisation would much facilitate the handling of traffic, and ease the strain of watching day and night for a possible enemy. The only organisation which at present exists capable of giving this information—the coastguard—would be broken up in time of war by the withdrawal of the men to man our fleets.

The second point referred to by Capt. Eardley-

Wilmot was apparently a difference of opinion between the officer in charge of one of the ships and the individual in charge of the electric light. It is, of course, well known to everyone acquainted with the working of electric lights that these lights can be used to seriously interfere with navigation; but, on the other hand, experiments have repeatedly shown that electric lights properly placed and properly directed, offer no hindrance to navigation. If the protest of the naval officer was justified in this case, it follows that the light was either badly placed or badly directed. In either case the defect should be easily remedied. Space would not admit of my following Capt. Eardley-Wilmot into his historical retrospect of how the harbour defence came to be left in military hands. He puts it down to the apathy of the Admiralty. I would prefer to describe it as the result of a well-considered policy, which wished to free the naval authorities of any responsibility which would hinder the full development of our all-important Navy, a policy which has been endorsed by successive rulers at the Admiralty, and is still, I believe, supported by the bulk of naval opinion.

While the advantages of a change are at least doubtful, the disadvantages are very patent, and the difficulties of starting a new organisation very great, and I would ask Capt. Eardley-Wilmot and those who think with him in this matter, whether they would not be best serving the interests of the country by accepting the existing arrangements and directing their criticism to bringing the two Services more closely together, rather than placing them in opposition, and to improving as far as possible the whole working of our defensive and offensive organisation. The closest co-operation must, of course, exist between the Admiralty and War Office, but I do not think many people outside those offices concerned know how close this co-operation really is on all questions of harbour defence. It is not saying too much to state that every gun mounted in our coast fortresses, the position and direction of every electric light, and the position and nature of every mine, have received Admiralty consideration and sanction, and no arrangements are made without their approval. The probable nature of attack on any individual port is also considered by the Admiralty, and the scale of defence required is fixed by them in concert with the War Office, and I may add that in my experience the decisions of the Admiralty have been based on two marked principles, the importance of making any defence really effective by the provision of the latest pattern of guns, &c., and the importance of making the entrance and exit of our own shipping as easy as possible. With such principles military officers can have no cause of quarrel. In short, under the present system the Admiralty have the decisive voice on all important questions of defence, while they are relieved of the responsibility of looking after details. Such a system, seems admirably adapted to our unique position, and where it is found to fail the failure must be ascribed not to a defective system, or to any want of goodwill between the two Services, but simply to our want of experience of what will be the real conditions of the next big war.

Aug. 28. W. BAKER BROWN, Major R.E.

ORDERS have been issued for the huts which are being erected at Frimley and Ewshot, near Aldershot, to be pushed on with all possible despatch so that they may be ready for occupation by troops during the coming winter. From this it is evident that no early disbandment of Militia units is contemplated.

FURLONGS FOR MILITIAMEN.—The Secretary for War has approved of embodied Militiamen being granted furloughs with the special object of enabling them to take part in harvesting operations. The furloughs (of not more than one month, and between Tuesday last and the end of September) are only granted to men who have completed the musketry course and company and battalion training, and to not more than 50 per cent. of a unit's strength being allowed to be absent at one time. The men will be subject to recall, should their services be required, at seven days' notice; will be allowed to wear plain clothes while on furlough; and the regulated pay any allowances as sanctioned for Regulars on furlough will be granted when the men in.

THE CHINA CRISIS.

Sunday, Aug. 26.

The Secretary of State for India received the following telegram from Sir A. Gaselee. The date of despatch from Peking is apparently Aug. 16:—

"Our losses during the day (? Aug. 14) were extremely small, but I have no details yet. I believe that Japanese lost heavily. They had the hardest task. To-day I am endeavouring to concentrate the men as follows:—At South-east Gate, Naval Brigade; at South Gate, company 24th Punjab Infantry; at Temple of Heaven, cavalry, two field guns, three companies 24th Punjab Infantry, and transport; at Legation, Fusiliers, Marines, four field guns, and about 600 Sikhs and Rajputs, also company Hong Kong Regiment. I am very short of food, but am arranging for convoys. Hope to assault Imperial City to-day, when the men have fed. The march generally has been extremely arduous, owing to great heat and heavy roads, but spirit and endurance of our troops were beyond praise. I regret that, owing to the heavy roads and forced march, Naval Brigade was unable to participate in the entry yesterday. The way they have brought their guns by boat and road from Tien-tsin has been an achievement of which they may be proud."

A telegram, dated Peking, Aug. 16, says:—

"The Americans yesterday attacked the Imperial City, and forced five gates. A conference of generals was then held, and the troops were withdrawn, after leaving Capt. Reilly, commanding the 5th Battery, and five men killed and 18 men wounded. This morning the Pei-tang Cathedral, in the north of the city, which was garrisoned by 30 French and 10 Italian bluejackets, and which had had no communication with the rest of the foreigners since the siege began, was relieved by the Japanese, British, and French. The defence of this church was most heroic."

An official of the Russo-Chinese Bank telegraphs from Peking, Aug. 14:—

"After two months' siege we are to-day free. In all 75 persons have been killed and 120 wounded, including seven Russians killed and 15 wounded. The Russo-Chinese Bank was destroyed by Boxers on July 28. It is further stated that at the capture of the city Midshipman Giers, son of the Russian Minister at Peking, was among the wounded."

Capt. McCalla's report of the Seymour expedition calls attention to the heroism of Seamen Turner, of the Centurion, and George, of the Aurora, who rescued a junk, laden with British and American wounded, which had grounded against the bank of the river occupied by the Chinese. The two seamen jumped overboard, pushed the junk afloat, and towed it out into the middle of the stream, thus, at imminent risk to themselves, saving a boatload of helpless soldiers from death.

Mr. A. B. Johnson, American Consul at Amoy, telegraphs on Aug. 24 that on that day a mob burned the Japanese temple there, and marines were landed to protect the Japanese officials and to restore order.

The transport Fazilka, with the 3rd Bombay Lancers and a section of the 25th British Field Hospital, arrived at Hong Kong.

The Britomart, from England, the German cruiser Hertha, from Swatau, and the Russian transport Norony, from Odessa, also arrived at Hong Kong, and the Indian transports Olive, Upada, and Vadala proceeded north.

Monday, Aug. 27.

The Secretary of State for India has received the following telegram from Gen. Dordard:—

"Tien-tsin, Thursday.

"On Aug. 19, mixed force Americans, Japanese, Austrians, and British troops, 1,000 strong, under my command, attacked large body of enemy eight miles south-west of Tien-tsin. Enemy fled after two hours' hard fighting, leaving 300 killed and 60 prisoners. Total casualties of mixed force, eleven wounded, including Lieut. Gausson, 1st Bengal Lancers, slightly wounded, and one Bengal Lancer and two Americans severely wounded. Eight hundred enemy fled south, and very much larger body west. Lines of communication from Tien-tsin are now free from danger. Enemy has been treating villages badly, several decapitated bodies being found near the camp. Villagers are now flocking into Tien-tsin at the rate of about 1,000 daily. There is not more than one month's food supply for the people in Tien-tsin, and every prospect of a famine shortly."

At a conference held on Aug. 18 by the Ministers and Generals it was resolved to apportion the city of Peking, a section being entrusted to each nation to guard. A proclamation will be issued calling for an attempt to be made to restore business. The city is still in a state of tumult, but there is no shooting. The Japanese and Russian troops captured great quantities of silver.

Reconnoitring troops were sent out on Aug. 19. Looting by armed Chinese is reported to the southward and westward. A well-entrenched force was located at Housi village, four miles to the south-westward, by Bengal Lancers. It is believed that the best Chinese leaders are in command of the Imperial troops, and the Forbidden City is under a close guard furnished by the international authorities. A thanksgiving service has been held at Peking. It was attended by the members of the British and American Legations, as well as by the missionaries and marines.

It transpires that the nephew of Yuan-shih-kai is dead, and that the report of the latter's decease arose through a confusion of names.

The Sachsen, in which Count von Waldersee is travelling, arrived at Port Said on Sunday. The German Consul went on board and handed to the Field-Marshal instructions, which are understood to be of some importance, from his Government. The commander of the Halcyon paid a visit to Count Waldersee, and Capt. Sthamer returned it later in the day on behalf of his chief. The Field-Marshal subsequently landed and drove through the town, calling at the German Consulate. The Sachsen proceeded on her voyage in the afternoon.

The transport Palamcoota, with mounted sappers, balloon section, and sanitary establishment, has arrived at Hong Kong, and has proceeded north. The Austrian flagship Kaiserin Elisabeth and the cruiser Aspern have also arrived.

The Jodhpur Lancers, commanded by Major Turner, with Sir Partab Singh and Staff, embarked at Calcutta on Saturday, on board the Mohawk, which subsequently sailed for China.

Tuesday, Aug. 28.

Gen. Yamaguchi telegraphs under date of Peking, Aug. 18, as follows:—

"The city has now been cleared of the enemy. The Japanese cavalry despatched to Mansan report that the Chinese Imperial family, who left Peking on the 14th, set out for the west, after a short rest in the village of Mansan. They were escorted by Gen. Ma, whose troops numbered only about 500 horsemen and 20 waggons."

The Governor of Kiao-Chau, telegraphing on Aug. 24, transmits the following extract from the report of Count von Soden, commander of the German Marine Guard in Peking:—

"On June 21 hostilities were opened against the Legation. On the 22nd we evacuated the Legation owing to a misunderstanding, and proceeded to the British Legation. Shortly afterwards the German Legation was again occupied, but in the meantime the Austrian and Italian Legations were burned down. From that time we were incessantly engaged in fighting the Chinese troops under Tung-Fu-Siang and Yung-Lu. From July 16 until Aug. 9 there was an armistice. During this period the detachment occupied the club. Until Aug. 14 a murderous fire was kept up at close range. Early on the 14th gun and rifle fire was audible outside the city. The Chinese abandoned their positions in the afternoon, when an Indian regiment appeared. The German detachment advanced and occupied the Hatta-Man Gate, and captured eight guns, flags, many arms, and ammunition. Twenty-five men had opposed over 1,000, of whom more than 200 had fallen. The Marines distinguished themselves by their gallantry, and all the Europeans admired their calmness, intrepidity, and good shooting."

The transports Salamis, with the Australian Naval Brigade and Victorian contingent, and Putlala, with the 20th Punjab Infantry and the 69th Native Field Battery, have arrived at Hong Kong. The Lawada has proceeded north.

Wednesday, Aug. 29.

Admiral de Courrejolles telegraphs that the Council of Admirals have just informed the Legations at Peking that they have decided to detain Li Hung Chang in the roadstead. Until further advised, the diplomatic corps will not consent to open any negotiations with that mandarin.

Telegrams from Hong Kong state that Canton remains quiet. The large merchant guilds are feeding the poor to prevent disturbance, and the acting Viceroy continues to firmly suppress rowdism. From Amoy it is reported that the Japanese General Goto and staff have arrived there from Formosa. Large bodies of Japanese guard the settlements, and Nordenfeldt guns have been mounted commanding the city. A great exodus of Chinese is proceeding. The United States warship Castine has sailed from Shanghai for Amoy.

The transports Nairung, with the 20th Punjab Infantry, the native field hospital, and the supply column of the 5th Brigade, and Ujina, with a battery of the Royal Horse Artillery, an ammunition column, and a section of the British field hospital have arrived at Hong Kong. The Ujina has proceeded on her voyage to the north. The cruiser Isis has left for Amoy. The German flagship Kurfürst Friedrich Wilhelm, the cruisers Brandenburg, Woerth, Hela, Weissenburg, and the gunboat Tiger have arrived from Germany. The French gunboat Comète has arrived from Swatow.

Thursday, Aug. 30.

From Peking, under date Aug. 21, we learn that three Russians, two Japanese, one British, and one American battalion have scoured the Imperial Park to the south of the city for a distance of five miles on the look-out for Boxers, but no armed force was found, only a single Chinese scout, who was killed. The Japanese have taken possession of the Imperial Summer Palace, but the Winter Palace here is still closely guarded. The Russians wish to destroy it, and the Japanese to save it. A southward movement began to-day, and will continue, but troops will remain to protect the converts.

The cable from Chifu to Shanghai will be ready for traffic on Sept. 7.

According to a return issued by the senior Admiral of the allied fleets, the following troops had been landed on the 18th inst.:—

	Officers.	Men.
British	189	5,942
American	155	4,470
French	115	2,908
Italian	13	277
Japanese	573	19,508
Russian	275	11,500

The transport Carthage, from Bombay, left Hong Kong on Tuesday afternoon. The transport Formosa, from Bombay, arrived at Wei-Hai-Wei yesterday morning. The Austrian cruisers Kaiserin Elisabeth and Aspern have sailed for Shanghai. The transport Carthage has proceeded to Taku. Orders have been received that the 3rd Indian Brigade is to stop at Hong Kong.

Friday, Aug. 31.

The Secretary of State for India has received the following telegram from Sir A. Gaselee, via Taku, Aug. 28:—

"Peking, Aug. 22.

"Following further casualties:—Peking, Aug. 16, one Sepoy slightly wounded; Aug. 20, Lieut. Macaulay, 1st Bengal Lancers, slight flesh wound in chest from spear, and one sowar slightly wounded."

The State Department at Washington has issued the following message received from Mr. Fowler at Chifu:—

"Aug. 30.—The following despatch, bearing yesterday's date, has been received here:—More Russian, German, French, and Italian troops continue to arrive. The Imperial Palace will be entered on the 28th inst. A military promenade of all nations will be made through it, and the Palace will afterwards be closed and guarded. Prince Ching is expected in a few days.—CONGER."

The reference to Prince Ching is taken in connection with his statement issued on Aug. 27 indicating that the nucleus of a Chinese Government with which to conduct negotiations is gathering in Peking.

The Japanese Consul at Shanghai has by order of his Government communicated to the Consuls of the Powers a statement explaining the action taken at Amoy. He states that the reason why a small body of Japanese troops were landed at Amoy was because disturbances had broken out there, and that a riotous mob had burned down the Japanese Temple, and it therefore became necessary to take measures for the maintenance of order and the protection of foreigners. Six hundred French troops and 100 Tonkinese soldiers, with six guns, quartered in temporary barracks provided for them at the western end of the French concession.

Despatches received in St. Petersburg report that Gen. Renennkampff's flying column has been pushing forward rapidly. On Aug. 26 it arrived at Ninnian-chau, 70 versts from Tsissihar. Telegraphic communication was established between Aigun and Mergen. During the advance between these two places the Russian casualties were as follows:—Killed: Three officers and 22 men. Wounded: Five officers and 79 men. Two quick-firing guns and 33 rifles were captured.

According to reports from Amoy 50 marines will be landed to-day in the British concession from the cruiser Isis.

Navy Foreign.

The ideas of General von der Goltz concerning the invasion of England have attracted a good deal of attention in France, where so many like views have been propounded. The general is a well-known soldier, but he does not appear to have studied naval history or existing conditions to very good purpose. At least he appears to think that the German Navy is likely one day to sweep ours out of existence, whereupon the sons of the Fatherland will invade our shores. The difficulties of distance and transport do not appear to him at all insuperable. He even urges that our great strength at sea is an element of weakness; which seems paradoxical. The ground for his view, however, is that we shall be obliged to distribute our fleet in so many quarters that we shall be found weak somewhere, and apparently in the vital part, while Germany will keep her fleet concentrated to strike the final blow. The bold German admiral, with his excellent fleet, and his valiant audacity, who is to snatch the command of the North Sea, is upon the general's horizon. These opinions have not convinced any students of naval strategy, though some of the French lend a kindly ear to them. A writer in the Correspondant was recently urging upon Frenchmen to abandon their idea of attacking our commerce, except as the complement to naval strength. He points out that the guerre de course never gave such fruit as during the War of the League of Augsburg, but that on the day upon which Pontchartrain, the weak successor of the Colberts, decreased the importance of the navy, the corsairs were reduced to impotence, and their operations exercised no perceptible influence upon the war. M. Marc Landry supports the view of the writer in the Correspondant, and apparently shares something of the confidence of General von der Goltz.

In the Moniteur de la Flotte is an article upon our naval manœuvres, which expresses the view that the interest of the various operations is so obscure that it will be impossible to form a judgment as to the value of the operations until the official report appears. At the same time, the Moniteur thinks it incomprehensible that the A fleet, notwithstanding its slight inferiority, did not attack the B fleet. Apparently it does not recognise the force of the rule that made all battleships equal, and that deprived Admiral Rawson of the chance of victory.

Recently, a curious mishap is reported to have occurred on board the Russian battleship Sebastopol, which seems to indicate some fault of construction. The ship went to sea for the trial of all her guns, but it was discovered that the fore turret, which contains two 12in. guns, would not turn. It was then found that the base of the turret was displaced, and that some damage had occurred in the attempt to turn it. Moreover, the Novoe Vremya states that one of the ship's cylinders was found to be cracked, and that some time will be occupied in making all good. We have already reported the trials of the cruiser Varyag off the New England coast. Although one of her high-pressure cylinders gave way, and the trials were discontinued, the speed of from 23.6 to 23.7 knots was so good that the commission reported the trial satisfactory. The cruiser Novik was launched at Herr Schichau's yard on August 15. Her particulars are well known. Like the Varyag, she has water-tube boilers. Her speed is to be 25 knots.

In relation to the loss of the Framée, a fresh explanation of the disaster appears to have been given by Quartermasters Torse and Le Galvan, who were among the survivors. It does not appear why their explanation was not mentioned at the official inquiry, though it may be that the members of the Court did not credit it. According to these men, when Lieut. de Mauduit-Duplessix gave the man at the helm the order to bear twenty degrees to the left at full speed, it was already too late, since the Framée had just been struck by the Brennus, and almost cut in two.

Report.
"I cannot speak too highly of the gold watch.
No 17,179 of your make, and which I purchased from you in January, 1875. It was my constant companion during the winter 1875-76 in the Arctic and accompanied me sledging. It was about the best, if not the very best, in the Discovery, and since my return home continues to perform equally satisfactorily."—M.D., D.H., E.N.

Albert Embankment, London, S.E.

The WINTER SESSION of 1900-1901 will OPEN on TUESDAY, Oct. 2, when the Prizes will be distributed at three p.m., by Sir William MacCormac, Bart., K.C.V.O., in the Governors' Hall. Three Entrance Scholarships will be offered for competition in September, viz., one of £150 and one of £60 in Chemistry and Physics, with either physiology, botany, or zoology, for first year's students; one of £50 in anatomy, physiology, chemistry (any two) for third year's students from the Universities.

Scholarships and money prizes of the value of £300 are awarded at the Sessional Examinations, as well as several medals.

Special Classes are held throughout the year for the preliminary scientific and intermediate M.B. Examinations of the University of London. All hospital appointments are open to students without charge.

Club rooms and an athletic ground are provided for students.

The school buildings and the hospital can be seen on application to the medical secretary.

The fees may be paid in one sum or by instalments. Entries may be made separately to lecture or to hospital practice, and special arrangements are made for students entering from the Universities and for qualified practitioners. A register of approved lodgings is kept by the medical secretary, who also has a list of local medical practitioners, clergymen, and others who receive students into their houses.

For prospectus and all particulars apply to Mr. Bende, the Medical Secretary.

THE COLT AUTOMATIC QUICK-FIRING MACHINE-GUN AND DUNDONALD GALLOPING GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition or
303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition, loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready for transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom.
Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space, weighs about 600 lbs.

THE ANNEXATION OF THE TRANSVAAL.

THE most notable event that has transpired in South Africa since we last went to Press has, undoubtedly, been the formal annexation of the Transvaal by Lord Roberts on Saturday, the 1st inst. We recently gave expression to the opinion that the annexation of the country might opportunely take place so soon as the British had command of the Eastern Railway and had thus closed to the Boers their last channel of supply. The event however has come even earlier, for Komati Poort is still open to the Boers, and Barberton with its branch line has not yet been reached. But the recent rapid advance and the successes of the forces under Lord Roberts and Sir Redvers Buller, which have brought the latter able commander within striking distance of Lydenburg, the chief northern stronghold of the Republic, were so marked and decisive, and the comparative weakness and disintegration of the enemy had become so evident, that the issue of Lord Roberts's proclamation announcing—under the provisions of Her Majesty's Warrant, dated July 4, 1900—that the Transvaal will henceforth form part of Her Majesty's dominions, was fully justified by the general situation—perhaps even more so than was the annexation of the Orange Free State. At the moment when that event was proclaimed, the southern Republic, although the British had traversed the entire State, and had passed beyond its northern boundary, had still in the field a powerful and determined force, undemoralised by defeat, and holding strong positions with abundant supplies in the fertile eastern provinces, where they were destined to be a source of menace, disturbance, and delays for many weeks. Nor was the danger removed until Prinsloo's surrender was brought about by a vast strategic movement, requiring some 30,000 men.

The brunt of the recent fighting has fallen on Sir Redvers Buller, whose progress northwards, since he quitted the south-eastern railway at Paarde-Kop on the 8th ult. for Amersfoort, has been marked by uninterrupted success, the strategy which placed him in his present forward position having been both striking and original. In forecasting the probable course of the operations after the columns converging from Pretoria and Natal came in touch at Carolina, it would have been reasonable to predict for that of General Buller an easterly course on Barberton, his troops moving south of the Delagoa Railway on a line parallel to Lord Roberts's column continuing its march towards Komati Poort. This, moreover, was probably what the Boers expected, as the portion of their forces retiring after the recent engagements towards Lydenburg was comparatively weak. By crossing Lord Roberts's line of march near Machadodorp, and continuing his northerly course, Sir Redvers Buller executed a move, both bold and original, by which he for a time deceived the enemy and made good his advance almost unopposed to the neighbourhood of Lydenburg. Surprised, however, though Commandant Botha may have been by this unexpected advance, the extraordinary mobility of his burghers enabled him to detach from the commandos retiring due east before Lord Roberts a reinforcement of 2,000 men in time to close the pass facing General Buller, by which Lydenburg must be reached, and to occupy a position said to possess all the formidable characteristics of Laing's Nek. As a result of Botha's adroit counter-move Lord Roberts found himself obliged on Monday to send reinforcements to General Buller by the direct Belfast-Dultroom road, and General Ian Hamilton, who is apparently in command of the reinforcing column, reached Swart Kopjes, a point about twelve miles north of Belfast, on the same day, during which Sir Redvers's force maintained its advanced positions facing an expectant enemy. On the arrival of the reinforcements, which must now be close at hand south-west of Lydenburg, Sir Redvers Buller, probably based upon the Delagoa Railway for supplies, will, no doubt, press the attack on Lydenburg vigorously, while Lord Roberts on the railway secures Buller's rear, following at the same time his own eastward course, which should cut off Botha at Lydenburg from the ex-Presidents and their adherents at Nelspruit or Barberton, unless they elect Pilgrim's Rest, north-east of Lydenburg, as their next place of refuge, as some suppose probable.

While regular operations are proceeding in the eastern Transvaal, other parts of the field, both north and south of the Vaal, continue to be overrun by guerilla bands, some of them of considerable strength. It is sufficiently annoying to hear of fighting with Theron's Scouts near Johannesburg, of trains derailed and burnt twelve miles to the south of it at Klip River Station, and of the forcing of Klip River Jail with the liberation and arming of the prisoners. It is unpleasant to be informed that the country between Zeerust and Krugersdorp is very disaffected, that a column recently crossing it has had several engagements, and to find the irreconcilable De Wet again credited with raids on the line to the north and south of Kroonstad. But it is more disquieting to learn that recent fighting has occurred near Bloemfontein and Thaba'Nchu, and that Ladybrand was for several days invested by some 2,000 or 3,000 Boers with guns. We record with satisfaction that the little garrison of 150 men under Colonel White, who has proved himself a bold and skilful commander, entrenched on the hill-side overlooking the town, gallantly held their own until, on the 4th inst., the baffled enemy withdrew to the north-east on the approach of reinforcements under Bruce-Hamilton from Bloemfontein, having failed in several attempts to overcome the defence. Partial success, however, attended the raid, as the Boers could not be prevented from looting the town and carrying off many horses. A second body of the enemy is reported to be at Mequatling's Nek, to the north-west towards Winburg, and a third to be moving still further south towards Wepener, a place already rendered famous by the gallant defence made there by Brabant's colonial force in April last. This recrudescence of resistance so far south is much to be deplored, and must, doubtless, be credited to Olivier's escaped commando, largely recruited, it is to be feared, from among the burghers who have again taken up arms, and aided by a body of Theron's reckless scouts, who have come from beyond the Vaal. The active pursuit and crushing of these southern raiders has now become a pressing necessity, lest the evil should spread further, and the main operations in the Eastern Transvaal be again delayed. As we might expect would be the case, the activity of the guerilla bands has been met by equal activity on our part. General Hart repulsed without difficulty the attacks of Theron near Johannesburg; Colonel Plumer, holding the northern outposts of the British Army beyond Pretoria, has made substantial captures of cattle, waggons, arms, and prisoners; while Brabant with his horsemen followed up and routed the raiders who derailed the trains at Klip River. Major Brooke, R.E., also, on the 27th ult., fought a spirited action, clearing his post at Kraai Railway Station of the menacing presence of a strong commando. Notwithstanding the spasmodic outbursts of hostilities still occurring in unexpected quarters, a general survey of the situation shows that at all points British arms have gained the ascendancy, and that by sure, if slow, degrees the end of this difficult war is being steadily approached. But the time for relaxation of effort has not yet come. The unpleasant fact must be admitted that the subdued territories are at bottom thoroughly hostile, and are still possessed of arms in abundance. It will not be sufficient to crush the marauding bands; the annexed countries must be effectually disarmed, those who break their parole must be treated with greater severity than heretofore, and all must be brought to understand that the act of annexation has changed the status of burghers continuing in arms from that of belligerents to that of rebels against the Sovereign Power. War is war, and the ordinary precautions must be taken in the interests of civilisation. It is due to women and children in South Africa, if to no one else, that the settlement of the Boer difficulty this time should be final.

THE SITUATION IN CHINA.

THE events that have followed each other in rapid succession since the acute stage of the Chinese question came upon the world have been full of thrilling interest. An appalling tragedy has happily been averted at Peking by the prompt and bold advance of the Allied forces, and their forcible entrance into the capital at the moment when the resources of the Legations were all but exhausted. Notwithstanding the absence of a commander with undivided control over the whole force, and the imperfect condition of the transport arrangements, the Allied contingents, emulating each other in the desire to reach the imprisoned Europeans first, and so maintain in the forefront the honour of their respective flags, worked with the utmost vigour and unanimity towards the common object that had brought them together. During the closing days of the operations the columns experienced but little opposition, the Chinese having apparently become demoralised by the losses inflicted on them during the actions of August 5 and 6. At Ho-Shi-Wa, about twenty-seven miles from Peking, a position had been carefully entrenched, but the enemy fled on the approach of the allies. Two squadrons of the Bengal Lancers here distinguished themselves by a brilliant charge against the Tartar cavalry, which lost in the engagement many killed and wounded, besides the standards of two generals. The advance was pushed with the utmost vigour despite the intolerable heat, until on August 14 the British had the good fortune to be the pioneers of the relief force, entering the Legation enclosure first, closely followed by the American and Japanese contingents. The heroism of the defenders of the Legations in the face of a storm of gun and rifle fire for many days and nights of torturing suspense and privation while hoping almost against hope for relief, will dwell long in the memory of this generation, and will leave its mark indelibly on the pages of history.

It is unpleasant to realise that the difficulties experienced by the Allies in the Chinese crisis, through which we are passing, have been vastly increased by the action of the European Powers themselves in organising, drilling, and providing with modern ordnance and rifles, the former ill-equipped and undisciplined hordes that formed the military forces of the Celestial Empire. China is no doubt indebted more to Germany for this transformation than to any other individual Power, a fact somewhat grimly realised by Captain Lans of the Illis when he wrote after the bombardment of the Taku Forts:—"We were hit fairly and squarely by 17 shells (12 to 24 centimetre), of which by far the greater number burst in the ship, and unfortunately killed and wounded many of my brave men. What a mockery! All the enemy's cannon and shells come from our home. They are all modern quick-firing Krupp guns."

The raising of the siege of the Legations was but the first act in the drama. The second is the holding of Peking until the formation of a stable Chinese Government, and the receipt of full reparation for the murders committed, and the insults heaped upon the Powers, ostensibly by Boxer rebels, but in reality by the Dowager-Empress and the palace entourage. The successful retention of the capital depends on the sufficiency of the Allied forces to resist attack, and the maintenance of the security of the railway to Tien-tsin and Taku, despite the hordes of Chinese said to be threatening it at various points. It is this consideration that renders so serious, from a military point of view, the proposal of Russia to withdraw her troops from Peking, leaving but half accomplished the object which the Combined Powers had in view when they embarked in the operations. As might be expected, this proposal has caused amazement and consternation at Shanghai and Hong Kong, where it is well understood that any failure at the present juncture to make China feel the full weight of an armed occupation of the capital, and any sign of weakening in the concert of the Powers whose military forces hold the Imperial Palace at their mercy, might be fraught with disastrous consequences to the cause of civilisation. The action of Japan throughout the whole affair has been highly creditable. The willingness and promptitude with which her troops were despatched to the rescue of the Legations, the eagerness and endurance shown by them during an arduous march, and their valour and élan—more especially as regards their cavalry—in the heavy fighting that ensued, command a tribute of admiration which we gladly accord. Our good neighbours the French, have come in for well-deserved praise. Admiral Seymour has borne testimony to the splendid gallantry of their sailors, and a military officer, writing from Peking to a daily paper, has referred in eloquent language to the excellent feeling existing between all ranks of French and British officers, who are brothers-in-arms in something more than in name whenever they meet, remembering how close the ties are which bind the two countries together, notwithstanding that a certain section of the Parisian press would appear to wish us to be otherwise.

Army Notes.

The account of the capture of Tien-tsin is suggestive. It is a revelation of the military capacity of the yellow races. The superb gallantry of the Japanese is only equalled by the dogged bravery of the Chinese, and neither require to be led by European officers. The advantage so far lies with the Islanders, who have embraced the civilisation of the West with enthusiasm. The great races of the world are, however, more conservative, and the Chinese may yet prove that they are entitled to be so considered. They have many fine qualities and their staying power is remarkable. That the military spirit lost its hold on them about a century ago is true, but it may be revived, and nothing is better calculated to bring about a revival than the pressure of foreign foes. It should be remembered too, that the Taiping Rebellion was on the scale of a vast European War, and that the recovery of Li-li was as honourable to China's Army as the Chino-Japanese War was inglorious. In truth it would appear as though the military spirit of the Empire burned lowest in 1894. Since then the encroachments of the Powers, particularly of Russia, have aroused in the Chinese an understanding of their danger. They see clearly enough that European weapons are absolutely necessary to their existence as a people, and that an army must be trained to be effective. The result is China has now a fine arsenal, and can manufacture small arms and ammunition to any extent. Moreover, the leading Viceroy has armies of their own, Li Hung Chang's being the most efficient. The effect of this change in Chinese opinion was apparent at Tien-tsin. The bow and arrow, and all the other grotesque details of Chinese warfare, had disappeared. Boxers and Regulars were armed with the latest weapons, and they know how to use them. They charged again and again under a hot fire, and recklessly dashed on a line of British bayonets. Tien-tsin was, indeed, captured, but the losses of the Allies told at what cost. This is only a beginning. The Chinese officer is not yet trained in a sound school; he has not yet overcome the prejudices instilled into him for generations. It is not too much to say that, with another ten or fifteen years of progress, the Chinese soldier will be able to give points to the Japanese. He has better physique, greater powers of endurance, and greater moral and material resources to draw upon.

Throughout the campaign in South Africa the "slimness" of the enemy has served them better than military skill. Nicholson's Nek, Stormberg, Sanna's Post, Reddersburg, Honing Spruit, Lindley, and many other disasters of a similar character, would never have happened had we studied the Boer as intelligently as he studied us. Instead of adapting our tactics to the circumstances of the case, we have played the game as though it were a mechanical exercise, which never varies by a detail. Worse than that, too many of our officers have persistently refused to take those precautions which are necessary in the enemy's country. The consequence is our military self-esteem has been sorely wounded by discovering that we have been oftener beaten by the slow-moving Boer's intelligence than by his genius for war. The lesson is obvious, but, up to the present, it has not been generally taken to heart by officers at the front. The habits formed by years of defective training are not to be cured, even by the bitter experience of a campaign. Whether or not the home authorities have learned the lesson better time has yet to show. Several recent events prove that, with different training, the British officer is more than a match for the "slimmest" burgher of them all. Colonel Hore, at Eland's River, showed that he is a pupil in the best school. Colonel Ridley is another. At Winberg, with 250 of the Imperial Yeomanry, he held the town against 1,000 Boers, with two guns, for two days and a night. Even more brilliant was the exploit of eight Queenstown (South Africa) Volunteers in capturing Olivier and his three sons and twenty-four of his force, besides dispersing the remaining 200. Cronje was taken prisoner after a most determined resistance, so was Schiel, Albrecht and all the other Boer generals in our keeping. Olivier, who is at least as able, and played a part equally important, has been captured by a ruse, such as De Wet successfully employed against us at Sanna's Post. It is time indeed for the Boer to talk of giving up the struggle when he is so thoroughly beaten on his own ground.

One of our correspondents, who studies Punch attentively, writes to ask if the omniscient editor who published the cartoon of a Field-Marshal playing "nine-pins" last week did not see the satiric thrust of the artist's pencil under the fifth rib of the Commander-in-Chief, who is about to bowl over a whole stand of cocked-hat headed pins? "His lordship stands all alone in the bowling alley. There is no one to help him. He put up every one of these pins with his own hand, for not one of them could have got on end and up of its own accord. And there he is, full of mastery, about to floor them all! I know, of course, that the Field-Marshal is playing his little game, and that he means no harm to the pins. It seems to me that Linley Sambourne intended to symbolise the famous Philpipp delivered to the Aldershot chiefs the week before last, and I wish he had put faces to the wooden heads of the pins to enable us to identify the individual officers. I see traces of a likeness to some, but I dare not make a mistake. But one thing is, I presume, quite certain—that the pins, every man jack of them, were carefully selected by the bowler, and that he is responsible for the choice of the article. He is represented, indeed, turning his head half round over his shoulder as if he were looking for applause, to some invisible spectators, as he sends the bowl—a little too high for good results — or, perhaps, he may be actuated by the feeling which moved Mr. Daniel Quilp to batter the figure-head of his wooden admiral, and that the pins represent obnoxious individuals? In any case, however, there is evidence of carelessness in the process of selection, and that it has utterly failed to secure pins fit for anything but bowling over." Perhaps our readers would think the cartoon had no occult meaning, and that the pins were intended merely for exercising the Field-Marshal when he takes off his coat for a field day.

Whilst all must deplore the necessity for such plain speaking as fell from Lord Wolseley recently at Aldershot, it may be beneficial to consider the difficulties under which the training of the troops in the United Kingdom has been carried out during the present year. Owing to the dislocation produced by the war, all internal administration connected with pay, clothing, correspondence, returns, and the innumerable details comprised in "routine," has assumed an exceptionally aggravated form. Briefly, owing to a rigid adherence to a system sufficiently irksome under the most favourable peace circumstances, there is twice the ordinary routine with only half the officers to work it, and this under the most difficult conditions as regards clerical staff. An officer is now almost synonymous with an office-man, and whereas office routine increases almost as a law of nature, it requires a most determined effort from those in actual authority to attempt to stem the tide. Let anyone interested in the welfare of the British Army purchase a few copies of the books of regulations under which it is administered, and he will be able to form some idea of the way in which the time, abilities, and energies of our officers, high and low, are absorbed, too often at the risk of their pockets. Courts of inquiry on out fingers and protracted correspondence on the recovery of farthings have, however, a serious as well as humorous aspect, and a clerk-ridden army necessarily enters the lists heavily handicapped. That the existing system could be enormously simplified to the advantage both of the taxpayer and the Army may be confidently asserted, and it may reasonably be hoped that when the misdirected energy involved therein is devoted to military matters there will be fewer "regrettable incidents" both in peace and war.

All those who are interested in the question of obligatory military service, as well as those who are not, should not fail to read Dr. Miller Maguire's admirable article upon the subject in the United Service Magazine this month. He lays down the thesis that the elimination of the military element from national life would be a disaster, and he maintains that drill, in its largest sense—physical and tactical—is a most excellent educational art, and that military discipline is one of the best foundations of civic excellence. We believe that no one will question his judgment on these points, and there is undoubtedly a great deal of conviction in his further conclusion that obligatory military service would be "a blessing for which in our saner hours all of us would be grateful, and for the cowardly postponement of which our politicians cannot be too severely blamed." Dr. Maguire would almost prefer to err with Bacon and Burke than to sit in the self-conceited schools of modern Humanitarians. He adduces pagan philosophers and modern writers in support of his view, and brings together a body of criticism that goes a very long way. He asserts that universal service—or some modification of it—would elevate us in the scale of humanity. "Our masses are degenerate; their manhood is dishonoured; our physical condition is unworthy of our position and opportunities; we are sadly fallen; can our undressed operatives, look at themselves in mirrors or as reflected in lake or stream, and boast of being 'god-like, erect, in native honour clad?'" The conclusion of this pungent writing is that we must be up and doing, and there is great force in Dr. Maguire's assertion that, since 1870, under the so-called burden of military service, German commerce—both absolutely and relatively—has increased by leaps and bounds, and is now our strong competitor.

"Patient, hardy, masterful, merciful, high, irresistible, just"—these are the qualities which Mr. W. E. Henley ascribes to Lord Roberts in his poetical effusion on the promising subject of the Transvaal War. From the British point of view the adjectives are well bestowed and deserved. Afrikanders will question the fitness of some of them, and we are not sure that Frenchmen, Germans, Russians, Dutchmen, Belgians will cry in chorus "Agreed!" and they will certainly point out that he has been "resisted." We would challenge any just man of any country to deny that he is "patient" and "hardy." The annexation of the Transvaal was a political act—the ukase of a conquering general obeying the orders of the Government he served, and the Orange River Free State was wiped off the slate of independent Republics by a similar sweep of the pen. It has been suggested that Lord Roberts may now deal with the burghers who remain in arms as rebels, but that would scarcely be merciful, and it certainly would not be "just" or justifiable unless in case of burghers who had taken the oath, and had afterwards of their own free will joined a commando which attacked and killed and wounded British soldiers. The burning of farmhouses and the confiscation of cattle, horses, sheep, &c., are measures which must be regarded with dislike by Lord Roberts. These are very severe punishments which would not be resorted to if he did not consider they were necessary for the repression of the enemy, who destroy railroads, derail trains, and carry on a guerilla which cannot restore the independence of the Republics.

The thunderstorm and tornado at Mafeking reported in last Friday's papers was a forcible example of the violent electrical phenomena which are common in the Eastern Transvaal at this season of the year. We had several men killed or paralysed by lightning in 1879 in our camps and quarters. In October and November in that year these storms were very frequent and destructive. This very day twenty-one years ago Sir Garnet Wolseley, then in command of the army at Ulundi, was making his arrangements there for the dispersion of the regiments which had been under Lord Chelmsford and won the battle which finished Cetewayo and his impis, and had already directed the march of Baker Russell's column northwards from the Pongolo River whilst he was about to move out of Zululand to make his formal progress through the Transvaal, where the burghers were clamouring for convocation of the national assembly and announcing their determination not to pay taxes to the British military authorities. The Boers were incredulous when they were told that Cetewayo was taken, and some of them thought that the British troops were retreating from the Zulus when they saw our columns at Lake Chrissie and at Utrecht, and Sir Garnet Wolseley's resolute assurances to the Boer meetings which were summoned to meet him on his way to Pretoria, that the British flag would never be hauled down in the Transvaal as long as the sun rose and the rivers flowed to the sea, were listened to with silent indignation. Even the short and very brilliant expedition against Sekukuni, who had harried and laid waste the country around Lydenburg, which Sir Garnet led after he had been installed at the capital, though he handed over the command of the forces in the attack on the chief's stronghold to Baker Russell, did not inspire the Dutch farmers with any respect for the British arms, and they broke into rebellion in the following year, wherein Majuba confirmed their self-sufficiency and confidence, though they never succeeded in taking any of the posts held by our detachments in the Transvaal before that "triumph."

There is a defence of the staff of the Army in South Africa and of the Staff College, in the current number of the Nineteenth Century, by Colonel Lonsdale Hale. In regard to the criticisms that have been made, he says, with justice, that the inner working of the campaign is not yet known, and that opinions upon the staff and other work can at the best be so far only impressions. To Colonel Lonsdale Hale our unpreparedness was natural—or at least not unnatural—and it is upon this and not upon individual incapacity, that he saddles the responsibility. His whole contention is based upon the view that mistakes, blunders, misinterpretation of orders, and the miscarriage of well-laid plans, form the atmosphere in which regular war is now carried on. Perhaps not all Colonel Lonsdale Hale's readers will follow him quite so far, but it is not wonderful to find him surprised, not that there have been failures in staff work, but that, in a campaign in many respects unprecedented in military history, there has not been a complete breakdown. In other words, he thinks it is creditable to the staff that they have done so well. Moreover, as regards area, or attendant difficulties, the German staff work in the war of 1870 falls into the background altogether. At the same time, we do not suppose Colonel Lonsdale Hale wishes to spread the view that blunders are inevitable. He stoutly contends that the Staff College has done its work well, taking into consideration the fact that it was founded in the dark ages, forty years ago, and has been overshadowed during seven-eighths of its existence by the cold shade of unpopularity, and been given the cold shoulder by the authorities.

The addition of two officers to Native regiments in India having now been fully sanctioned, it may reasonably be asked where they are to come from. Already the difficulty of finding officers for British regiments is great enough. Are all the candidates for the Indian Staff Corps in future to go through Sandhurst? If so, the Royal Military College for some years to come will have to be used principally for the purposes of supplying the requirements of the Indian Army. Why should not advantage be taken at once of the opportunity furnished by the early close of the war in South Africa. There are any number of young men who have gone to the front from home and the Colonies, who would be only too ready to accept commissions on the understanding that in due course they would be posted to regiments of the Native Army. They are soldiers at heart, or they would not have been so anxious to proceed on service. The experience they have gained during from eight to twelve months' rough campaigning must necessarily be a better training than any they could have obtained at home. Those who have survived the ordeal of war are presumably men of good physique. Why, therefore, should not an effort be made to obtain a number of these trained men? A correspondent, himself an Indian officer of high rank, says he has among his own personal friends now at the front at least five who would make excellent Indian officers. They are men of good family, and are doing duty as non-commissioned officers and troopers with the Imperial Yeomanry. We are quite with him when he says that these are the sort of officers the Indian Army wants, and an attempt might well be made to secure them before they become scattered. Lord Roberts has the highest opinion of the Colonial corps and the Imperial Yeomanry. His lordship would no doubt without much difficulty be able to lay his hands on any number of eligible candidates. It would be a pity if any foolish adherence to the present regulations governing appointments to the Staff Corps were to rob India of the services of the men who are required. We have never liked the present system of appointment, and the more we see of it the less it recommends itself. The Government of India now has a chance of securing a large contingent of trained soldiers of the best stamp. We quite endorse what our correspondent says:—"To run on stereotyped lines at a moment like the present would be a form of insanity which no argument could justify or excuse."

Mr. Murray Guthrie, M.P., is dissatisfied with the evidence which he gave before the Royal Commission on Military Hospitals in South Africa, and he therefore embodies his criticisms in a rather slashing article in the Nineteenth Century. He does not criticise the Cape Town, Naauwpoort, De Aar, Kimberley, or Driefontein hospitals, and has hearty praise for the Yeomanry hospital at Driefontein. He adds particulars concerning the now famous eight wounded men left on the platform at Bloemfontein for nine hours, and has a great deal to say about the inadequacy of the arrangements. In regard to disease, he has been led to the conclusion that the epidemic was brought about by the want of sanitary precautions, overcrowding, mixing of cases, and lack of doctors, nurses and orderlies. It is painful to read his account of No. 8 General Hospital, which he likens to a whitened sepulchre, with its rows of neat white tents and marquees, containing a mass of foul disease. "They all did their best—doctors, sisters, and orderlies." Among many other things, Mr. Guthrie cites the following facts:—The Irish hospital had 98 patients and only equipment for 50, and there was no fresh milk, though over 50 cases were enteric. The Racecourse Hospital had 265 patients—95 of them being fever cases—and it possessed 130 blankets, 120 cots, no spare mattresses, 50 pillows, and 40 sheets. Like accounts are given of the 14th Brigade Field Hospital and some others. He suggests that in any future campaign one or more sanitarians of high scientific attainments should be appointed to advise the military authorities. Mr. Guthrie devotes a good deal of attention to the method of supply by civilians, and he asks if it was necessary: "Would the supply ever have been forthcoming if the Army Medical officers had been left to themselves? Either more initiative was wanted on their part, or more power to be given to them to requisition and pay for what they required. It should not be left to the chance intervention of a self-constituted body of civilians to supply the hospitals with necessities. I do not believe that it was lack of power that prevented the authorities from securing supplies locally. Had the P.M.O. asked the Commander-in-Chief for this power, supposing he did not already possess it, would it have been refused? Surely not, as it was given when asked for to private individuals." In conclusion, Mr. Guthrie argues that the deficiencies were due to lack of foresight, and that the blame rests on the heads of the Medical Department in South Africa: "Had the Royal Army Medical Corps had at headquarters some man of capacity and determination who would have grasped the whole problem and worked it out in time, I believe there would have been no occasion for a Royal Commission." We cannot accept without further testimony all that Mr. Guthrie says, but we feel it to be right to reproduce his facts and impressions, and we hope some evidence to the contrary may speedily be forthcoming.

On and after October 1, the dépôt duties of the Royal Field Artillery will no longer be entirely carried out at Woolwich, but will be divided between the officers commanding the dépôts R.F.A., the brigade divisions, &c., being allotted for this purpose in seven groups. Each dépôt will carry out the arrangements for mobilisation, and deal with all invalids and time-expired men of the artillery attached to it. The dépôts will be thus distributed:—No. 1, Woolwich; No. 2, Glasgow; No. 3, Weedon; No. 4, Bristol; No. 5, Dublin; No. 6, Seaford; and No. 7, Woolwich. The promotion of non-commissioned officers above the rank of sergeant and of artificers will continue to be made for the present by the administrative officer, Woolwich, who will also arrange as heretofore absorption, &c., as mentioned in the R.A. Standing Orders, section 2 (3b). It cannot be said that the arrangement is a particularly simple one, but it remains to be seen how it will work in practice. A glance at the distribution pages in the "Army List" will show at once how difficult it will be for the public to fathom the mysteries of the new organisation. Even with the aid of the key to batteries, it is no easy matter finding the name of an officer of the Royal Field Artillery. Search is not helped by the fact that no order is maintained. The batteries in Group I. are the 13th, 67th, and the 69th. Those in Group XLVI. the 25th, 58th, and 12th. It may be imagined what an amount of confusion will be created by such a general mixture of units.

Both at Aldershot and Salisbury Plain orders have been issued for the permanent huts which it is proposed to erect at those stations to be got ready with all possible despatch, so that they may be available for the accommodation of troops in the winter. From this it is evident that there is no immediate prospect of a disembodiment of the Militia. Nor would such a step be at all desirable. The rank and file of the Militia have responded to the call of duty most creditably. It would be a poor return if they were launched on the labour market at a time when it would be difficult for most of them to obtain employment. Arrangements might be made by which a certain proportion of the men would be allowed to return to their homes if they desired to do so; but it would be manifestly unfair to disband the whole force on any fixed date, as it would necessarily entail great hardships in the case of married men with families. We are glad to learn that the authorities are anxious to keep these considerations in view, appreciating as they do the excellent reports which come from all districts of the behaviour of the Militia units generally during the embodiment.

THE PAY OF RESERVE OFFICERS.

The Queen has approved a Royal Warrant to amend the regulations for the issue of outfit, allowance, and gratuities to retired officers and other persons specially employed as officers at times of national emergency. The following substitutions are to be made in the warrant for the pay and non-effective pay of the Army, with effect from Oct. 1, 1899:—

"601 A.—An officer who retires with retired pay or gratuity, if specially taken into employment during a national emergency, or serving with the embodied Militia, shall be granted any increase of retired pay or gratuity for which his further service (excluding any period for which he draws retired pay) may qualify him. This shall not apply to officers who draw pay under Art. 488 B.

"601 B.—An officer, whether of the Reserve or not, specially taken into employment during a national emergency shall, upon ceasing to draw full pay, be entitled to a gratuity of £100, and after the first twelve months of service, a further gratuity of £50 for each year of service at home, and £100 for each year of service abroad, portions of a year being calculated at the same rate, and subject to the following conditions:—1. That the officer serves for the full period of his engagement, or of the emergency in respect of which he is employed, unless a shorter period is specially approved by the Secretary of State. 2. The gratuity shall not be given to an officer who obtains an increase of pension or gratuity under Art. 601 A or to an officer paid under Art. 488 B. 3. The following officers are eligible, provided that they fulfil the above conditions—Re-employed retired officers, officers of embodied Militia except those of the permanent staff, officers of auxiliary forces employed upon Army service, ex officers or civilians appointed to military positions in Imperial forces or in Colonial forces, paid at the Imperial Army rates.

The following will be substituted for para. 675:—

"An officer who has retired from the Army or from the Auxiliary forces, and is taken into employment with the Regular forces during a time of national emergency will be granted, in aid of his outfit, a sum not exceeding £100. This rule does not apply to officers who are at the time of re-employment upon the effective establishment of the Army."

"In respect of 'ex-officers or civilians appointed to military positions in Imperial forces' mentioned in par. 3 of 601 B above, an instruction from the Secretary for War states:—'Officers employed in the Reserve Reserve regiments or in the Imperial Yeomanry or proceeding with Volunteers upon active service are included amongst those entitled to the gratuity under the above conditions. A gratuity due under the above regulations will be issued by the paymaster or agent who makes the final payment of full pay to the officer concerned, without special authority.'

MILITIAMEN AND EMPLOYMENT.—The Secretary for War has directed that the provisions of the War Office letter of March 31, relating to furloughs for Militiamen to enable them to take part in harvesting work, may be extended to any men whose services are urgently required by employers of labour. The total number of furloughs granted for all purposes must not, however, exceed 50 per cent. of each unit; and the conditions laid down in the War Office letter referred to will be applicable to all.

REVISED ESTABLISHMENTS.—It is announced that the establishments of regiments of cavalry of the Line and of batteries of horse and field artillery have been fixed as follows:—Regiments of cavalry at home on the higher establishment, 696 officers and men, 459 riding horses, and six draught horses; on the higher establishment with extra squadrons, 888 officers and men, 593 riding horses, and eight draught horses; on the lower establishment, 638 officers and men, 357 riding horses, and six draught horses; in the colonies, 593 officers and men, 427 riding horses, and six draught horses (dépôt at home, 114 officers and men and 50 riding horses); in Egypt, 488 officers and men, 355 riding horses, and six draught horses (dépôt the same as for a regiment in the colonies); in India, 626 officers and men and 525 riding horses. Battery of Royal Horse Artillery on the higher (home) establishment, 169 officers and men, 56 riding horses, six guns, four waggons, and 62 draught horses; on the lower (home) establishment, 155 officers and men, 40 riding horses, six guns, three waggons, and 44 draught horses; field battery on the higher (home) establishment, 166 officers and men, 23 riding horses, six guns, four waggons, and 60 draught horses; on the lower (home) establishment, 141 officers and men, 20 riding horses, six guns, three waggons, and 40 draught horses.

Army Foreign.

The autumn parade of the Guards Regiment in Berlin took place on Saturday in brilliant weather. The Empress was present on horseback in a white habit, and wore the regimental insignia of her Majesty's cuirassiers. The Emperor wore a general's uniform and carried a field-marshal's baton. Before the review began the infantry formed into a square and the Emperor presented the regiments with new colours which were consecrated on the 30th ult. After the inspection, which lasted nearly an hour, the troops marched past, the infantry leading, followed by the cavalry and artillery. The Jaegers for China also participated in the parade with all the colours of the expeditionary force. The Emperor personally led the escort conveying the colours and standards back to the Berlin Palace. The Crown Prince has been promoted to the rank of lieutenant. Major-General Frank Russell, of the British Army, was present at a banquet given after the parade, he having gone to Berlin to pay his respects to the Emperor on appointment as Colonel of the 1st (Royal) Dragoons.

The autumn manoeuvres of the French Army are this year to be on a very extended scale. The force, which will comprise over 100,000 men, will, in fact, be the largest which has ever been mobilised in the country in time of peace. General Brugère, Generalissimo of the French Army, will have command of this force, which will comprise ninety-six battalions of infantry, eighty-four batteries of artillery, and eighty squadrons of cavalry. The manoeuvres are to be held in the vicinity of Chartres, and the operations will extend from to-day until the 20th inst., when the President will review the troops at the village of Amilly, about six kilometres to the west of the town mentioned. The manoeuvres are to be divided into three periods. As the force comprises four Army Corps and two divisions of Cavalry, from to-day to the 10th inst., the forces will operate against one another. General Lonnos and the 4th Army Corps will operate against General Dunop and the 10th Army Corps, whilst General de Longueval and the 5th Army Corps will have as their opponents the 9th Army Corps, the commander of which is General Tanchot. On the 11th the 4th and 10th Army Corps will unite with the 1st division of Cavalry, and under the command of General de Negrier will for two days engage with the 5th Cavalry Division and the 5th and 9th Army Corps, whose commander will be General Lucas. Then General Brugère, the Generalissimo, will take over the command of the whole force, and the combined manoeuvres will terminate on the 18th.

The Italian Army manoeuvres have been in progress since Saturday last, and will be brought to a close on Wednesday next. The Genoa division of the 4th Army Corps operates in the upper valley of the Bormida. The troops consist of the 43rd and 44th infantry regiments forming the Forlì brigade, the 83rd and 84th infantry regiments forming the Venice brigade, the 12th regiment of rifles (bergsaglieri), two squadrons of the Caserta cavalry regiment, one brigade of the 4th field artillery, one company of the 1st regiment of engineers, a half medical, and a half commissariat section. Troops belonging to the 5th Army Corps, which comprises the divisions of Verona and Padua, manoeuvre among the Berici and Euganei hills. The Padua division concentrated at Montebello yesterday. It is now confronted by the Verona division, which has concentrated at St. Bonifacio after having manoeuvred in the neighbourhood of St. Giovanni, Ilarione, Chiampo.

The reinstatement in the Army of ex-Colonel Picquart, so confidently predicted by his partisans, is unlikely to be an accomplished fact for some time to come. General André, the Minister of War, is understood to be resolutely opposed to the measure. Great efforts were made to induce him to give M. Picquart the colonelcy of the 72nd Regiment of the Line, rendered vacant by the recent promotion of Colonel Bizot to the rank of general, but it is now certain that M. Picquart will not obtain the post.

Army Personal.

It has been stated several times lately that Lord Wolseley is in bad health. As Colonel Lonsdale Hale says truly, in a letter addressed by him to the St. James' Gazette, the sufferings of Job were a trifle compared to those of the Commander-in-Chief, who, according to report, has been during his tenure of office the victim of every mortal disease known to the medical profession, "and yet, strange to say, though any one of these diseases is enough to finish off speedily any man, all their united strength has not been able to knock Lord Wolseley out of time. Three years ago he had a tough struggle with the ordinary and common enemy the 'flu,' but he got the best of the encounter." We can endorse Colonel Hale's statement that his lordship is "both vigorous in body and alert in mind, and further, that into any question of retirement that may possibly arise, ill-health will assuredly not enter as one of the factors." In deference to views of the two Houses of Parliament, it has been ruled that the command of the Army shall be held in future for five years only. Lord Wolseley will have held his high office for the prescribed term on November 1, and it is strictly in accordance with the decision arrived at previous to his appointment, and on these grounds only, we are pleased to say, that the question of his successor has arisen. There has been so much misunderstanding that the Army will rejoice to learn that the distinguished field-marshal vacates his position in excellent health, and with the respect and good wishes of all who have been associated with him during his tenure of office, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding. The enterprising journalist is very much to the fore just now, and to that fact is to be attributed all the groundless insinuations as to failing health and misunderstandings between the Commander-in-Chief and those who have been brought more closely in touch with him.

At the next meeting of the Portsmouth Town Council Major W. T. Dupree will propose that a sword of honour be presented to Lord Roberts at the conclusion of the war in South Africa. The Field-Marshal is already a Freeman of the borough. At the Bath City Council on Tuesday a letter was read from Lord Roberts stating that he considered it a great honour to be presented with the Freedom of the City of Bath, a city in which he took a great interest, and which he should henceforth look forward to visiting with increased pleasure. Lord Roberts received his early education at Clifton, where his father long resided after his retirement.

Lord Ampthill has been offered and has accepted the Governorship of Madras, vice Sir Arthur Havelock, who retires at the end of the year. Lord Ampthill was born in 1869, and succeeded his father, the first Baron—better known as Lord Odo Russell—in 1884. Lord Ampthill is a familiar figure at the Colonial Office, where he has been Mr. Chamberlain's private secretary since June, 1897. Prior to that date he had been assistant private secretary, and in that capacity was in the thick of all the work and excitement attendant upon the Jameson raid. He is a man of fine physique. When at Oxford he held the unique distinction of being President both of the Union and of the Boat Club, and for three years he rowed in the Eight. His wife is a daughter of the late Earl Beauchamp, and sister of the present Earl. In the county of Bedford, where the family estates are situated, his lordship is a J.P. and a prominent Freemason.

Lieut.-General Sir Charles Warren, R.E., replying to an inquiry on the part of the Press Association as to the truth of a report, emanating from New York, that he is to succeed to the command of the troops in Canada, has telegraphed "I know nothing on subject of telegram you quote."

Lieut.-General Sir Frederick Carrington arrived at Bulawayo on Tuesday.

Lieut.-General R. S. S. Baden-Powell arrived at Capetown yesterday at 6 a.m. He was received at the railway station by the Mayor and Town Councillors, and despite the early hour there were thousands of people there to greet him. The crowd carried him on their shoulders to Government House, where the gallant General received a most cordial greeting from Sir Alfred Milner.

A paragraph has gone the round of the Press during the last few days to the effect that Lieut.-General Sir Alfred Gaselee, on the termination of hostilities in China, will return to India, "when on his arrival he is to be given the appointment of Quartermaster-General at Headquarters, which has become vacant by the retirement from that post of Lieut.-General A. R. Badcock." Now, as a matter of fact, General Gaselee has been Quartermaster-General in India since Lieut.-General Badcock came home at the end of 1898. General Badcock's period of leave has expired, and General Gaselee has consequently been confirmed in the appointment, Brigadier-General G. Henry, R.E., acting for him in his absence; but it is doubtful whether he will resume the duties of the position. He certainly will not if the difficulties in China are protracted, for already he has claims on the consideration of the Government and these will be strengthened should there be further fighting in China.

Major-General Sir Reginald Wingate was on Thursday presented with the freedom of the Burgh of Dunbar. The presentation was made by the Provost in the presence of a distinguished company, the Burgess ticket being enclosed in a silver casket. The Sirdar, in returning thanks, said that his selection as a freeman of a burgh intimately associated with the great deeds of the past was a matter of special gratification to him. That he should have been enabled to deal a blow at Mahdism was a stroke of good fortune which he owed to Lord Kitchener. He had under his command as fine a body of troops as one could ever wish to see, and a selection of British and Egyptian officers in whom the most complete reliance could be placed. They entered upon the last fray with their life-long enemy with no misgivings, and he did not doubt but that the training of British officers in the Egyptian Army in fighting against a brave and wily enemy like the Dervishes stood many of them in good stead in dealing with their slim brethren in South Africa. The havoc wrought by the Dervishes during long years of tyrannical oppression and misgovernment would take long to obliterate, but with the co-operation of the Khedive, the wise counsels of Lord Cromer, and the generous support of this country, the Soudan would, he did not doubt, become as prosperous in its way as the Egypt of the present day. The Sirdar has presented to Dunbar two proclamations—one by the Mahdi—found in the Khalifa's tent.

Major-Gen. Sir William Gatacre is defended in the Daily News by the "Boys of His Brigade," who have sent a letter to our contemporary. This communication fully endorses the view we have all along taken. The writers say:—

"We wish to see a good word published for one of our best generals, who has been criticised (more or less) by all. If he had only had fair play from the first, there is no doubt he would have been the first general in the Free State. Where is there another general who had forty miles of line to guard, and over thirty miles of front to watch, with barely 5,000 men, no cavalry, and hardly any artillery? The part he was at was one of the worst spots in the country, full of rebels, who pretended to be loyalists, but who carried all sorts of news to the Boers, who were about twenty miles from our camp. . . . One of the most brilliant movements of the war—the saving of Bethulie Bridge—was made by Sir William. After he got to Springfontein, owing to leaving men on the line of communication, he had next to no troops with him, otherwise the Royal Irish would never have been compelled to surrender at Reddersberg, which we all think was the cause of his recall to England."

Major-General G. Upton Prior, commanding at the Curragh, has assumed command of the troops in Ireland in the absence of the Duke of Connaught, on leave in England.

Colonel H. Barron, from the School of Gunnery, Shoeburyness, succeeds Colonel F. F. Ditmas as Colonel on the Staff Commanding Royal Artillery, Thames District. Colonel Ditmas came some time ago under the operations of the age rule, but was retained on the active list in consequence of the Thames District Mobilisation.

Colonel J. S. Young, retired list, late Commissariat and Transport Staff, has been granted permission by the Queen to accept and wear the Insignia of the 3rd Class of the Osmanieh, conferred upon him by the Khedive of Egypt in recognition of his services to the British and Egyptian sick and wounded in the Soudan Campaign of 1898.

Colonel Neville Chamberlain, I.S.C., the new Inspector-General of the Royal Irish Constabulary, paid an informal visit to the depot at Dublin on Wednesday, and inspected the men. In the course of a brief address he said that he was quite unprepared for the splendid physique and the perfect carriage and bearing of the men he had seen on parade that day, and for the style and manner in which they handled their arms. He was highly favoured by having been placed in command of such a splendid force, and he assured them that, no matter where he might be, he would ever do his utmost for them and theirs.

The hon. colonelcy of the 4th Batn. Leinster Regiment is vacant by the death at Ostend on the 31st ult. of the Earl of Portarlington. His lordship, who was born in 1838, was in early years a subaltern in the Scots Fusilier Guards. He was appointed to the colonelcy of the 4th Leinster Regiment, February 24, 1894.

Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. N. de C. Dalrymple-Hamilton, 3rd Batn. Scots Guards, has now been finally approved as Unionist candidate for Midlothian at the General Election.

Lieut.-Colonel Brake, mentioned so favourably in Colonel Willcocks' despatch from Kumasi of the 3rd inst., is Captain H. E. J. Brake, D.S.O., R.A., Commandant 2nd Batn. Central Africa Regiment. Of him Colonel Willcocks writes that he is a "most reliable soldier." Other officers mentioned by Colonel Willcocks in the same despatch are "Captains Gordon, 1st Batn. Gordon Highlanders, very gallant behaviour. Following deserving of special mention:—Captains Bryant, 1st Batn. Manchester Regiment; Reeve, 1st Batn. Leinster Regiment; and McKinnon, 1st Batn. Derbyshire Regiment; Lieut. Halfpenny, Southern Nigeria; Russell, Private Secretary; Sergt.-Major Slattery, 1st Batn. Cameronians."

Captain C. R. B. Owen, R.A., on return from active service in South Africa, has been reappointed an Instructor at the Ordnance College, Woolwich.

Captain F. W. Marshall, Reserve of Officers, doing duty with details of the King's Own Scottish Borderers, has been appointed acting D.A.A.G. Belfast District.

Captain W. H. W. Steward, Rifle Brigade who died on the 30th ult. at Vlakfontein of wounds received in action, was the last surviving son of the late Major-General H. H. Steward, formerly of the Queen's Bays.

Much sympathy is expressed at Woolwich for General and Lady Maurice in their grief for the loss of their third son by drowning at Cassel the other day.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, Sept. 1.

Lord Roberts telegraphed from Belfast that he had to-day, under the provisions of the Royal Warrant of July 4 last, issued the proclamation announcing that the Transvaal will henceforth form part of her Majesty's dominions.

In another message the Commander-in-Chief stated that Sir Redvers Buller, marching from Helvetia, en route for Lydenburg, was encamped on the north bank of Crocodile River. The enemy's rearguard retired before him without offering resistance. A small column of Gen. Baden-Powell's force, under Col. Plumer, had driven off a small commando under Commandant Pretorius, east of the Pienaars River, capturing 1,000 cattle, 31 waggons, 28 prisoners, and 90 Martini rifles. The enemy derailed another supply train, five miles south of Klip River, early this morning. Two men were killed, one wounded, and 35 taken prisoners. The engine was blown up, and 13 trucks burnt. A party of Brabant's Horse from Klip River Station at once followed the enemy, drove them into the neighbouring hills, and recovered all the prisoners. Lord Roberts added that over 1,700 of our men who were prisoners at Nooitgedacht had come into camp. The Boers kept and took to Barberton 17 officers and 35 non-commissioned officers and men of the Yeomanry, the latter because, being able to pay for any extra food they required, the Boers said they must be in the possession of officers.

Sir Redvers Buller moved 14 miles north-westward along the Lydenburg road and crossed the Crocodile River to Badfontein.

The Times published a telegram from its Mafeking correspondent giving particulars of Lord Methuen's pursuit of De Wet. It appears that Lord Methuen fought three successful actions, made several forced marches, captured a gun and 16 waggon-loads of supplies, liberated 60 British prisoners, and took 12 Boers. After a long march Lord Methuen thought he had cut off De Wet's only road of retreat, but the withdrawal of Gen. Baden-Powell from Olifant's Nek enabled the Boer leader to escape. Lord Methuen, when the telegram was despatched, was resting his men and awaiting reinforcements at Mafeking after continuous marching and fighting of engagements since May 14. Gen. Carrington was returning to Rhodesia to command the forces there, as it was reported that there was a Boer commando close to Rhodesian territory.

A Pretoria telegram of the 30th ult. described the recent operations of Gen. Baden-Powell for preventing a junction between Botha and De Wet as having been eminently successful. By a series of manoeuvres and hard marches he interposed between Grobler's and De Wet's commandos, and summoned Grobler to surrender. Grobler answered the summons in person, and at the date of the telegram the negotiations were still proceeding. The Boers lost heavily during the operations.

The capture of Olivier, his three sons, and twenty-four other Boers after the attack on Winburg was effected, it turns out, by eight Queenstown (S.A.) Volunteers, who concealed themselves in a donga and never allowed the enemy to know their real strength.

Before the Hospitals Commission at Bloemfontein to-day Major Bedford deposed that there was a shortage of tent field hospitals, and that it was most difficult to meet requirements as the operations extended. When the army landed everything was practically upset.

Sunday, Sept. 2.

Lord Roberts, in a telegram from Belfast, reported various incidents in the guerilla warfare into which the resistance of the Boers appears now to have degenerated. Col. Plumer, on a date not named, had a slight engagement with the enemy at a place called a Rooikop, in the neighbourhood of Warmbaths. He captured 100 rifles, 40,000 rounds of ammunition, seven prisoners, 350 head of cattle, and three waggons loaded with supplies. His casualties were seven wounded.

Major-Gen. Hart, on the 31st ult., encountered a body of Boers who were endeavouring to destroy the main Johannesburg waterworks, about 10 miles south-west of the town. He drove them from a strong position, and compelled them to retire in confusion. His casualties were nine wounded. A column under Col. Bradley, North Staffordshire Regiment, encountered a party of the enemy near Modderfontein, south of Krugersdorp, on Aug. 29, and inflicted considerable loss on them. The British lost three killed, six wounded, and two missing. A column made up of 500 men of the 3rd Cavalry Brigade and a portion of the Colonial Division has marched from Zeerust to of Krugersdorp through a very disaffected district, and had several engagements with different bodies of Boers, who suffered heavily. Our casualties were, in all, about 60.

Monday, Sept. 3.

In a despatch sent off late to-night, Lord Roberts said that Gen. Buller's casualties during his move towards Lydenburg were one man killed and 14 wounded. As Gen. Buller found the enemy holding a strong position in his immediate front, which he could not turn, Lord Roberts sent a column during the morning along the direct Belfast-Dulstroom road to assist him. Gen. Hamilton drove off a few of the enemy who opposed him, and was at the time the Commander-in-Chief wrote at Swart kopjes. Lord Roberts also reported another successful engagement fought on Sunday near Warmbaths by Col. Plumer, who destroyed 12 of the enemy's waggons, captured a large number of animals and a considerable quantity of stores, besides taking 24 prisoners. The Hospitals Commission visited the hospital at Bloemfontein and took evidence.

Tuesday, Sept. 4.

A brief but heroic episode of the war has been the defence of Ladybrand by 150 British against about 3,000 Boers. On Sunday morning Commandant Fouries demanded the surrender of the garrison, and replied to Capt. Grove's refusal by a bombardment with 10 guns. Attempts were made to drive the defenders from their positions by rifle attack, but they were gallantly repulsed. From sunrise to-day heavy small-arm firing was maintained, and the silence of the artillery led watchers on the Basuto hills to think that ammunition for the big guns had run short. But at 10 o'clock the enemy were seen making preparations for departure, and a telegram from Cape Town brought the gratifying intelligence that the siege has been raised.

Wednesday, Sept. 5.

The official proclamation of the annexation of the Transvaal was published at Pretoria.

Thursday, Sept. 6.

No news of importance received from any source.

Friday, Sept. 7.

Despatch issued from Lord Roberts, dated Belfast, Wednesday, received at War Office during the morning. Gen. Paget stated to have had engagement with the enemy near Warmbaths, in which one man was killed, nine were wounded, and two taken prisoners, including Surgeon Foy, captured while attending a wounded man. Paget had collected and sent into Pretoria between 4,000 and 5,000 head of cattle.

Mr. Kruger is understood to be still at Nelspruit. A telegram published to-day gave Mr. Steyn the credit for having stiffened the back of his brother in exile.

A Central News telegram stated that Gen. Botha continues stubbornly to oppose Sir Redvers Buller, the enemy having apparently concentrated his forces. Heliographic courtesies were being exchanged between the two camps. It is confirmed that the Boers declare they must fight on in spite of the annexation of the Transvaal because their orders are to do so.

Total casualties since the beginning of the war up to the end of last week:—

	Officers.	N.C.O. & Men
Killed	283	2,655
Died of wounds ...	83	758
Missing and prisoners (excluding those who have been recovered or died in captivity)	45	1,007
Prisoners died in captivity	1	85
Died of disease ...	148	5,332
Accidental deaths ...	3	95
Sent home as invalids ...	1,213	27,937
	1,776	37,869

Total Losses (exclusive of sick and wounded men now in British Hospitals in South Africa) ... 39,645

In reference to previous orders refusing ration and messing allowances for men of local irregular forces invalided from South Africa, it has been decided that these men may receive rations when they are in barracks or the ordinary ration allowance of 6d. per day while they are on leave in this country. Messing allowance of 3d. per day may be issued in addition in both cases.

MILITIA REFORM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—There is one question which I trust the Government in its proposals for the reorganisation of our military system will not lose sight of, viz., the desirability of employing from time to time Militia units for an extended period, say, six months. I am sure it would tend to improve greatly the efficiency of the force. Regiments or battalions might be allowed to volunteer for this six months' embodiment, and a roster could be kept of units thus applying. If this idea were favourably considered the result would be in every way beneficial, for those corps which had more recently undergone this practical course of training would be available, if required, for active or Colonial service. I can answer for it that many regiments and battalions would willingly submit to the ordeal, and it would render the Militia far more of a military reality if some such arrangement were made for its proper preparation for the work it is required to perform in emergencies. I would fix the number of units to be trained at three artillery, and say six or eight infantry, annually. The money thus spent would be well laid out, for we might then reckon on some twenty-five units, more or less, ready to take their place in the fighting line if necessary, or at any rate provide Colonial garrisons. The officers during the six months might be required to place themselves under military instructors, and it could be stipulated that any such units as showed a certain proportion of officers who had qualified in military subjects should be considered fit for the six months' embodiment. A system of this kind would lighten the mass and produce a higher standard of efficiency all round. Our Regular Army is so small that some such arrangement is desirable, in order that our Militia may be made more of a reserve than it is at present. I submit this proposal for your consideration and approval, feeling sure that it will commend itself as a practical step towards a betterment of our system of defence.

A MILITIA C. O.

THE ASHANTI REBELLION.

Col. Willecocks is putting into force in a thorough-going way his treatment for the social disorders of Ashanti. His headquarters reached Kumasi on the last day of August, accompanied by 5,000 carriers. On the previous day a detached column destroyed a deserted war camp to the south-west of the capital, and simultaneously another force was diverted to attack the town of Oseja. An hour's fighting, culminating in a bayonet charge, sufficed to clear out the enemy. Lieut. Burton of the 5th Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers, was killed in the final rush, and Lieut.-Col. Brake, R.A., who commanded, was wounded in the course of the engagement. A concentration having been effected at Kumasi, excursions were made daily for the destruction of the elaborate and formidable stockades, which extended from a mile to a mile and a half round the fort. The gallant Lord Burroughs has been appointed president of the court-martial which is to try the ringleaders of the rebellion.

A sum of £250,000 is to be spent in extending the plant at Woolwich Arsenal.

WOOLMER, near Aldershot, has been selected as a site for hut quarters.

In future on all ranges where iron targets are still in use, they are invariably to be laid down flat at the conclusion of the day's firing.

THE Staff College at Camberley, which has been closed since Christmas last, on account of the war in South Africa, will be reopened at the beginning of January.

THE letter of the Chaplain-General to the Forces appealing for help to promote Soldiers' Institutes in South Africa has already produced £606 since its appearance on the 14th ult.

INSTRUCTIONS have been given that, in the event of troops being ordered to stations where enteric fever is prevalent, principal medical officers of districts are to inform the principal medical officer of Netley Hospital as to the number of men willing to be inoculated as a protection against the disease.

THE accounts of the Queen's Military Widow's Fund (India) for 1899 have reached us. From these it appears that Rs. 38,150 were paid out in awards during the year, as against an income from all sources of Rs. 52,837. The fund has a balance in hand of six lakhs worth of Government stock.

DOVER SOLDIERS' HOME.—Major H. J. Elverson, 12, Victoria Park, Dover, writes:—"We all owe much to our gallant soldiers, who for nearly a year have been bravely fighting our battles for us in South Africa, and many of whom we hope will soon be returning to their native land and occupying our garrison towns. Will the public show their gratitude by subscribing to the building fund of the Dover Soldiers' Home? The sum of £1,340 has already been subscribed, but £660 is still required to complete the purchase of the building now rented by the committee and so make the home rent free."

ARMY ORGANISATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Your kindness in inserting my letter anent dress in a recent issue, albeit you do not support my recommendations, emboldens me to address you again. But I wish it understood that I suggested a practical working kit for every-day wear, and that I consider that the present full dress must be retained for ceremonials, Sunday wear, furloughs, &c. The subject I now crave your permission to speak of is drill and instruction. There are very excellent drill books for cavalry, artillery, and infantry, not altogether faultless, published by authority, and there is a book called the Queen's Regulations, which it would seem are not carefully read by our officers. Otherwise it is inconceivable that a campaign, of which the strategy has been so carefully planned and so successfully carried out, as that in South Africa, should be marred by so many gross (the word is mild) tactical blunders. It is too soon to mention dates and places, but it is maddening to think of one's dear friends among the officers and the scarcely less well-loved brave non-commissioned officers and men, whose lives have been needlessly sacrificed—and why? Because cavalry horses have been starved; because guns have been placed in and with baggage columns, instead of with the rear-guard; because infantry have been led in column under fire; because defiles have been occupied before the neighbouring heights were crowned, or men have been allowed to go to sleep in the waggon they were supposed to guard! Of guns needlessly moved in action, of unreconnoitred advances, of battalions reported present minus whole companies, and other errors, it is unnecessary to speak—save to draw attention to the fact that in the courses of instructions followed by officers, or given annually by officers to their troops and companies, these very dangers are, have been, or should be, constantly pointed out with emphasis. Similar errors in manœuvres at home have also occurred, and in some instances have been severely noticed as a warning for the future.

Now, it is neither just nor useful to throw the blame for these regrettable incidents on the divisional and other high commanders. A general has a right to expect that the troop and company officers under his command should be acquainted with the elementary rules of tactics; and he cannot, even if he would, find time to instruct them in these matters when in front of the enemy. You yourself, sir, say in your issue of July 28, "the war has lasted too long." And I venture to say that the next war will last longer still if we do not put our military house in order. To do this it is not necessary to change the books of instruction provided for us by the military authorities, it is only necessary to intelligently follow the rules laid down in them. It is in the regiment and at the dépôt that instruction must be given. Without instruction in time of peace you will not produce good regimental officers; and if you have not good regimental officers you will not obtain good staff officers either. The system of troop and company training, were it carried out in the spirit of the instructions, is sufficient. But in how many regiments is the troop or company leader allowed a "permissive" independence? Why, in many regiments the whole programme of the field training is made up in the orderly room or office, and handed, cut and dry, to the troop or company leader! Woe betide him if he dare to diverge one straw's breadth from his programme! "Il n'y a pas de mauvais régiments, il y a seulement des mauvais colonels!" said the hero of Lodi. Thus then do "les mauvais colonels"—good, honest brave fellows—lead their officers in leading strings, which they must perforce take off when active service commences. They thus produce officers afraid to take the initiative, and who only learn to do so after one or two lessons writ in blood, if not shame. The writer of these lines, brought up himself in this same vicious system for nearly a quarter of a century, does not pretend that he would have done any better than those whose errors he deprecates. But those who have worn the shoe know where it pinches.

Another crying evil which should be taken firmly in hand is the faulty or lax system in vogue at some of the dépôts of infantry regiments. I could point out, per contra, a dépôt in a cathedral city where a good system, worked for years by good adjutants, has produced a corps which has covered its grand old county and itself with glory at Ladysmith and everywhere in South Africa. But in how many dépôts is sufficient care bestowed on the choice of officers sent to instruct the recruit? The dépôt is the place where the recruit, at his most impressionable age, receives his military instruction. As far as the physical part goes, this instruction is good. But what can the recruit think of officers who consider the dépôt merely as a good place at which to repose from the cares and fatigues of service abroad, who look upon even weekly lectures as a bore, who seize every opportunity of shirking parade?

I was told some years back by a distinguished officer on the staff, since retired, that the time for the abolition of the post of D.A.A.G. for instruction had come. I did not agree with him. I venture to say that the number of officers for instruction should be considerably increased, and that great care should be exercised in their choice. We possess an army which is starved as to its great departments—medical, transport, supply—for economy's sake. Therefore it is all the more necessary that we should possess a large and well-instructed corps of officers. Moreover, a sufficient number of such officers should be with their regiments in peace time to carry on efficiently the troop and company leading. Our troop, battery, and company officers have done glorious things during this present campaign. But if they wish to compete in the future successfully with the troops of other European Powers, led by officers better educated, in a military sense, than themselves, they must know something more than how to die! The remedy really lies with themselves. It is easier to abuse the War Office, or General This or General That, than to tell the truth to oneself. You, sir, may again not here agree with my words, but the matters touched on are of more importance than the shape of a hat or the depth of a pocket; and I pray you to print them. The cat to be belled must be touched but a glove. I shall doubtless displease my friends Pride, Arrogancy, Self-Conceit, Worldly-Glory, and others, who will be much offended at my making such a fool of myself as to wade through the valley of humility. But I think I will make the bell on the cat's neck tinkle. C. E. D. B.

A MILITIA subaltern with over two years' service is required for duty with the Sierra Leone Company, R.A. The engagement is for two years, with regimental pay, hammock and colonial allowances, and coast pay at 7s. 6d. per day.

OPERATIONS AT DOVER.

Combined naval and military operations took place at Dover, on Wednesday, in the presence of the Commander-in-Chief, with a view of testing the efficiency of the local defences. About 7 a.m. three destroyers were seen off Shakespeare Cliff, and the new battery of 6in. guns opened fire. The destroyers proved to be the Albatross, Ariel, and Cynthia, which were later in the day joined by the Salmon, Mermaid, Avon, Bittern, and Cheerful. All the land batteries came into action as they got the range, and for a time the heights between Shakespeare Cliff and the town, including Archcliff Fort, were alive with artillery fire. As the destroyers steamed round the Admiralty Pier and away to the eastward they were engaged by Langdon Battery, between the South Foreland and Dover Castle, and at one time they were fired upon from the batteries both to the east and west of the town. This pretty and picturesque spectacle was enjoyed by a large number of spectators. The destroyers next proceeded eastward along the coast to St. Margaret's, where a force was assumed to have been landed for the purpose of destroying Langdon Battery, one of the three new forts recently erected on the cliffs. The Earl of March, who was in command of the raiders, had as his force a squadron of 7th Dragoon Guards, two field batteries of artillery, the Royal Marines from Walmer, and the 3rd Batn. Royal Sussex Regiment, and 5th Batn. Connaught Rangers from Shorncliffe. The defending force was under Col. Lake, R.A. This consisted of some 2,000 Regular and Militia Artillery, also 6th Batn. Royal Fusiliers, 3rd Batn. Suffolk Regt., and 4th Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers. Some 25pr. and 40pr. guns of position on carriages were also taken to commanding positions on the cliffs. The operations began at 11 o'clock, and the scouts of both parties were very soon in touch. The advance of the enemy was rapid until the village of Swingate was reached, but at this place the defence held a strong position, the line of advance being commanded by three heavy guns. When the cease fire sounded the enemy had not been able to reach their objective. The Commander-in-Chief, who was accompanied by Sir Evelyn Wood, and Sir R. Harrison, watched the operations, and subsequently inspected the new Langdon Battery.

While in the fort the umpire's report was made on the operations. He considered that the success of the attack was impossible from the first, owing to the strength of the positions to be assailed. The criticism on the advance was to the effect that it was made in too open order, the line being too long to be safe in actual warfare. On the question of scouting, the necessity of further training was touched upon, an instance being given in which the attackers' cavalry scouts were going south-south-east, instead of west, which was the line of attack. It was urged that the scouts should be taught to find their direction by the sun. Lord Wolseley, while concurring in these criticisms, expressed general satisfaction with the way the operations had been carried out.

The Commander-in-Chief and his staff returned to London in the evening.

ARMY AND NAVY BOXING.

There was a large attendance at the Cranbrook Gymnasium, Aldershot, on Saturday last, the concluding day of the Army and Navy Boxing Championship Meeting. The meeting was throughout a great success, the competitions were stubbornly contested, the Royal Navy and Royal Marines winning the majority of the contests. Gen. Sir Montgomery Moore, commanding the district, distributed the prizes. The results of the final bouts were as follows:—

Officers, Middle-Weights.—Lieut. F. G. Tanqueray-Willame, R.M.A., defeated Capt. C. A. Booth, 5th Manchester Regiment.

Officers, Light-Weights.—Lieut. H. Peel-Ritchie, R.N., defeated Lieut. J. F. Hubbard, 3rd Grenadier Guards.

Rank and File, Feather-Weights.—Pte. A. Wheeler, 6th Royal Fusiliers, beat Pte. Holder, 3rd Royal Sussex Regiment.

Light-Weights.—Lance-Corpl. Sanders beat Pte. Reid, 4th Royal Dublin Fusiliers.

Middle-Weights.—A.B. J. Skinner, Pembroke, beat Pte. G. Roache, 3rd Grenadier Guards.

ERRATUM.

By a lapsus calami the week before last Col. Deane, C.B., was represented by THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE to be on his way "to Eupatoria" instead of "Pretoria," but as the paragraph in which the announcement appeared stated that the gallant officer had arrived in South Africa in connection with the business of the Imperial Yeomanry, the mistake would be self-evident to most readers. Some, however, have been inquiring why Col. Deane had changed his field of service from the Cape to the Crimea.

THE COLLAPSE OF PUBLIC SCHOOL EDUCATION.

By T. MILLER MAGUIRE, LL.D.

The utter collapse of British education all round, school education, secondary education, especially at so-called public schools, commercial, artistic, technical education, moral education, agricultural education, and military education is now admitted on all hands. The necessity for care and self-denial on the part of teachers, and for brain work instead of game work by scholars, is becoming a leading theme in our most Conservative journals, and a subject of conversation in the clubs.

The Times wrote a week ago that the old saying about Waterloo being "won in the playing fields of Eton has served its turn." But I proved in these columns years ago that Wellington never made any such remark, and that if he had made such a remark he would have spoken falsely, as not one in ten of the officers who won his battles for him in India, Portugal, Spain, or Belgium went to a public school or played any games except military games after the age of fourteen.

But the Times went on to say, "If Waterloo was won on playing fields, Colenso was lost there." Quite so; every English gentleman at Waterloo was as well educated relatively as the French or German officers, whether "crammed" or not, whether from high or low class or "form." In those days primary and secondary education was poor all round everywhere. Except Scotchmen, most privates were unable to write. People of the shopkeeping class were practically "no scholars." But since then the Continental people of every rank have been educated well, and so have our poorer folk relatively; they have improved immensely in general culture; while the intellectual powers of three-fourths of the students at our public schools are relatively stunted. They are grossly, scandalously ignorant at the age of eighteen, as a rule, and, but for crammers, either in special classes at schools or in private establishments, the majority of them could never apprehend or comprehend one paragraph out of three in any technical treatise military or civil. Verily it will be a good day for our race when "caps" and other distinctions in the "houses" of schools are tokens of skill in history, geography, essay writing or précis writing, rather than in football or cricket, which could be learned just as well and much more quickly, and under a higher moral environment, on village greens near ancestral homes.

The Morning Post of August 18 roundly abuses our Government educational mandarin for doing their best to make us ridiculous from an educational point of view at the Paris Exhibition, nor has it much hope for the future of our nation till these mandarin are all removed. Surely the Morning Post is Conservative enough, but it is most truly Conservative when it strives to put the preservation of our Imperial position above the exigencies of party.

For years in these columns many of us—alas! only too truly vores clamantes in deserto—have emphasised the dangers to our officers, and thence to all of us, of the lamentable neglect of what it most concerns us all to know which the educational programmes of the War Office and the Civil Service Commissioners have perpetuated and nourished.

To be ignorant of modern history, of our imperial conditions and of strategy, tactics, and our own literature was to succeed. To study these subjects carefully meant failure. They could be learned at public schools. They were well taught by "crammers," and crammers only, but a crammer was anathema and tabooed as far as it was safe to taboo him by society, by generals, and by the Times and Morning Post. Both these papers now admit that till the secondary schools adopt the system of the crammers and make learning of more importance than play, and select teachers because of their powers of imparting knowledge, and not because of their skill in games, it will go badly with our rising generation. In truth, society and the daily press have been rudely awakened of late, not only by THE WAR, but by the strain of American competition and German competition, and by our educational defeat at the Paris Exhibition, by all the best European states, and by the new United States and by old Japan. This humiliation cuts us to the quick. To be well thrashed in all that relates to our future as a commercial race by a "yellow race" seems sad indeed, almost as sad as to be caught napping and almost ruined by the Boer farmers at intervals. Yet others as well as myself have pointed out that all this would occur inevitably for the past fifteen years.

But we are glad that such a widely-circulated organ of public opinion as the Morning Post in a leading article tardily comes round to our side and sets forth our old warnings in a prominent position. It says:—

"How long will the British people be before they realise the importance of secondary education? Or, rather, how long will it be before the tide of public opinion forces the Government to recognise its importance? This is a question which it is difficult to answer, and we are more than ever persuaded that no good can come from waiting for the reply. All who are qualified to speak with special knowledge tell us that Great Britain is courting future disaster by refusing to establish a sufficient number of secondary schools to prepare her sons and daughters, not merely to take their proper place in the commercial and industrial struggle, but above all to understand and appreciate their duties as citizens of the Empire."

How long indeed? I have asked this question with iteration for twenty years, and have observed that for the past twelve years not only has there been no improvement, but that military education has become worse and worse yearly, especially preliminary military education, in spite of a splendid speech by Lord Salisbury. So powerful are our mandarin.

The Morning Post goes on to say:—

"Another consideration is one that comes to us with fresh force on the eve of a general election, when numerous people—excellent mechanics, it may be, and passable men of commerce—will give their votes in ignorance of the history of their country, and without that knowledge of its destinies which the school ought to provide. Both for political and moral, as well as for industrial and commercial, reasons we urge the Government to press forward the administration of the Board of Education Act, and to remove the national disgrace of our insufficiency of secondary schools."

I venture to assert that if this matter be left in the hands of either permanent public officials or the majority of public school managers, or of both, neither the remonstrances of the Morning Post, nor the warnings of Dr. Warre, nor the criticisms of an indignant public, will be of the least avail.

So deeply rooted are routine and prejudice in the minds of our governing folk that, notwithstanding the plainest evidence of the terrible consequence in war and in peace of our inefficient secondary education, the papers have contained many a letter deploring any movement in the direction of mens sana in corpore sano, and endeavouring to prove that a stupid, ignorant boy who, after being at school for ten years, cannot read or write, or spell, or translate any language, or ride, or box, or add up correctly, or solve one problem in Euclid or fence, or sing, is likely to be a worthy leader of his poorer fellow countrymen who can read well, write well, do accounts well, and ride, and box, and dance, and sing, and who know something about "the philosophy of common things." In other words, an idle, lazy, ignorant loafer, perfectly devoid of culture, genius, or manners at nineteen to twenty-five years of age, ought to get Government employment because his father sent him to a public school and because he can play cricket, and has £150 a year in his own right.

How different the views of the late Mr. Ruskin in his lecture to the Woolwich cadets, reproduced in "The Crown of Wild Olive":—

"Having, then, resolved that you will not waste recklessly, but earnestly use, these early days of yours, remember that all the duties of her children to England may be summed up in two words—industry and honour."

"I say first, industry, for it is in this that soldier youth are especially tempted to fail. Yet, surely, there is no reason, because your life may possibly be shorter than other men's, that you should therefore waste more recklessly the portion of it that is granted to you; neither do the duties of your profession, which require you to keep your bodies strong, in anywise involve the keeping of your minds weak. So far from that, the experience, the hardship, and the activity of a soldier's life render his powers of thought more accurate than those of other men; and while, for others, all knowledge is often little more than a means of amusement, there is no form of science which a soldier may not at some time or other find bearing on business of life and death."

"A young mathematician may be excused for languor in studying curves to be described only with a pencil; but not in tracing those which are to be described with a rocket."

"Your knowledge of a wholesome herb may involve the feeding of an army; and acquaintance with an obscure point of geography the success of a campaign."

"Never waste an instant's time, therefore; the sin of idleness is a thousandfold greater in you than in other youths; for the fates of those who will one day be under your command hang upon your knowledge; lost moments now will be lost lives then, and every instant which you carelessly take for play you buy with blood."

Ruskin was not paraphrasing Napoleon, but he might have had in mind unconsciously the latter's celebrated address to cadets a hundred years before.

I need scarcely say that I have no ill-will to, or jealousy of any public school; on the contrary, I reckon some of the public schoolmasters among my oldest and kindest friends, but the ablest of them admit that their present methods are ruinous to their scholars and to their own reputations. All technical teachers declare that it is almost impossible to specialise with public school boys, as their general education is so defective that they cannot follow an ordinary lecture illustrated by battle scenes or other examples of such "easy" subjects as tactics or military law. Yet these students are on the average nineteen years of age.

TRAINING AT ALDERSHOT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—All ranks in this command are indebted to you for your remarks last week on what is spoken of in many quarters as the "Aldershot scandal." I give you a specimen of the sort of criticism to which we in this command are subjected, as the outcome of Lord Wolseley's—as we all think, ill-considered—censure. The quotation is from a West country paper which devotes much attention to military matters:—

"The Commander-in-Chief has the courage of his opinions, and has commended the work performed on Salisbury Plain almost as strongly as he condemned the manoeuvring capacity of the 'scratch' Army Corps at Aldershot. The key to the puzzle probably is, that the staff appointments at Salisbury are held by more professional soldiers, and that owing to the distance from 'town' the troops and their officers have been more attentive to their duties. For at the present moment, and until a huge town grows up, where now the ruggedness of nature reigns supreme, the plain is a poor sort of place for idlers and feather-bed soldiers."

Could any charge be more unfair than that brought against the officers at Aldershot? We arrived here in May last. Since then the whole time and attention of general officers and the headquarters and brigade staffs has been devoted to getting ready drafts for the army in South Africa. They have worked, to my knowledge, like so many niggers. For ourselves, it is only necessary to refer to the orders issued from Army Headquarters to recognise what Militia commanding officers' difficulties have been. What with musketry, hot and wet weather, and the difficulty of obtaining the attention of brigadiers, owing to the demands on their time, and the absurd strength of their commands—every one of them has been doing two men's work—field training has been rendered quite impossible, yet officers have done their duty loyally. And now we are told that we are a lot of idle loafers, and that our brigadiers and staff officers are useless men, inferior in professional qualifications to those employed elsewhere. The quotation I send you is only one of many, but it serves to show what mischief may be done by ill-considered talk. Those who were present at the review before Lord Wolseley, and who have been in the habit of attending similar parades here for years past, have assured me that it was not worse than many similar performances. In all the circumstances some allowances might have been made by press writers. The whole tone of the criticisms we have read is so offensive that I trust you will afford me an opportunity of entering my protest against it. The Army Corps here assembled was at the time of Lord Wolseley's visit essentially a "scratch" one. That being the case unfriendly critics might, I think, have put some little curb on their pens and not have gone to the extent that they have done in holding the whole of the officers in command here up to ridicule. That, it appears to me, is scarcely the way to promote the efficiency and well-being of auxiliary troops brought together under the conditions that the Militia battalions have been this summer. I assure you I do not exaggerate the mischief that has been done, and it is in the hope that newspaper writers will modify their views that I write this letter so as to prevent further injury and misunderstanding.

A MILITIA FIELD OFFICER.

Aldershot, Sept. 3.

NAVY.

Capt. George Hannibal Charles MacArthur, who died on Monday, entered the Service as a Cadet in 1864, became a Sub-Lieut. in 1870, Lieut. four years later, Commander in 1888, and was placed on the retired list as a Captain in January of last year. He was a Lieut. on board the Sphinx during the naval and military operations in the Eastern Soudan in 1884-5, receiving the Egyptian medal; the 1885 Suakim clasp, and the Khedive's bronze star.

ARMY.

Major-Gen. Robert Holt Truell, O.B., Colonel, retired list, late of the Shropshire Light Infantry, has died at Wimborne. He joined the Army June 13, 1856; became Captain June 30, 1863; Major Aug. 12, 1876; Lieut.-Colonel July 1, 1881; Colonel June 15, 1885; and retired with the hon. rank of Major-General March 3, 1886. He served with the 53rd Regiment in the Indian campaign of 1857-59, including the action of Khujwah, the relief of Lucknow by Lord Clyde, the battle of Cawnpore and pursuit of the Gwalior contingent to Serai Ghat, the action of Khodagunge and entry into Futteghur, the affair of Shurnshabad, the storming and capture of Meangunge, the siege and capture of Lucknow, the affair of Koorsie, the passage of the Goomtee and the occupation of Sultanpore, the passage of the Gogra at Fyzabad, the action of Toolsepoore, and minor incidents. He was appointed staff-officer to a column on the Nepal frontier (mentioned in despatches, medal with two clasps). He served with the 1st Batn. Shropshire Light Infantry in the Egyptian war of 1882, and, when commanding the battalion, was present at the surrender of Kafr Dower and Damietta (medal and Khedive's star). He commanded the same battalion in the expedition to the Soudan in 1885 (mentioned in despatches, clasp and C.B.).

Major-Gen. John Malone Sexton, retired list, Indian Staff Corps, of 37, Inverness Terrace, W., died at Scarborough on the 1st inst., aged 68 years. The son of Mr. Cornelius Sexton, of Scariff, County Clare, he was born on Aug. 4, 1832, and, enlisting in the 95th Foot, served in the ranks with that regiment during the earlier portion of the Crimean campaign, taking part in the battles of the Alma and Inkerman, and obtaining promotion to an Ensign Nov. 5, 1854. He became Lieut. in March, 1855, and was Adjutant of the regiment for six years from Oct. following, throughout the remaining stages of the siege of Sebastopol (medal with three clasps, Turkish medal, and Knight of the Legion of Honour). He also served throughout the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1858-9, greatly distinguishing himself. He took part in the siege and capture of Kotah, when he accompanied the third assaulting column on March 30, as staff officer to Col. Raines commanding. In the battle of Kota Ke Serai he again acted as staff officer to Col. Raines, commanding the infantry, and obtained mention in despatches. In the general action resulting in the capture of Gwalior he was severely burnt by an explosion of powder while serving a gun captured from the enemy and turned on them, for which he was a second time mentioned in despatches. He was also at the siege and capture of Pourie, and the surprise of the rebel camp at Koondyre. For the Mutiny campaign he had the medal with clasp. Obtaining his company in Sept., 1861, he was serving on the staff from Sept., 1867, to Oct., 1871, as D.A.Q.M.G., Bombay; was transferred to the Bengal Staff Corps in Oct., 1870, and to the Bombay Staff Corps in Aug., 1871, having obtained a Brevet Majority in May. From Nov., 1871, to Nov., 1877, he was A.Q.M.G. in Bombay. The deceased became Lieut.-Col. in Oct., 1877, and Col. in Oct., 1881, and was placed on the unemployed supernumerary list in Aug., 1887, and promoted to be Major-Gen. in Dec., 1892.

Col. George Cecil Henry, retired list, Royal Artillery, died at 82, Victoria Road South, Southsea, on the 30th ult., aged 74. He joined the Army Dec. 16, 1846; became Captain June 20, 1854; Major Nov. 2, 1855; Lieut.-Colonel Aug. 31, 1865; and Colonel July 20, 1876. He served in the Crimean campaign, 1854-55, including the battle of Inkerman and the siege of Sevastopol (medal with two clasps, brevet of Major, Sardinian, and Turkish Medal, and 5th Class of the Medjidie). Served in the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1858-59, and commanded a field battery attached to Col. Kelly's force in the attack and defeat of the rebel forces posted on the first range of the Nepal Hills, March 25 and 28 (mentioned in despatches, medal).

Lieut.-Col. John C. Innes, second in command East of Scotland Artillery, died at Dunbar on the 6th inst. He had been embodied with his regiment since May, and left the Isle of Wight a few days ago for Scotland on sick leave, but on reaching Dunbar he grew gradually worse, and the end came rapidly. Col. Innes had been 30 years in the regiment, and had been second in command since Dec. 24, 1892.

Capt. Charles Orde Browne, late Royal Artillery, of 11, the Paragon, Woolwich, died at Peers Court, Dursley, the residence of his brother, on the 31st ult., aged 62. He was second son of Col. Browne, formerly of the 9th Lancers, of Stouts Hill, Gloucestershire. He obtained his commission from the R.M. Academy, Woolwich, in 1854; was promoted to be Captain in 1862, and retired in 1871. He served in the Crimea in the siege train of the night attack on Sebastopol (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp, Turkish medal, and Sardinian Order of St. Lazarus for valour). Capt. Browne served for four years in the Royal Horse Artillery and was Captain-Instructor, Royal Laboratory, which appointment he held until he retired. He was military editor of the Engineer and of the armour part of Brassey's Naval Annual. As head of the Transit of Venus Expedition to Egypt in 1874 he rendered valuable service. He was the Government judge on ordnance and warlike stores at the Chicago Exhibition in 1893, and was lecturer on armour plates at the Ordnance College, Woolwich. Capt. Browne was the author of several technical works, such as "Armour and its Attack," &c.

Capt. Alfred Durham Plomer, 1st Batn. King's Liverpool Regiment, died of wounds in action at Nooitgedacht, on the 29th ult. Born Feb. 2, 1868, he joined the Liverpool Regiment as 2nd Lieut. March 23, 1889; became Lieut. Aug. 11, 1890; and Captain July 27, 1896.

Capt. Reginald Ramsay Arbuthnot, 1st Batn. Royal Irish Regiment, died at Mafeking on the 3rd inst. of wounds received in action. Born April 25, 1869, he joined the Royal Irish Regiment from the Militia Oct. 10, 1891; became Lieut. March 1, 1893; and Captain Oct. 23, 1899. He was employed in the Uganda Protectorate from Feb. 9, 1898, to the beginning of the present year, when he joined his battalion for active service in South Africa.

Lieut. John Collinson Harrison, 2nd Dragoons, Royal Scots Greys, died at Pretoria on the 3rd inst. of wounds received in action. Born Aug. 9, 1869, he joined the Scots Greys as 2nd Lieut. June 5, 1889, and became Lieut. May 23, 1891.

Lieut. John Lawrence Lawlor, 6th (Inniskilling) Dragoons, died of wounds received in action at Waterval Onder, South Africa, on the 30th ult. Born Feb. 7, 1874, he joined the regiment from the Militia as 2nd Lieut. Dec. 9, 1896, and became Lieut. March 4, 1898, and Adjutant on Feb. 20 last.

2nd Lieut. Harvey C. Burton, 5th Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers, attached to the Central African Rifles, was killed in action on the 31st ult. in the operations under Lieut.-Col. Brake, in Ashanti. Lieut. Burton was shot in the neck and killed instantly while charging with the flanking company of the Central African Rifles. He only joined the Militia on May 18.

WE learn from India that the raising of the Samana Militia Batn. is being proceeded with, Mr. D. Donald being Commandant, with Mr. A. W. Mercer as Adjutant, and Mr. E. C. Cooke as Quartermaster. These three officers belong to the Punjab Police. No military officers are being attached to the battalion, which is practically on the footing of a military police corps.

TWENTY thousand specially made tins full of tobacco, 20,000 pipes, and many cases containing such necessities of life as good whisky, snuff, and warm clothing, have been forwarded to South Africa by the Scottish Regiments' Gift Fund for distribution among gallant Caledonians who are serving at the front.

ABERDEEN GRANITE MONUMENTS, &c.—ALEX. MACDONALD and Co., Limited (late A. Macdonald, Field and Co.), Workers in Polished Granites to the Queen, undertake the erection of their work in any part of the country. The largest stock of granite monuments in the country may be seen at their London premises. For designs and prices, address as above, to the Aberdeen Granite Works, Aberdeen; or 373, Euston Road, London N.W.

THE MEDICAL RESERVE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Your remarks on the subject of a Medical Reserve, in "Army Notes," Sept. 1, are distinctly to the point. There is no reason for enrolling the untrained civilian as a Reserve officer when there are surgeons holding commissions in the Auxiliary Forces who are anxious to be thus employed. It would encourage men to join in this capacity, and also keep them efficient if they were given the preference for employment at small military posts where no regular officer is available instead of giving such billets to civil practitioners, as is now done. Through abolishing the system of regimental surgeons in the Militia, the War Office has lost another very useful adjunct to the medical service of the Army. Had this system prevailed at the present time it would have proved a great help to the Medical Department, and would have considerably reduced the hastily-recruited "civilian" element which the Times rightly regrets. Surgeons thus appointed to Militia units, after a proper course of instruction, would not only form an excellent reserve, but would also give the Militia a medical service of its own, which at present it is entirely without.

M.

THE Secretary of State for War has authorised for officers who, in present circumstances, are going to China, the continuance of lodging allowance, &c. under the same conditions as in the case of those officers who have gone to South Africa.

CAVALRY.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue).—Lieut.-Col. Lord Binning, who met with a serious accident lately whilst shooting, still lies at Mellerstain House, Kelso. He is progressing satisfactorily, but some months will elapse before he will be fit to resume the duties of command.

3rd Dragoon Guards.—A correspondent writes:—

"Capt. Reynolds, who has just been promoted from the 5th Dragoon Guards, was the life and soul of his regiment during the siege of Ladysmith. He was a young lieutenant in those days, and when the horses were wanted for 'chevrol,' Reynolds was sent to Wagon Hill with the troopers. He obtained permission to take the regiment's Maxim to the hill-top, and soon afterwards a requisition for tools and 150 sand-bags for fortifications was received. The next day the query 'Have you seen Reynolds's gun battery?' went round camp. He had built an earth-work big enough for a 100-pounder, while behind it he only had a solitary little Maxim. Unfortunately, however, the Boers took the joke too seriously. Apparently they thought that something heavy in the shape of guns had dropped from the skies for the use of the beleaguered garrison, and with feverish haste started a big 'Long Tom' emplacement on Middle Hill. The result was that Reynolds's battery had to be reduced in size so as to calm the enemy's fears."

6th (Inniskilling) Dragoons.—The adjutancy has become vacant by the death of Lieut. Lawlor, who was mortally wounded in action in South Africa on the 30th ult.

9th Lancers.—Lieut.-Gen. Sir William Drysdale, K.C.B., Colonel of the regiment, of 15, Bury Street, St. James's, who died on Aug. 7, left a will which has been proved by Lieut.-Col. A. G. W. Hemans, of 35, Nevcrn Square, and Lieut.-Col. J. O. Möller, of 139, The Grove, Ealing, the nephews, the value of the estate being £139,360. He bequeathed £1,000 to St. George's Hospital; £1,000 to the Westminster Hospital; £1,000 to Charing Cross Hospital; £2,000 to the commanding officer of the 9th Lancers on trust, to distribute the income thereof between the best-behaved non-commissioned officers and men, or partly between such officers and men, and partly in prizes for lance and sword exercises; and £2,000 on trust for the poor of Bothwell, Lanark. He further gave £10,000 and certain furniture to his sister, Mary Möller, £500 each to his executors, £1,000 to the children of John Drysdale, £1,000 to the three daughters of William Copland, and the ultimate residue of his property to his nineteen nephews and nieces, the children of his sisters, Mrs. Anne Hemans, Mrs. Margaret Wharrie, Mrs. Mary Möller, Mrs. Elizabeth Sanders, and Mrs. Helen Murray.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The Depot R.H.A. was subdivided on the 1st inst. at Woolwich into A Depot and B Depot.

V Battery, R.H.A., at St. John's Wood, is about to change its equipment for that of the latest approved Service pattern.

No. 30 Company, Western Division, is stationed at Maker Barracks, near Plymouth, not at Devonport, as was lately stated in the official distribution notice.

A course of instruction for young officers, R.G.A. will commence at the Ordnance College, Woolwich, on Monday next. It is intended for those officers who have not been appointed to the Royal Regiment from the Royal Military Academy, and will last five months.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

APPOINTMENTS.

Col. H. P. Leach, C.B., D.S., to command a 2nd Class District in India, with the temporary rank of Brigadier-General whilst so employed.

Major S. C. N. Grant, on arrival home from South Africa, to the War Office, to resume duty as D.A.A.G., Intelligence Division.

Brevet-Major H. H. Austin, on arrival home from special survey duty Egyptian Soudan, to the War Office, for temporary duty in the Intelligence Division.

Capt. E. H. Hills, on vacating his temporary appointment as D.A.A.G., Intelligence Division, War Office, to the Home District.

Capt. L. H. Close from India to Aldershot, on reversion to British Establishment.

Lieut. P. H. Campbell, on completion of the Brennan course at Chatham, to Gravesend and subsequently to Cork.

2nd Lieut. A. W. Hepper from sick leave, to Chatham.

2nd Lieut. G. C. B. Loch from Chatham, to Aldershot for a course of instruction in ballooning.

EMBARKATIONS.

For China.—The 4th Balloon Section, under the command of Brevet Lieut.-Col. J. R. L. Macdonald, C.B., with Capt. A. H. B. Hume and 2nd Lieut. T. E. Martin-Leake.

Capt. W. A. Harrison for duty as a Special Service Officer.

For Malta.—Major W. Yolland and 2nd Lieut. A. B. Cunningham.

For India.—Capt. C. H. Heycock, P. Maud, and Lieut. O. G. Brandon, on termination of leave.

2nd Lieuts. C. F. Birney and R. H. Phillimore.

ARRIVALS.

From Egypt.—Lieut.-Col. the Hon. M. G. Talbot, n.s.c., Capt. W. A. S. Kincaid, and Lieut. M. R. Kennedy, n.s.o., on leave of absence from the Egyptian Army.

From India.—Lieut. G. F. F. Osborne, on leave of absence.

From Jamaica.—Capt. J. de C. Laffan, on sick leave of absence.

From South Africa.—Lieut.-Gen. Sir Charles Warren, Col. C. A. Rochfort-Boyd, Lieut. H. J. Cullin, 1st London Royal Engineers (Volunteers), on sick leave.

INFANTRY.

Coldstream Guards.—Brevet Lieut.-Col. Maxse, D.S.O., now on special service in South Africa, has been selected for second in command of a battalion, in place of Major Surtees, and is posted to the 1st Batn.

Irish Guards.—Major Hamilton has been ordered to take the first recruit squads of his regiment from the Guards' Depot at Caterham to Pirbright next Monday for musketry training, and he will remain in command of all troops at the camp from the day mentioned till further orders. Lieut. Lord Oxmantown has been granted leave on medical certificate until the beginning of September.

Royal Warwickshire Regiment (6th).—Capt. Boyce, 3rd Batn., has been selected for the Adjutancy of the new 3rd V.B. Gloucestershire Regiment at Bristol.

Royal Fusiliers (7th).—The Royal Fusiliers Families' War Fund has been doing splendid work for the women and children from October, 1899, to June 16 last. The amount subscribed was £2,963 10s., which, together with £9 2s. 7d. interest on deposit brought the receipts to £2,972 12s. 7d. The expenditure comprises weekly remittances, dinner tickets, coats, Christmas gifts of clothing, funerals, and insurances, £800 15s. 2d.; Christmas dinners in South Africa, £108 16s.; refunded Middlesex Regiment, Hounslow collection, £25 1s. 6d.; cost of postal orders, telegrams, stamps, and petty cash, £53 5s. 6d.; printing and gas, £15 9s. 2d.; office expenses (less £25 given for this purpose by Lieut.-Col. Blumenthal), £10; leaving a balance to the credit of the fund of £1,959 5s. 3d. Since the fund was opened no less than 500 wives and mothers of Regulars, Militia, and Volunteers have received assistance either by donations or weekly payments; gifts of clothing and food were also made to the wives at Christmas, a sub-committee of ladies having taken personal charge of all cases by districts. In view of the increasing number of calls on the fund owing to deaths in action, wounds and disease, all interested in the old regiment are appealed to for future assistance in the shape of donations and subscriptions. In no regiment in the Service does esprit de corps run higher than in the Royal Fusiliers, and the exertions of those who have raised and administered the fund are deserving of all recognition. Lieut. French-Brewster, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 27th ult., in the Simla, invalided.

Suffolk Regt. (12th).—Capt. Brett, 1st Batn., has been selected for the adjutancy of the 4th Batn., vice Capt. Lennock, whose five years expired in March last.

Somersetshire Light Infantry (13th).—Major Pollock, retired list, has been ordered to join the details of the 2nd and 4th Batns. at Devonport for duty.

Royal Welsh Fusiliers (23rd).—Lieut. Harris, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England on the 27th ult., in the Simla, invalided.

Gloucestershire Regiment (28th) left Natal on the 22nd ult. for Ceylon, where it will do duty in guarding the Boer prisoners. The 4th (Militia) Batn. has been for some time past performing like duties at St. Helena.

Worcestershire Regiment (29th).—A recruiting march is about to be undertaken in Worcestershire. A party of about 250 non-commissioned officers and men of the newly-raised 3rd and 4th Batns. left Aldershot yesterday by train for Evesham with a view of touring the county for 17 days. The route taken will be via Pershore, Malvern, Worcester, Droitwich, Bromsgrove, Kidderminster, Stourbridge, and Dudley, and home by rail. A stay will be made in Worcester from the 13th to the 16th inst.

Border Regiment (34th).—Major Nash and Capt. Tuson have been invalided from South Africa, and sailed in the Simla on the 27th ult.

Royal Sussex Regiment (35th).—The Worthing Town Council decided at their meeting on Tuesday to confer the freedom of the borough upon the six local Volunteers who are now serving with the Royal Sussex Regiment in South Africa. It is also the intention of the corporation to inscribe the names of the whole of the soldiers from Worthing, over 100 in number, on a tablet to be placed in the council chamber.

Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (46th).—Capt. and Adj. Mark-Wardlaw, who died on Feb. 18 near Paardeburg, South Africa, left estate sworn at £15,287 15s. 11d. His executors are the Rev. F. W. Saulez, Okehampton, Mr. H. P. Mark, the brother, and Mr. G. J. T. Seckham, 4, Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn.

Royal West Kent Regiment (50th).—Capt. Simpson has been selected for the adjutancy of the 2nd Volunteer Batn. at Blackheath.

King's Own Light Infantry (51st) moved on Saturday last from Limerick to Kilworth Camp for six weeks' autumn drill.

Dorsetshire Regiment (54th).—Lieut. Herbert sailed from Cape Town on the 27th ult., invalided, in the Simla.

Middlesex Regiment (57th).—Capt. Bridgman is on passage home from the Cape in the Persian to join the new 4th Batn., on promotion.

Manchester Regiment (63rd).—A draft of 16 men of the 5th (Militia) Batn. left Aldershot for South Africa on the 31st ult. The battalion now has eight officers and nearly 400 men on active service, and two officers at the depot. It has been without a quartermaster and a sergeant-major for a considerable part of the embodiment. Now, however, a quartermaster and a sergeant-major have been appointed, but as they are in South Africa some little time must elapse before they can join. This, of course, places the unit at a considerable disadvantage. Capt. Booth, 5th Batn., entered for the Army Boxing Championship (middle-weights) at Aldershot last week, and after a severe contest was second in the final.

North Staffordshire Regiment (64th).—Capt. Amplett sailed from Cape Town on the 27th ult. for England, invalided, in the Simla.

Highland Light Infantry (71st).—Capt. Kays sailed from Cape Town in the Simla on the 27th ult., invalided.

Derbyshire Regiment (95th).—Capt. Dove sailed from Cape Town on the 27th ult. in the Simla, invalided.

Royal Irish Fusiliers (89th).—Lieut. Micklem sailed from Cape Town on the 27th ult. in the Simla, invalided.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (102nd).—Capt. Lonsdale has been invalided from South Africa, and sailed in the Persian on the 1st inst. 2nd Lieut. Lamprey sailed from Cape Town on the 27th ult. in the Simla, invalided.

Rifle Brigade.—A memorial service for the late Capt. Campbell, who was fatally wounded at Bergendal, was held on Thursday at St. Paul's Church, Knightsbridge. The Rev. Bernard Shaw officiated. The hymns were "The roseate hue of early dawn" and "The Saints of God, their conflict past." The lesson was from I. Corinthians xv. 20. Amongst those present were Mr. and Mrs. George Campbell, Mr. Campbell, Major-Gen. Trotter, commanding the Home District, Capt. Derby Griffiths, Major Thornton, Col. and Mrs. Trotter, the Hon. Eustace and Mrs. Fitzgerald, &c.

Army Service Corps.—Capt. Liddell sailed from Cape Town on the 27th ult. in the Simla, invalided.

Royal Army Medical Corps.—Major FitzGerald, Capt. Crawford, Lieut. Croly, and Lieut. and Qmrm. Spackman sailed from Cape Town on the 27th ult. in the Simla, invalided. Major Deeble left in medical charge of the troops on board the Simla.

Reviews.

THE MAGAZINES.

South Africa and China give the September magazines plenty of interesting material, and they by no means neglect other attractive subjects. An important article in the United Service Magazine is on the "Future of our Artillery," by Capt. C. Holmes Wilson, R.F.A., who has no hesitation in assigning great superiority to the Boer guns, and says that their ranges appear all to have exceeded that of our 15pr. by several thousands of yards. The guns of the Boers failed to produce any great impression, chiefly because they rarely concentrated their fire for any length of time, because their ammunition was bad, and because their guns were inferior in number and they were afraid to risk a stand-up fight. Frequently our field guns even failed to reach the Boer field guns, and, in any case, "a system which put an army into the field inadequately equipped with powerful artillery would seem to be faulty somewhere." At Venter's Spruit, and again at Brakfontein, we were completely outranged. In relation to mobility, it is pointed out that the naval 12prs. on Capt. Percy Scott's carriages did not weigh approximately more than 25cwt., as compared with the 36cwt. of our present field artillery equipment. Capt. Holmes Wilson does not advocate the abolition of the field artillery, but suggests that one really mobile force, armed with a long-range rapid-firing gun, discharging a light shell, and supported by a semi-mobile force armed with a powerful gun or howitzer of long range, would fulfil the conditions of modern war so far as South Africa has disclosed them. "An Outsider" defends the Intelligence Department, and maintains that everything was known about the Boer guns and other matters. "And yet, in spite of this knowledge, no attempt of any kind was made to meet the situation, while a sufficiency of, mounted troops and powerful artillery from the beginning would have brought the war to a conclusion long ago." The critic has much to say about faulty strategy, and otherwise has written a very interesting article. Mr. J. B. Hodge balances it by a paper that should be read on "The Muddles of Ancient Rome." "Rex" continues his survey of "Our Army," and suggests that the territorial system precludes freedom of will, combined with an absence of elasticity in the whole Army system. His criticisms should be read. Several other articles are of useful historical character: "Frederick the Great, from the Close of the War of the Spanish Succession to the Seven Years' War," "Canada and the American War of 1812," and a continuation of Col. F. N. Mande's very valuable notes on the "Evolution of Cavalry." We have left one of the most valuable articles until the last, but we hope to deal with it elsewhere. It is that of Dr. Miller Maguire upon "Obligatory Military Service," of which he is a stout and powerful advocate. He maintains, in fact, and does so most cogently, that military discipline is one of the best foundations of civic excellence.

There is so much of interest in the Nineteenth Century that we shall be able to do little more than indicate in what it consists. To two of the articles we may find occasion to refer elsewhere. They are those by Col. Lonsdale Hale and Mr. Murray Guthrie, M.P. Mr. Edmund Robertson opens the number with a discussion upon "Business Principles in the Public Service," in relation to that association which is being formed under the ægis of the Nineteenth Century to enforce the lessons of the war. He does not by any means admit that business principles, as ordinarily understood, should be introduced in the Government departments, where the conditions are so different, but he insists, and this we believe is the underlying principle of the new body, that publicity is essential, and that a Select Committee should sit upon the Estimates, both before they are voted and after they are executed, with the power of calling before it for examination the officials responsible for proposing and administering them. Mr. Robertson has had much experience of the Admiralty, and he gives his sanction to the views of those who have been satisfied with its working. We are glad to see that he protests against the notion that the Board is "a legal fiction." He is disposed to think that a naval engineer should be a member of it, but otherwise would not interfere with the system. If an engineer, why not a constructor or a doctor? Surely the opinion of all these can be gained apart from the Board. Mr. Robertson's chief object is to establish responsibility. Col. Lonsdale Hale's article upon the "Staff Work in the War" is a defence both of the staff and the Staff College, upon the ground that mistakes, blunders, misinterpretation of orders, and the miscarriage of plans form the normal atmosphere of regular war. Sir Herbert Maxwell's article upon "Our Allies at Waterloo," is very interesting. He gives great credit to the Netherlands, and thinks this is an appropriate time to acknowledge the full extent of our "obligation to the Prussians." Obligation seems the wrong word, for surely the Prussians were as much interested as ourselves. Mr. Murray Guthrie's contribution upon "South African War Hospitals" is an unqualified denunciation of the heads of the Medical Department in South Africa. The "Traditional British Sailor" is treated in an engaging fashion by Mr. W. J. Fletcher, who endeavours to discern the true sailor behind the literary and pictorial presentations of him, which are practically our only means of knowing him. But Mr. Fletcher goes too far when he suggests that such presentations are no more typical than Box and Cox. He has written well, and has collected a large number of interesting facts. As he says, the old sailor, ill-fed, ill-paid, often ill-used, and generally ill-educated, was yet a most valuable citizen who did the nation's work with singular thoroughness. Many will read with interest articles expounding "American Imperialism," by Mr. Bradley Martin, junr., and on the "Situation in Italy," by Signor Dalla Vecchia.

Blackwood opens well with a continuation of Capt. Haldane's exciting narrative of how he escaped, with his companions, from Pretoria. The account is so breathless in the character of its incidents that it reads like a page of romance. The drastic critic of the war operations expounds the merits of De Wet, but he appears to think that a part of those merits will be found arising from the blunders we have committed. He says it is surely not too much to ask that a man should be able to put in practice the rudiments of his profession when the time comes, but that De Wet came across many who could not. He cites the capture of the 13th Imperial Yeomanry, and of the convoy of the Highland Brigade at Heilbron, as typical instances of how not to do it, and, in relation to the former, does not ascribe any blame to Col. Spragge. In conclusion, he is led to question whether the new strategy of Lord Roberts is altogether so successful as the old-fashioned methods sanctioned by the experience of military nations. Another article concerns "Some Needs of the Navy." It is by an anonymous writer, who advocates a number of changes in order to expedite mobilisation. He has a very poor opinion of the Reserve Squadron, and remarks that harbour ships are utterly anomalous. His view is that there is no good and sufficient reason why the whole of the force at home should not be maintained in thorough fighting order, and he asks that the distribution and appointments of officers should be arranged with the distinct view to possible complications, involving the sending home of a certain proportion of officers, no doubt, and the despatch abroad to unimportant stations of some who would prefer to vegetate at home. The article is very full of suggestions. Blackwood has also a contribution on "China," and another on touring and fishing in the Romsdal, which Sir Herbert Maxwell, that versatile writer, describes as the "Valley of Enchantment." Many will be interested in a sketch of wild goose shooting in Manitoba and by other articles in the number.

We can only refer to a few points in the National Review. "Ignotus," writing upon "Japan and the Far East," sees looming large in the comparatively near future the great Yellow Peril, but thinks, nevertheless, that we do not stand to lose, since we have always wished to see a China capable of protecting herself. But that, surely, is quite different from the Yellow Peril. We must look for an alliance, he says, between China and Japan, and there seems some reason in his view. Sir Rowland Blennerhassett, who knows Germany well, discusses the foreign policy of that country, and expresses the opinion that one great object of English policy should be to restore friendship with Russia as a counterpoise to the hostility of a large, increasing, and influential school of German politicians, who are ready to enter into an alliance with France with the view of overthrowing our supremacy at sea. Mr. John Foreman would like to see the United States withdraw from the Philippines, and thinks it can be done, though to us the probability seems very remote. There is also an article by "Royal Artillery," who advocates the abolition in the Army of compulsory church parades. He thinks, at least in the field, the men have so much to do that they would welcome a real Sunday rest whenever they could get it. We commend to attention Mr. Hadrian Hofmeyr's article on the "Future of South Africa from the Afrikaner Point of View." His suggestions are interesting, and include the burying of red tape, the making of large allowances for the Boers, a right understanding of the attitude of the Dutch Reformed Church, and the appointment only of the best men to official positions.

Those who wish to take a broad view of the crisis in China may be recommended to the North American Review for August. There are articles upon "The Duty of America," "The Responsibility of the Rulers" (by Lieut. Carlyon Bellairs, R.N.), "America's Share in the Event of Partition," "Causes of Anti-Foreign Feeling," "The Japanese View of the Situation," and some other points. The number also contains an article by General Howard, U.S.A., approving of our recent strategy in South Africa.

We have also received a generally interesting number of Macmillan's Magazine, Longman's, the Cornhill (in which there is an interesting article by Mr. W. J. Fletcher on Sir Thomas Troubridge), as well as the Humanitarian, the Antiquary, and the Genealogical Magazine, and a number of illustrated magazines, including capital issues of the American periodicals, and a good number of the Pall Mall Magazine. Space fails us to do justice to any of these.

SHORT NOTICES.

Professional Papers of the Corps of Royal Engineers—Occasional Papers, Vol. XXV. (Mackay and Co., Chatham.)—These occasional papers are too well known for their professional value to call for special commendation now. They are by excellent authorities in the engineering world, and by men who have been practically concerned in the work of the Royal Engineers. We notice chapters upon "Field Suspension Bridges," by Lieut. Oldham, R.E.; "The Evolution of the Defence," by Col. Goldie, R.E.; "The Permanent Way of Railways," by J. C. Inglis, M.Inst.C.E.; "The Duties of a Field Company with a Division on the Offensive," by Col. Beresford, R.E.; "Subaqueous Foundations for Bridges and Docks," by E. Crutwell, M.Inst.C.E.; and other subjects, all very valuable and informing.

The Ship and General Painter's Handbook, by George S. Welsh, R.N. (Griffin and Co., Portsmouth), is the second edition of a very practical little volume which may be heartily commended to the naval painter, as well as to the painter ashore.

Messrs. Methuen are just publishing another story from the pen of that brilliant novelist, Mr. Blount-delle Burton. It is entitled "Servants of Sin," and is a tale of the Regent Orleans and the plague at Marseilles, and is another novel of incident.

THE WAR OFFICE AND THE ARMY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It is curious that the Liberal organs of our Press should be now unanimous in calling for the reform of our Army system, when for thirty years past they have been expatiating on the excellence of the same system and extolling the ability of Lord Cardwell, who introduced it under the ægis of Mr. Gladstone. The fact is that Lord Cardwell's Army Reform proceeded on wrong lines, and with the single exception of the abolition of purchase, all his measures did more harm than good. It is impossible to combine an efficient Reserve system with a system of recruiting by voluntary enlistment, and it is impossible to utilise the same unit as depot and field troops at the same time, as in the Cardwellian system of linked battalions. These two cardinal features of Lord Cardwell's reforms are contrary to the elementary principles of military organisation.

Our War Office has now virtually reverted to the principle of long service in raising the new Royal Reserve Regiments composed of old soldiers, whose services were to be dispensed with altogether under Lord Cardwell's scheme. It is acknowledged on all hands that our Admiralty manages its business better than our War Office, and I observe that the Admiralty has retained the system of nomination for appointment of officers, and of long service for the Royal Marine Artillery and Infantry—two institutions the abandonment of which was made a subject of panegyric by Lord Cardwell's admirers.

Our War Office is like the schoolboy who, in working out a sum, had got his slate covered with a mass of figures till he had entangled himself in a hopeless muddle. His master advised him to rub it all out and begin over again. The first thing to be done towards reforming the British Army is to undo most of the reforms that have been introduced during the past 30 years.

PRIZE FIRING IN THE NAVY, 1899.
THE prize-firing returns for the year 1899 have recently been issued, and the results of the firing are particularly interesting. The first portion of the returns deals with battleships carrying the largest calibre guns afloat, viz., from 13.5in. to 16.25in. Thirteen such battleships took part in the firing last year, and the practice shows a decided improvement upon 1898. With the exception of the Benbow and Sans Pareil all these vessels carry four great guns. There was much difference in the individual results, both with regard to rapidity of fire and accuracy. The Hood, for example, fired as many as 27 rounds in the two runs of six minutes each, and scored 8 hits, whilst the Camperdown fired but 15 rounds and scored 2 hits. The highest proportion of hits was made by the Nile, which made the highly creditable score of 14 hits in 23 shots. The general average of hits for these heavy guns works out at 33·3 per cent., as compared with 30 per cent. in the previous year. This average will be regarded as highly creditable. The conditions under which the firing took place are, of course, familiar to naval officers. The range had to vary between 1,400 and 2,000 yards, as the ships steamed past the prize targets at a uniform speed of 8 knots. This speed may seem somewhat inadequate, but the targets are, after all, far smaller marks than the hull of a battleship. In the battle of Santiago, it will be remembered, the Americans made bad shooting with their large calibre guns, and the critics contended that big guns were discredited by the results of that action. Yet the average of 33 per cent. of hits goes far to prove that accurate shooting can be made with the heaviest guns.

Eleven battleships carrying 12in. guns took part in the prize firing. These were nine of our newest ships with the Collingwood and Colossus, the two latter carrying an earlier pattern gun. The shooting with these guns was as good as the practice with the guns of the largest calibres, but not any better on the general average. This is rather disappointing, since the 12in. weapons can be fired with greater rapidity. The nine modern ships, mounting thirty-six guns, fired 187 rounds and scored 63 hits. This average represents 1 hit for every 3 shots, or 33 per cent. The best record was made by the Victorious (China station), which scored 11 hits in 20 rounds, whilst the Illustrious scored 10 hits in 18 rounds. One of the Channel ships, on the other hand, scored but 2 hits in 17 rounds, and another but 3 hits in 20 rounds. The difference here is marked, and seems to indicate that the Channel Squadron has fallen behind in the practice of gunnery. The average of hits shows no decline upon the average for the previous year, but neither can any material improvement be chronicled. The Colossus made 50 per cent. of hits, whilst the Collingwood scored but 2 hits in 16 rounds. How are we to account for so marked a difference in the shooting of individual ships? Five battleships armed with 10in. guns made a creditable average of 35 per cent. of hits. These vessels were the Barfleur, Centurion, Devastation, Renown, and Thunderer. The best of the group was the old Thunderer, which fired no less than 47 rounds and scored 27 hits. The Renown fired 41 rounds, and scored but 9 hits. Of cruisers and a few battleships armed with 9·2in. and 8in. guns, fourteen competed. These ships mounted in the aggregate thirty-five such guns. The total number of rounds fired was 288, and the number of hits 100—an average of about 34 per cent. This completes the return so far as the heavier guns are concerned, and it is curious to note how nearly the firing maintained a certain level of excellence throughout the fleet. Individually, the shooting varied enormously, as it always does, and probably always must do, but on the whole average our gunners are able to put one shot in three through the prize targets at the longest ranges. This is good shooting, and will hardly be beaten, we think, in any other Navy.

Very interesting and important are the results of the firing from the 6in. quick-firing guns, which constitute the secondary armament of all our modern battleships, and the main armament of numerous cruisers. As many as forty ships armed with these guns competed. These forty carried 307 such guns, which in the aggregate fired 2,347 rounds and scored 664 hits. Here, of course, the conditions of firing are quite different from the conditions under which the heavy guns are fired. The range is limited to 1,600 yards, the speed of the ship rises to 12 knots, and the firing has to be completed in one run of six minutes' duration. The general average of hits was about 28 per cent., or nearly the same as in the previous year. We cannot rest satisfied with this average as regards the quick-firing guns. Such little experience of modern war as we possess seems to suggest that the quick-firing guns ought to make a higher proportion of hits than the guns of heavier calibre. The average is low if one considers that some ships' companies are able to attain an average of 50 per cent. The shooting was rapid, averaging 1·05 rounds per minute for each gun mounted. Battleships, for example, mounting twelve quick-firing guns of this type can fire from 80 to 100 rounds in the six minutes' run, and score from 20 to 30 hits. When only a couple of 6in. quick-firing guns are mounted, as in some of our smaller cruisers, the rapidity of fire is largely increased. The Iphigenia and Indefatigable, each mounting two such guns, fired as many as 19 and 20 rounds in the six minutes, which is at the rate of 2·75 rounds per minute for each gun. Such rapidity is probably unattainable when a whole battery of quick-firers is concerned. Twenty-six ships carrying 6in. guns of the quick-firing type fired with about equal rapidity and accuracy as those carrying the 6in. quick-firing gun. The rapidity of fire was not quite so high, working out at ·85 per gun per minute.

Turning to gunboats and sloops armed with 5in. and 4in. guns, we find 130 of these weapons mounted in nineteen vessels which competed in the prize firing. With these guns the average works out at 8 rounds in six minutes, and the number of hits per gun at 2·6. These results are almost the same as those for the previous year. The shooting is so good that one cannot reasonably look for marked improvement in a twelvemonth. Nearly every cruiser or small craft in the Service carries some of the 4·7 in. or 4·2 in. quick-firers, so that the return is largely concerned with the firing of these lighter guns. The range varies between 1,400 and 1,600 yards, the speed has to be 12 knots, or two-fifths of the maximum steam power. The wings of the prize target are removed, but the gunboats of the Sharpshooter class are required to fire at the Service triangular target. From 312 of these light guns 3,386 rounds were fired and 1,139 hits were scored. This works out at 10·85 rounds per gun in six minutes and 3·63 hits per gun, which shows an improvement upon the results of 1898. This table concludes the return, since it is needless for us to notice the results of the firing from the Hotspur, Monarch, and Alexandra which are armed with muzzleloaders. The principal commissioned ships which, for various reasons, did not take part in the prize firing were the Canopus, Crescent, Empress of India, Endymion, Powerful, Revenge, Royal Sovereign, and Terrible.

THE ITALIAN NAVY.

THE article by Signor Crispi which appears in the September number of the Rivista Marittima has already attracted considerable attention. It is unusual to find an Italian statesman contributing to a professional publication, and much importance is therefore attached to Signor Crispi's utterances. He gives a table showing the naval expenditure of Italy since the year 1860, and points out that the fluctuations to which it has been subject have not always had relation to the exigencies of the time. His purpose is to show that the geographical and political situation of the country will not enable her to effect reductions in her Naval Estimates. Between 1860 and 1863 the outlay rose by a sudden bound from 14,000,000 lire to 95,000,000 lire, and then in the next year was reduced to less than half, after which, with some fluctuations, it declined to 26,000,000 in 1870, and to 24,000,000 in the following year. Italy, says Signor Crispi, having entered into Rome, being mistress of her destinies, and being seated upon two seas thus allotted a totally inadequate sum to her naval preparations at a most important time. The only period upon which he looks with satisfaction is that in which Benedetto Brin was the inspiration of naval progress, or, broadly speaking, from 1885 to 1891. At that time the Navy Estimates of Italy rose to the unparalleled sum (in 1889-90) of nearly 119,000,000 lire.

The effect of this great effort, and of the sacrifices which the country made at the time, was to raise the Italian Navy to the third place amongst the navies of the world, and to give her a large voice in international politics. But since that time a vast change has occurred in the relative naval situation of the Powers, and Italy has fallen to the seventh place. She is no longer inferior only to England and France, but also to Germany, Japan, Russia, and the United States. This change in the situation of Italy results in some measure from restricted expenditure, but far more from the larger efforts made by other Powers. As a matter of fact, in the financial year 1899-1900 Italy, has expended upon her Navy nearly 114,000,000 lire—a sum only exceeded three times in her history. It must be admitted, considering the financial difficulties of the country, and the double burden she bears of military and naval expenditure to maintain her position in the Triple Alliance, that the efforts she has made to maintain and increase her Navy are creditable to her people and to the foresight of her statesmen. It was a maxim of Victor Emmanuel II. that Italy should not only be respected but feared, and the policy of the country and her alliances were shaped to that end. Whether it was wise for her to enter at once into rivalry with the other European Powers is a matter that does not call for discussion here. What is certain is that a great burden was imposed upon the people, and that, although they have borne it on the whole cheerfully, the resources of the country have been considerably strained by the effort. With rising prosperity further expansion may be possible.

Signor Crispi considers that the negligence of Italy has been culpable, more especially since France has initiated and is completing the work of her port of Biserta. He says that Biserta represents the triumph of the continuous foreign and military policy of France, and is the irrefragable proof of Italian cowardice. We are not ourselves disposed to believe that there is any real continuity in French naval policy, and Biserta, from this point of view, is more of a phenomenon than an example. But Signor Crispi is sore at heart because, on the clear nights of summer, from the historic point of Marsala, it is possible with the naked eye to discern the lights which illuminate Tunis. Though he writes somewhat poetically, his motive is practical, and he sees many dangers for Italy in case of foreign complications. He remarks, moreover, that a revolution in South America, threatening

Italian subjects or interests, would involve the despatch of a force across the Atlantic which would weaken the squadron necessary for defence in the Mediterranean. In short, he paints a very deplorable picture of the naval situation of the country, with her enormous coast line to protect, her colonists in all parts of the world, and grave events now happening in the Far East. He therefore declares the necessity for action to be very urgent, and he calls upon the Government to rise to the emergency, and to take immediate steps to place the naval defences of the country upon a satisfactory basis. "In the hour of peril the only salvation of Italy lies in a strong and efficient fleet, which would forbid any disembarkation upon her shores; and to renounce her position is to abandon her only hope in the day of trial."

Navy Notes.

The official report of Sir Edward Seymour's attempt to relieve Peking in response to the request of Sir Claude Macdonald was published on Thursday and entirely bears out all that we have already said on the subject. This authentic account of the difficulties which beset the gallant admiral and his allies in their daring and heroic undertaking proves, if further proof were wanted, that it was attempted, not under an impulse of rash and thoughtless temerity, but as a matter of honest duty. When the International council of naval officers determined to attempt the relief of the Legations, the position was regarded as absolutely desperate, and the circumstances were such as made the undertaking bear at least the appearance of a successful issue. Why the anticipations of the Admiral and his colleagues were not realized, Sir Edward Seymour's report fully explains. Not the least among the pleasing features of the despatch are those which bear testimony to the perfect harmony which prevailed among the units of the allied force. While the British Commander-in-Chief displays the most generous appreciation of the valour and assistance given to him by the foreign contingents, their leaders bear testimony on their part to the skill, tact, and bravery which the Admiral showed in a trying and unexampled position. The exploit is one which will always be remembered as among the most stirring and adventurous of our times. The publication of the despatch is altogether timely, as putting an end to the untruthful statements which have been promulgated on the Continent by hostile critics. The Admiral's tribute to the services of the foreign contingents are happily balanced by his recognition of the services of his own men. "The officers and men landed from Her Majesty's ships, and present with me, acted throughout, as regards energy, courage, and cheerfulness, in a manner well worthy of the high traditions of Her Majesty's Navy."

The visit of the Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean to Constantinople as the representative of this country at the Jubilee festival of the Sultan has been an important feature of the celebration. In addition to the Surprise, on board which vessel the Admiral made his quarters, the Tyne, with a number of officers of the Mediterranean Squadron also went to Constantinople. After Sir John Fisher's presentation to the Sultan, Lady Fisher and her daughters were introduced and had the honour of being recipients of the Che fa kat. Brilliant banquets were given at the Yildiz Kiosk, and the Commander-in-Chief gave official dinners on board the Surprise. To the officers of the Renown the Sultan presented a valuable vase, and the bluejackets and marines were not forgotten. The Mediterranean Squadron anchored off Lemnos was illuminated in honour of the Sultan's Fête-day. On leaving, Admiral Sir John Fisher and Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford had conferred upon them the Grand Cordons of the Osmanieh and the Modjidieh respectively.

The long-promised visit of some of the ships of the North American Squadron to Bar

Harbour, Maine, took place this week. The Crescent, flying the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir Frederick Bedford, with the cruisers Psyche, Tribune, and Indefatigable, and the destroyer Quail, arrived on Tuesday at that port, and were welcomed by the United States North Atlantic Squadron. Salutes were exchanged between the Crescent and Rear-Admiral Farquhar's flagship, the New York. A hearty welcome to the officers of the British squadron was also given by the citizens through a reception committee, of which the president was Rear-Admiral John H. Upshur. Everywhere the utmost cordiality was shown, and the visit was marked by a number of entertainments, of which the chief features were banquets and balls. Lady Bedford and her daughter, who accompanied Sir Frederick, received the guests on board the Crescent. The bluejackets and marines of the two squadrons were included in the programme of reciprocal hospitality, and altogether the visit appears to have been productive of kindly feeling and pleasing recollection.

The departure of Lady Culme Seymour, the wife of the Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, will be much regretted by a large portion of the poorer classes connected with the naval service, and residing in the port. The Vicar of Portsea, in his monthly parochial address, considers it would be wrong to let her ladyship leave the town without recording the gratitude which theirs, in common with every other parish of the borough, owe to her for her willing interest and ever-ready help. There are many in their midst, he said, especially among the poorer classes connected with the service, to whom her departure means the loss of a personal friend.

Of the vessels recently ordered to the Far East to reinforce the British squadron on the China station the cruisers Isis and Dido have made a record passage. These two vessels when with the Mediterranean Squadron under Vice-Admiral Sir John Fisher, at Castellamare, on June 20 were at midnight suddenly ordered to go to Malta to be coaled, docked, and completed with stores, then to proceed to Hong Kong as fast as they could. They left Castellamare at 5 a.m. the next day and arrived at Malta at daylight the following morning, and started on their long voyage at 8.30 a.m. June 23. The Isis arrived at Hong Kong 11.30 p.m., July 15, and the Dido at daylight the next morning, not six hours afterwards. As time at Hong Kong is always eight hours in advance of that at Malta, the Isis took twenty-two days seven hours in making the passage. Both ships in passing through the Suez Canal were unfortunate in meeting a considerable number of ships going in the opposite direction, and they took twenty hours in getting through. They coaled at Aden, Colombo, and Singapore, but, owing to the primitive arrangements at the two former places, they were delayed about twenty-four hours at each. The actual sea speed maintained by the Isis for the whole passage, which is about 7,500 miles, was 16.3 knots. It is by far the fastest passage ever made to Hong Kong, and reflects great credit on the ship and engine-room staff. The Isis and Dido are sister ships of 5,600 tons, and were built and engined by the London and Glasgow Company at Glasgow.

Mr. Arnold White is contributing a long series of articles to the Sunday Sun on the decadence of statesmanship in England. In the fifteenth article he deals with the question, "Why we require business men to rule us?" and illustrates his argument from naval history in this way:—

"It is interesting to speculate on what would have happened if Mr. Goschen instead of Lord Barham had been First Lord of the Admiralty in July, 1805. Lord Barham, while in bed on the morning of July 9, 1805, received important news of the French fleet. By 9 a.m., without waiting to dress or consult the mob or his colleagues, he had dictated orders to Cornwallis to raise the blockade at Rochefort, and to Calder to intercept Villeneuve, thus enabling Nelson to thwart the primary combinations of Napoleon. Lord Barham was an octogenarian, and no orator. But he could act, and he did. When Britain fought her battles with men fed on British beef and corn, the defence of these islands was a comparatively simple affair. If the Royal Navy was beaten there was a second line of defence on shore. Now that we rely on the friends of our enemies for food, we have no second line of defence. If our battle fleet is beaten we are finished. Preliminary failure in naval war for Britain is permanent ruin, because the command of the sea once lost cannot be regained in time to prevent our collapse through starvation. Hence the necessity of obtaining the ablest and cleverest business men as rulers who understand life as it really is, for the purpose of keeping us out of war, of providing us with a system of strong Imperial defences, of restricting the area of war if war must come, and, not least, of averting from us the synchronous hostility of all the world. How do matters stand now? All the efficient and most of the inefficient Powers hate us with all their hearts, with all their souls, and all their understandings. They would hail our fall with delight. Can there be more irresistible evidence of the incompetence of our rulers than the universal hostility of the civilised world? We are not liked—that may be our own fault, or due to prosperity; but if we are not respected, that is the fault of our rulers. We are not respected because at critical moments, such as that of H.M.S. Iphigenia at Port Arthur, in questions of policy, such as the influx of Boer armaments through Delagoa Bay, and the search of the German steamers for contraband of war, our rulers have swerved or averted their heads when they should have gone straight on at all costs. The immense cost of our Imperial defences should have insured for us not only the respect but the alliance of half Europe. In competent hands the British Navy and Army would have commanded for England not only respect and alliance, but peace or a small war, instead of a struggle to the death conducted by Militia and Volunteers. Our rulers are estimable men, of high character in private life, who never breathe an untruth—except when politics are concerned; but the mere fact that Great Britain is "out" with all Europe is the proof that our affairs could scarcely have been worse managed by a committee of our enemies."

A correspondent of the Daily Chronicle, who used the pen-name of "Coloniensis," has been writing a series of articles under the title "Is the Navy Ready?" He takes for his text the remarks made by Admiral Rawson at Greenwich recently, when the gallant Admiral said that "He wished he could honestly say that the Navy was really and entirely satisfactory. He could not do so. He believed thoroughly that what we had was good, but we had not got enough of it to meet the combination which we might have to meet." This opinion the writer believes to be shared by nine out of every ten naval officers; but the tenth, being in touch with the Admiralty while the others are aloft, is able to persuade the country all is well. The following is a fair specimen of the style of these articles:—

"The most serious consequence of Mr. Goschen's mismanagement of the country's naval programme is a shortage of battleships. It is commonly assumed that the result of Mr. Goschen's neglect merely means such disastrous exposure and Continental ridicule as followed the neglect and incompetence of Lord Lansdowne last October. Unfortunately, while Lord Lansdowne may blunder and muddle away with comparative impunity 20,000 lives and £60,000,000 of money, Mr. Goschen will get no second chance. No maritime Roberts can ever redeem the incompetence of Mr. Goschen. Defeat at sea to a fleet of battleships is final in its effects, or, at all events, permanent so far as regards the grandchildren of the present generation. Victorious and implacable France, inflamed with pride, passion, and hatred, backed by Russia, would use the consequences of a naval victory inexorably in her own interests. Sea power to Britain is a synonym for life. It is not a luxury. It is not an offering on the altar of the goddess Jingo. Sea power is bread, wages, corn, wine, home to all of us. If Fournier defeated Fisher, Britain would be reduced to the defensive. Britain on the defensive means Britain 'Ladysmithed.' All Lord Salisbury's rifle clubs would then be futile, because the rifleman's wives would have nothing in the cupboard, and if the enemy were not so foolish as to land, straight shooting would not feed the children nor bring in raw material. Defeat of a fleet of British battleships is a thing different in kind from defeat of a British army. Defeat of battleships is irreparable. Hence the necessity for being strong at sea, and even for dispensing with Mr. Goschen's valuable services if it be shown that obstinate officialism has at last begun to affect the Navy, and that a Statesman between 70 and 80 years of age does not make an ideal, or even a safe, administrator for our maritime defences."

AMUSEMENTS.

PALACE THEATRE OF VARIETIES,
SHAFTESBURY AVENUE, LONDON.

Every evening at 7.50.—The most comfortable and elegant place of amusement in England. Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

Navy Personal.

Admiral of the Fleet the Earl of Clanwilliam was in attendance at Ballater when Her Majesty arrived at that station on Saturday last.

Admiral Sir Michael Culme-Seymour, Bart., performed his last act of duty to his Sovereign as Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, within the limits of that station, in attending Her Majesty's disembarkation, on Friday in last week, at the Royal Clarence Yard, Gosport, from the Royal Yacht Alberta, on the Queen's journey to Balmoral. The gallant flag-officer has now proceeded on leave, and returns to his command shortly before finally striking his flag on the 3rd prox.

Admiral Sir R. H. M. Molyneux has been appointed president of the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, from October 1, in succession to Admiral Sir R. E. Tracey, whose three years' tenure of the post expires on that date.

Vice-Admiral Sir William Kennedy hoists his flag as Commander-in-Chief at the Nore on the 18th inst., in place of Admiral Sir N. Bowden-Smith.

Vice-Admiral Sir John Fullerton, commanding the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, had the honour of embarking Princess Christian and the Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein at Portsmouth on Saturday last for a cruise round the west coast of England and Scotland of about three weeks' duration.

Rear-Admiral Sir Robert Harris, Commander-in-Chief of the Cape of Good Hope and West African Station, in responding for the Navy at a banquet at Cape Town last week, took the opportunity of defending himself against the allegations of delay on his part in sending heavy guns to the assistance of the force at Ladysmith, particulars of which have previously appeared in our columns. The gallant admiral at the same time did not fail to express his appreciation of the valuable services of the naval officials at Simon's Town, who took only five days to mount and transport the various pieces of naval ordnance to their destination, and for which they deserved the greatest credit.

Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, of the Mediterranean Squadron, was recently mentioned as a probable candidate for the City of London at the next Parliamentary election. At a meeting last week of the Conservative Association in that district the chairman observed that they all admired his lordship, and would be glad to have him as their candidate were it not the rule that representation should be divided between members of the corporation and merchants of the City, and it would, in his opinion, as well as that of others of the association, be unwise to depart therefrom.

Rear-Admiral T. S. Jackson, Admiral Superintendent of Devonport Yard, is temporarily indisposed at his official residence.

Captain H. J. May, of the Mars, goes to the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, as captain of that establishment, where his large abilities will be taken advantage of in lecturing; and Captain Randolph Foote, of the Repulse, who is a gunnery officer of considerable experience, is to be attached to the Ordnance Department during the current month.

Captain A. J. Horsley, of the Europa, reached Suez on Saturday last and left for Port Said on Monday last. It would be interesting to place this cruiser in competition with the Dido or Isis on a distant voyage, such as the two latter vessels have recently so satisfactorily performed to the Far East.

Captain Harry S. F. Niblett, of the Diadem, temporarily detached from the Channel Squadron, entertained the Governor of Ferrol and the naval officers of that port at dinner, on Saturday last.

Captain F. E. E. Brock, of the Eclipse, arrived at Portsmouth on Saturday last, and will pay-off that cruiser, after completing a commission as flagship on the East Indian station.

Captain Cecil Burney, of the Sappho, left the Nore on Saturday last for the South-East Coast of America, to replace the Pegasus, recently paid off on return from that station.

Commander H. J. Laxton commissioned the Nymph, at Portsmouth, on Tuesday last to relieve the Swallow, on the South-East Coast of America.

Commander P. Vaughan-Lewis, of the Hazard, returns home in that vessel to pay her off on being relieved by Commander H. R. Floyd, of the Fearless, who is now on his way to rejoin the Mediterranean Squadron from the Cape command. The Speedwell was to have been the relieving vessel, but she is now detailed as tender to the Rodney, of the coastguard district at Queensferry.

Commander A. T. Stuart, whose appointment as Staff Captain and Queen's Harbour-Master at Malta was mentioned last week, has not, we understand, any intention of retiring unless compelled to do so, as he has over five years sea time in as a commander, and may reasonably expect promotion. Some of our previous statements may have conveyed the impression that Commander Stuart is practically shelved, but this is not the case.

Commander R. F. Scott, recently promoted from the Majestic, had an exceptionally gratifying send-off from that flagship at Berehaven last week, on leaving her to commence his hard work in preparing the South Polar expedition. The boat that conveyed him from the Majestic was manned by his late messmates Commander D. R. de Chair, Lieuts. A. W. Craig, C. L. Lewin, V. F. Tuson, and C. F. Fontaine, and Captain (Flag) G. le C. Egerton steered her. Commander Scott has been senior lieutenant and torpedo officer of the Channel flagship for more than three years, and his well-earned promotion, after eleven years' service as lieutenant is highly appreciated by every officer serving under the vice-admiral's flag.

Commander G. R. Bethel, M.P. for the Holderness division, contemplates withdrawing from election to the next Parliament.

Lieut. R. R. Gossett, invalided from the Magpie, arrived at Plymouth on Thursday in last week by the British and African steamship Sokoto from Accra.

Lieut. H. P. Ritchie, of the Excellent, was the winner of the officers' light weight final at the Army and Navy Boxing Championship at Aldershot on Saturday last.

Lieut. Arthur D. Barrow, promoted from the Proserpine, arrived home on Friday in last week by the Royal Mail steamship Orinoco from Barbados.

Lieut.-Colonel J. B. Leefe, R.M.A., commanding the forces at St. Helena, completed the qualifying period for brevet of colonel on the 29th ult. It would have been better had he been accorded the latter rank locally as soon as he assumed his present duties.

Lieut. F. S. Tanqueray-Willaine, R.M.A., won the Officers' Middle-weight final at the Army and Navy Boxing Championship on Saturday last at Aldershot.

Mr. George Diggs Laycock, who retired from the Transport Department of the Admiralty on account of age in October last, died on the 31st ult. He was appointed to the Admiralty, March 17, 1859; became a 3rd Class Clerk, May 4, 1860; Full Clerk April 1, 1870; Senior Clerk May 10, 1882. A good public servant, unobtrusive in his official capacity, he was a man free from all selfishness, and showed the greatest kindness to those who served with or under him. Many naval officers will regret to hear of his death, and though he was the last to wish any parade, it was a pity those in charge of his funeral had not let it be generally known that he was to be laid to rest on Tuesday last at Norwood Cemetery, for had they done so the Service would have been well represented.

THE CHINA CRISIS.

Monday, Sept. 3.

Count von Waldersee has telegraphed to the Emperor from Aden:—

"As the Imperial mail steamer Sachsen entered the port of Aden, the French troopship La Champagne, which was on her way to Colombo, steamed closely alongside the Sachsen, the band of the French vessel playing and the troops on board cheering. The band of the Sachsen struck up the "Marseillaise," which was immediately responded to by the strains of the German National Anthem from the French steamer."

Count von Waldersee accepted an invitation from the British Political Resident, who received the field-marshal with much ceremony, a guard of honour being drawn up and salutes fired. At five o'clock in the afternoon Count von Waldersee continued his voyage to China.

The steamer Formosa, which arrived at Hong Kong on Saturday from Amoy, reports that a great panic prevails there, and fully 50,000 Chinese have fled. The Formosa brought many refugees. The arrival of the Isis and the landing of British marines tend to restore confidence somewhat. The British Consul has issued a proclamation in Chinese addressed to British subjects. It says:—

"Owing to the landing of Japanese soldiers the people have become excited and are fleeing, but British subjects in Amoy and Kulangsu are hereby notified that they will be protected by the local authorities and the British Consul. The landing of British Marines is merely for their protection, and they are advised to keep quiet, attend to their business, and avoid excitement."

The warships at Amoy were:—British: Isis; German: Tiger; Russian: Rurik; French: Pascal; three Japanese and one American. Another despatch states that the Japanese landing parties have been withdrawn. Only a guard of 80 men remain ashore, and like the 60 British Marines these will presumably also be withdrawn shortly.

The British Government is reported to have given the viceroys Liu-kun-yi and Chang-chih-tung strong guarantees of support against the reported intention of the Empress-Dowager to supersede them on the ground of their foreign tendencies.

The transports Ashruff and Wardha have left Calcutta for China. The former has on board a Maxim, one officer, four warrant officers, 129 followers, 198 horses, "A" section of the British field hospital, a siege train, and a number of bullocks. The Wardha takes out the Bikamir Infantry, the Maharaja and his Aides-de-camp, two British and 14 native officers, 388 rank and file, and "B" section of the British field hospital. The German battle-ships Kurfuerst Friedrich Wilhelm, Brandenburg, Weissenburg and Woerth, and the cruiser Hela have left Hong Kong for the north. The transport Sumatra, with the staff of the 3rd Indian Brigade, a wing of the 6th Jats, two sections of a native field hospital, and audit office, the transport Dalhousie, carrying the Hyderabad contingent, and the German transport Dresden, conveying 26 officers and 926 men, have arrived at Hong Kong. The French gunboat Comète has left for Canton.

Tuesday, Sept. 4.

Three members of the Tsung-li-Yamen—Chung-li, Na-tung, and Ching-Hsin—are reported from Peking to be endeavouring to open negotiations with the allies though Sir Robert Hart with a view to preventing the destruction of the Imperial buildings. Communication by river with Tien-tsin and Taku is interrupted. The railway has been repaired as far as Yang-tsun, and trains are running between that place and Tien-tsin.

The commander of the Austro-Hungarian war vessel Kaiserin und Koenigin Maria Theresia states that the Imperial Palace has been occupied by the Allied troops. On Aug. 28 the detachments of all the Allied nations marched through the Palace as a demonstration of its capture.

General Orloff telegraphs:—

"On Aug. 24 I attacked the fortified position of the Chinese in the Shingan Pass, drove the enemy out, and occupied the pass, after which the enemy was further pursued. We captured six steel guns and 16 standards, among which was a white flag belonging to the Chinese commander. The whole transport of the enemy fled, and scattered so that no further opponents faced my detachment. Our casualties were three killed and 11 wounded. On the 26th ult. the detachment advanced to the station of Yal, 12 versts from Tsitsihar."

The total force proceeding from India to China consists of 516 British officers and 568 non-commissioned officers and men, 637 native officers, and 17,150 men, 1,365 drivers, 13,575 camp followers, 4,240 horses, 5,200 ponies and mules, 12 guns, and 16 Maxims.

The 5th Hyderabad Regiment has landed at Kowloon. There is reason to believe that Gen. Gaselee has stopped further troops proceeding to the north in compliance with orders from home.

Wednesday, Sept. 5.

Gen. Chaffee, telegraphing to the Adjutant-General Washington, reports that the present conditions are that hostilities have practically ceased, and only occasional shots are fired from cover. A small party is repairing the telegraph line and foraging. Inconsiderable bodies of Chinese troops and Boxers have been discovered near Peking or along the line of communication. Unless political reasons not apparent to him when writing demand a larger force, he intends to take 5,000 as the basis for his requirements for supplies. If troops remain they must winter in tents. No more pack trains are required. Waggon transport is the best. The water in the river is falling rapidly. Supplies must be hauled 40 miles. The railway will not be repaired before the river freezes.

The admiral second in command of the German cruiser squadron reports from Taku, under date 3rd inst., the arrival of the advanced party of the German China expeditionary force under Major Falkenhayn. Capt. Pohl telegraphed from Peking, under date 25th ult., that he occupied with a company of troops Coal Hill, in the Imperial City, on the previous day, and that the troops were to march through the palace on Aug. 28. About 2,000 Italian troops had arrived in the Taku roadstead.

Gen. Linevitch, telegraphs under date Aug. 21:—

"According to information received, Boxers and Chinese troops were reported to be in the southern part of the Imperial Park. On Aug. 20 I ordered a reconnaissance there with a detachment of the allied Russian, Japanese, American, and British troops. These troops reconnoitred the entire park for a distance of eighteen versts, but found no one. It was rumoured that the Chinese troops and Boxers had fled. The detachment bivouacked for the night in the park, and next day the Cossacks made a second reconnaissance to the south of the park and again found no one. The railway in the Peking district is completely destroyed, and all the plant has been burnt. No engines are left, and only the rails remain. The station at Mashan has been occupied by our troops. The work of repairing the railway is being carried on from both sides. Navigation on the Peiho River is becoming more and more difficult, owing to shallows. The railway from Tien-tsin to Peking has only been repaired as far as Yang-Tsun, where a bridge is in course of construction. The permanent way as far as Lofa Station is completely destroyed, as are also many bridges. The line from Yang-tsun to Peking, a distance of 100 versts, will have to be completely relaid. All the necessary material is being ordered up from Shanghai. Measures have been taken for the recovery of the stolen plant, for which rewards are offered."

Thursday, Sept. 6.

Li Hung Chang, Gen. Yung-Lu, Prince Ching, and Hsu-Tung have been appointed Peace Commissioners by an Imperial Edict dated from Tai-yuen-fu. The Commission is radically anti-foreign. Three of the members are Manchus, and the appointment of Hsu-Tung, who is the Emperor's tutor, is considered particularly obnoxious.

An Imperial decree, dated from Tai-yuen-fu on Aug. 20, says that the Court fled from Peking owing to the disturbances between the Boxers and the Christians, and lest the Emperor might be killed, and thus leave no one to continue the ancestral worship. The Empress Dowager, in the decree, exhorts the Viceroy to unite in order to avenge the injuries inflicted on China by the Powers, and also to raise taxes and enrol troops.

The tone of the decree is defiant and unrepentant.

The order holding back the fourth brigade of Indian troops for China has been cancelled, and the entire force will proceed at once for the Far East.

The transports Austria and Electra have left Odessa for the Far East, with 600 Russian troops on board.

Friday, Sept. 7.

The Admiral second in command of the German cruiser Squadron at Taku telegraphs:—

"Capt. Pohl reports as follows from Peking:—On Aug. 26 the Russian General paid a visit to the German quarters, and expressed himself in laudatory terms concerning the order and discipline of our troops. Relations with the people are good. Part of the German detachment occupied and cleansed the Chinese city. Proclamations of a conciliatory nature have been issued. On Aug. 27 two cases of heat apoplexy occurred, and in the Marine battalion some cases of dysentery have been reported. Berger, a marine of the Peking detachment, has died of a wound on the head. On Aug. 28 a march was made through the Palace, the troops entering at the southern and leaving by the northern gate. The march through the reception halls and rooms left an impression of dirt and neglect. No treasures were observed. Later the Palace was again closed. According to rumour, the Empress only fled on the morning of Aug. 15. On Aug. 31 the second Marine battalion arrived at Peking. After handing the command over to Major-Gen. Hoefner, I shall commence the return march to Tien-tsin with the landing force, who are much in need of rest. Companies of seamen will be posted at the different halting-places to protect the water communication."

The transport Itaura has left Calcutta with "D" Squadron of the Jodhpur Lancers and part of the 61st Native Field Hospital. Brigadier-Gen. Pipon also left for China in this vessel. The German cruiser Schwalbe has left Hong Kong for Amoy. Gen. Voyron and his staff have arrived at Saigon on their way to China.

SIR EDWARD SEYMOUR'S DASH ON PEKING.

FOREIGN REPORTS.

Wherever the statement, emanating from a foreign source, reflecting on the conduct of a portion of the British force which accompanied Sir Edward Seymour in his gallant attempt to effect the relief of the Legations at Peking, is to be found, it is not found in the reports of foreign officers who were with the column. The Vice-Admiral has reported that there is no truth in the statement, and that he had been unable to trace the origin of the attack on the conduct of the men engaged.

A long report, reciting the operations of the column, has been presented by Capt. McCalla, U.S.N., the officer who came into such prominent notice during the march. The following are extracts bearing upon the gallantry of the British forces:—

"Among the many acts of courage during the day (June 22) was a deed of conspicuous bravery and readiness of resource which reflects credit upon the whole naval profession, and was done by a British blue-jacket from the Centurion, Edward Turner, and Seaman George, from the Aurora. Shortly after the enemy opened fire from the arsenal grounds one of the junks in which there were British and American wounded drifted across the river and grounded against the bank occupied by the Chinese. These two bluejackets, forming a part of the guard of the junk, sprang overboard, and pushing the junk afloat, towed her out of the line of fire, and anchored her securely to the bank, but unfortunately not until three of the wounded had been killed, while the other inmates expected death.

"About midnight of the 22nd-23rd Admiral Seymour ordered 100 British marines under Capt. Doig, R.M.I. to attempt to reach Tien-tsin by a night march. This force, with Mr. Curtis as a guide, advanced a mile or more in the direction of the railway, but receiving a heavy fire from a strong force of Chinese on three sides, was obliged to fall back on the arsenal grounds, having suffered some loss, though gallant charges failed to scatter the enemy in the darkness.

"At early dawn a heavy fire was opened on the enclosure marked C by a force of Chinese who had entered the grounds during the night. It was an inspiring sight to witness the promptness and courage with which the line of British marines under Major Johnstone sprang forward apparently as one man and drove the enemy from in and about the locality marked B over the western rampart and on to the plain beyond. Unfortunately Capt. Beyts, a gallant and accomplished officer, with three of his command who were with him ahead of the others were killed.

"I hesitate somewhat to refer to the senior naval officer's admirable direction of the naval forces acting concurrently for the relief of the several Legations in Peking, both while attempting to reach the capital over a railway partially destroyed, and during the far more difficult and hazardous operation of falling back from Yang-tsun to Tien-tsin, encumbered by wounded who could not be left to a merciless foe, opposed by infantry, artillery, and cavalry of the Imperial Chinese army; assisted by Boxers, who, there was evidence to show, had recently received arms from the arsenals of China. But Vice-Admiral Seymour's knowledge and ability are so eminent, and his tact and consideration so great and constant, that I may say that the officers and men of the eight nationalities were only too pleased to execute his wishes which were accepted in reality as orders; so that 2,000 seamen and marines under his command or associated with him became a harmonious body actuated by but one purpose. But I should fail altogether in my duty as a brother seaman did I not call to the attention of the Government the honour which Admiral Seymour conferred upon our Navy by not hesitating to call upon the officers from the Newark to assist his own magnificent body of bluejackets and marines; the esteem which he showed for our country by assigning me to the charge of the first train and afterwards of the construction train; the confidence which caused him to place officers and men from his fleet under my personal command, and his great kindness in permitting his overworked medical officers to care for our wounded who were, I am mortified to state, without the services of one of our own surgeons. During the almost continuous engagements with the enemy Admiral Seymour was constantly with the advance, and so freely exposed himself that both his own officers and mine feared lest we should be deprived of his conspicuous skill in directing our movements. It would be a source of unequalled gratification to the officers and men of the Newark who were associated with Vice-Admiral Seymour's command, if our own Government would offer this distinguished officer some appropriate and tangible recognition of his services to our nation.

"I beg also to suggest and ask that the following-mentioned officers of the naval forces acting concurrently for the relief of the Legations in Peking be offered medals for aiding the United States forces under my command and for supporting us in action, by reason of which our list of killed and wounded was not greater, viz:—

"To Capt. J. R. Jellicoe, R.N., commanding H.M.S. Centurion, and chief of staff to Admiral Seymour, for valuable and repeated assistance.

"To Major J. Johnstone, of H.M.S. Centurion, commanding the British marines, whose courage and qualities as a military officer entitle him to the greatest respect, and whose support in battle was prompt and always to be relied upon.

"To Gunnery Lieut. E. G. S. Crofton, R.N., of H.M.S. Centurion, whose skill successfully destroyed the Siku arsenal, thus preventing large numbers of Chinese from receiving arms and ammunition from storehouse for use in the future.

"To Fleet-Surgeon Thomas M. Sibbald, R.N., and Surgeons Edward B. Pickthorn and Eric D. Macnamara, R.N., for skilful treatment of 25 wounded Americans, notwithstanding they had the care of a great number of their own wounded."

Capt. McCalla makes the same request in the case of Mr. C. W. Campbell, of the British Consular Corps, Capt. von Usedom, of the Hertha, Capt. de Marolles, of the D'Entrecasteaux, Capt. Tchagin, of the Rossia, Capt. Mori, of the Japanese Navy, Lieut. Siranni, of the Calabria, and Midshipman Prochowaka, of the Zenta.

The Figaro has published the text of the official report in which Capt. de Marolles, who commanded the French contingent, describes the operations of the column from day to day. Appended to this document are the following comments addressed by Capt. de Marolles to Admiral de Courrejolles:—

"You know, Admiral, how delicate is the direction and how difficult the maintenance of agreement in a force composed of different nationalities. We have had the good fortune to have encountered no serious difficulties in this respect, thanks to the high position and perfect courtesy of Admiral Seymour. It is very fortunate for us that he met with no mishap in any of the instances in which his bravery led him to expose himself.

"I received the devoted support of the officers under my orders. All of them did honour to their uniform, and I commend to your most favourable notice the names given in my list of men deserving of reward. The conduct of our petty officers and seamen, from a military point of view, was excellent. They advanced bravely to the assault, although it is doubtless an exaggeration to compare their conduct, as Admiral Seymour told them, with that of the old French troops which he had under his orders at Sebastopol.

"Admiral Seymour regarded the French detachment as the first detachment of his force. Their weak point was the difficulty experienced in making them, when acting as sentries, execute orders which were not entirely military, and, above all, their carelessness in regard to supplies, especially their childish want of foresight in not preserving their food and water. This want of foresight was the source of much tribulation to their officers. But these are points of military education in which our men have not been trained."

The following list of officers who accompanied the expedition was issued this week with the Admiral's despatch:—

CENTURION.—Vice-Admiral Sir Edward H. Seymour K.C.B.; Flag Lieut. F. A. Powlett; Sec. F. C. Alton; Sec's Clerks W. G. Littlejohns, H. W. E. Mainie; Flag Capt. J. R. Jellicoe (wounded, June 21, Pei-tsang); Commander C. D. Granville; Lieuts. G. M. K. Fair, G. Lowther-Crofton (G.), J. L. F. Luttrell, J. W. Fair, W. J. Bamber (wounded, June 21, Pei-tsang), C. H. Sinclair; Major J. R. Johnstone, R.M.I.; Capt. H. W. H. Beyts, R.M.A. (killed, June 23, Hsiku); Chaplain and Naval Instr. Rev. E. F. Harrison Smith, M.A.; Fleet Surg. T. M. Sibbald; Sub-Lieut. M. E. Cochran; Surg. E. B. Pickthorn; Asst.-Paymr. C. J. R. Rotter; Engr. G. H. Cockey; Asst.-Engr. G. H. Starr; Act.-Gunner C. Davidge (T.), Act.-Gunner F. Samuels (Q.D.D.), Carpenter J. Attrill; Midshipmen H. Boyes, W. B. C. Jones, C. D. Burke (wounded June 21, Pei-tsang), S. R. Bailey, St. A. St. John, G. B. Alexander, H. L. Shephard, P. W. Douglas, R. L. Jernain, E. O. B. Osborne, F. O. B. Wilson (wounded June 21, Pei-tsang), J. C. Davis, Clerk A. E. Tabuteau (wounded June 21, Pei-tsang).

Navy Foreign.

The French Superior Council of the Navy has been re-organised, and the details have now been published. The members are appointed to the Council for two years, but may be continued in their office. They are empowered through the Minister to call before them any officer or functionary of the Navy whose advice may appear useful, though no deliberation of the Council may take place in the presence of such officers. The Minister may charge the members of the Council to make inspections at the ports or other naval establishments, as well as of the squadrons or divisions at home or abroad. They will possess the widest powers and be the delegates of the Minister, and, within the limit of the duties assigned to them, will have equal rank among themselves, with authority over all other officers. In the case of a concentration of squadrons, any member of the Council may be appointed to the supreme command. Every law, decree, order or regulation, upon which the advice of the Council has been taken will be proceeded by a new formula: "The Superior Council of the Navy having been heard." But the Minister, who will alone be responsible, will not be bound by the advice of the Council. There seems in this organisation to be a rather close approach to the system of our Board of Admiralty, where the First Lord, though working with his colleagues, is personally responsible. In making their visits to ports or squadrons, the members of the Council are instructed to report to the Minister. They will receive the honours accorded to the Vice-Admirals who were Inspectors-General under a decree of October, 1891, and will hoist their flags, at all times when they wear their epaulettes, on board vessels or boats, but if they visit a ship which forms part of a squadron they will first take the orders of the Minister on this point.

A new committee concerning which orders have been issued is the Consultative Committee of the Navy, a purely advisory body. The purpose is generally explained by its title, and the committee is assisted on all technical questions by the engineering, victualling, medical, and other officers. Here, again, the Minister being responsible is not bound by the advice of the committee. This body will meet at least twice a week. The Promotion Committee will be presided over by the Minister, the chief of the staff being a member of each of its branches. The committee for the promotion of officers will include three vice-admirals, appointed by the Minister, two rear-admirals, drawn by lot from among those of the rank in Paris or at the ports. In the case of promotion in any special branch, three members of that special branch will be attached to the Promotion Committee.

The budget of the Austrian Navy for the year 1901 amounts on the ordinary charges to 28,521,660 crowns, being an increase of 2,965,610 crowns as compared with 1890, while the extraordinary charges will be 14,969,160 crowns, an increase of 1,058,710 crowns. The ordinary charges include sums for the completion of the torpedo cruiser Aspern, for carrying forward the Saigerlar of the Zenta type, the cruiser E, and a mining tender, and for laying down the battleship A, of 10,000 tons, to replace the old Laudon. In the extraordinary charges are sums for completing the cruiser Kaiser Karl VI., and for carrying forward the Habsburg and the battleships II. and III. Provision is also to be made for the armament of these vessels, and for carrying on a good deal of work at the ports.

The United States Navy Department has received from Rear-Admiral Remey a report upon the damage suffered by the battleship Oregon when she lately struck upon a rock, near Port Arthur, which was not in the chart. She was taken to the Japanese arsenal at Kure, and when she was examined it was discovered that the damage was much more serious than had at first been supposed, and that it would be necessary to make complete repairs. Naval Engineer Hobson has left for Japan to investigate the case, and it is stated that five or six months must elapse before the Oregon can again go to sea.

ADMIRAL SIR HUGH PALLISER, BART, F.R.S.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I have only now been able to see Mr. Clowes's "History of the Royal Navy." In his third volume he is unjust to Admiral Sir Hugh Palliser. He has apparently derived all his information from the Keppel point of view, and hence is harsh to a distinguished and deserving naval officer. His bias against Palliser is plain, while ignorance of the admiral's life and career deprives that portion of the history of interest. My family, as also Hunt's Life of Sir Hugh, records Keppel as abandoning Palliser to his fate when the latter was surrounded by the French fleet. The bitter Whig abandoned the determined Tory, and all the lengthened and wearisome arguments of Mr. Clowes to exalt the Whig, does not alter the facts regarding his conduct towards the Tory admiral. As to facts, your Navy readers may be interested to hear that Palliser's ship, the Formidable, of 80 guns, in this action had 75 large shot in her hull, five of them under water, with 16 men killed and 49 wounded, far more than any other ship in the fleet. I have the list of injuries to the Formidable's masts and sails, which were riddled. Why did not Mr. Clowes draw attention to that in a few words? A historian should study his subject properly to avoid insensibly becoming a partisan. Mr. Clowes should read the Life of Sir Hugh, which he has probably not yet done, and note the letters from Paris, showing the views of the French. Allow me to add that observing the gallant conduct in an action of one of his crew, named Cook, of the Eagle, 64 guns, he helped to educate him; and when Governor of Newfoundland he appointed Cook, whom he had had raised to the grade of master, to survey the coasts of the island. It is notorious to this day that this survey was carried out by Capt. Cook in a splendid manner. As Fellow of the Royal Society and Comptroller of the Navy, Palliser, with the warm support of George III. and Sir Joseph Banks, F.R.S., succeeded in getting Cook appointed to observe the transit of Venus, and afterwards to circumnavigate the world. He selected the Endeavour, in the Thames, for his protege, and chose the necessary instruments, some of which Mr. Clowes can now see in the museum of the R. U. S. Institution. When Cook was slain Palliser erected a monument to his memory on the summit of the hill at his seat, Vache Park, Bucks, where it is still to be seen in good repair. Several bullets had lodged in the old officer's body, which caused him great suffering from time to time. Towards his end, George III., who was always very friendly and interested in his work, sent a groom on horseback every day from Windsor Castle to the Vache, to inquire about the admiral's health. When Governor of Greenwich Hospital he gave one or two valuable portraits he had painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds, of chums of his, to the Painted Gallery. Your valuable journal is so widely read by the officers and men of the British Fleet that I am anxious to remove false impressions on their minds, should any have been formed. The latter part of this letter is more family matter than subjects for a history, but I trust your readers won't mind that.

EDWARD PALLISER,
Major, late 7th Hussars.

Army and Navy Club, Sept. 5.

LORD LANSDOWNE, in consequence of the great increase in the price of coal at home stations, has issued revised rates of commuted allowances in lieu of fuel and lights. The increase for all classes is considerable, and will take effect from July 1 last.

At Aldershot the experiment is being tried of replacing the trained hospital orderlies by properly trained civilian male nurses. Some twenty-five have been engaged, and are doing duty in the Cambridge and Connaught Hospitals.

THE site of the proposed new rifle range in the Lea Marshes has been surveyed by the military authorities, and notification has been given to the London County Council.

A YORKSHIRE MEMORIAL.—The movement in Yorkshire promoted by the three Lords Lieutenant to erect near York Minster a monument to the memory of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the Yorkshire regiments and of all Yorkshiremen engaged in Her Majesty's services who have lost their lives in South Africa during the war has met with a hearty support. Up to Saturday about £400 had been subscribed, this sum including £59 given at a military service in the Minster. Subscriptions are limited to a maximum of £10, the object being to make the movement as general as possible in the county. The Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Londesborough Lord Deramore, Major-Gen. Thynne, Lord Masham, the Earl of Scarborough, Col. Hon. L. P. Dawnay, Col. Wellsted, Col. Hildred Carlile, the Marquis of Ripon, and the Marquis of Zetland are among those who have given £10 each.

THERE was to have been another experimental mobilisation of troops in the Thames district on Thursday, but the Commander-in-Chief decided from various causes that the proposal should be abandoned.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL MEDICAL SCHOOL,

Albert Embankment, London, S.E.

The WINTER SESSION of 1900-1901 will OPEN on TUESDAY, Oct. 2, when the Prizes will be distributed at three p.m., by Sir William MacCormac, Bart., K.C.V.O., in the Governors' Hall. Three Entrance Scholarships will be offered for competition in September, viz., one of £150 and one of £60 in Chemistry and Physics, with either physiology, botany, or zoology, for first year's students; one of £50 in anatomy, physiology, chemistry (any two) for third year's students from the Universities.

Scholarships and money prizes of the value of £300 are awarded at the Sessional Examinations, as well as several medals.

Special Classes are held throughout the year for the preliminary scientific and intermediate M.B. Examinations of the University of London.

All hospital appointments are open to students without charge.

Cub rooms and an athletic ground are provided for students.

The school buildings and the hospital can be seen on application to the medical secretary.

The fees may be paid in one sum or by instalments. Entries may be made separately to lecture or to hospital practice, and special arrangements are made for students entering from the Universities and for qualified practitioners.

A register of approved lodgings is kept by the medical secretary, who also has a list of local medical practitioners, clergymen, and others who receive students into their houses.

For prospectus and all particulars apply to Mr. Rendle, the Medical Secretary.

PROGRESS OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

THE temporary return of Lord Roberts to Pretoria, as indicated by his despatch of Monday, was an important event, as demonstrating clearly that he considered his brilliant campaign against Botha to have been crushing and decisive, and that the scattered remnants of the Boer general's forces might be left to be dealt with by the pursuing columns of Sir Redvers Buller and his other capable lieutenants operating in the eastern Transvaal. The Commander-in-Chief returned to the front on Wednesday, after placing the Transvaal under martial law, and giving evidence before the Hospitals Commission. Although we have for some time become accustomed to the snatching of easy victories from commandoes more sensitive about their means of retreat than the defence of their positions, the feebleness of the stand made in the defensible mountain gorges south of Lydenburg was surprising, considering the great importance of that town to the enemy's cause, and that but few strategic points now remain in their hands. The comparatively undisputed capture of Lydenburg was due in a great measure to the swift turning movement of General Ian Hamilton, advancing from the south-west by the Dullstroom road round the Boer right flank while Sir Redvers Buller engaged their left. By means of the turning movement by one or both flanks, and employed either alone or in combination with the frontal attack, Lord Roberts has gained his victories throughout this remarkable war, and has gained them as a rule with very slight loss to his men, though doubtless with a high percentage of wastage amongst his horses. The mere approach of Ian Hamilton was sufficient to cause the enemy to retire from the fortified pass leading to Lydenburg, leaving the way clear for Buller's advance, and on the 6th inst. the British cavalry occupied the town, the main columns being then but five miles from it.

The Boer forces retired as our troops advanced, and divided, part going north with most of their guns and stores towards Kruger's Post, and part towards Spitzkop, a lofty, isolated hill, surrounded by mountains, twenty-five miles to the east. The latter portion, checking their retreat, took up a fresh position on a hill 1,800ft. high, within cannon-shot of Lydenburg and commanding it, whence they were driven with loss on Saturday by General Lyttelton's Division and General Ian Hamilton's column, and forced to continue their retreat over the Mauch mountains to Spitzkop. In this action the 1st Batn. Royal Scots, 1st Batn. Devonshire Regt., and the 1st Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers carried out the main attack on the enemy's front with great gallantry, a turning movement being impracticable. The steady demeanour on the occasion of the Volunteer Company 2nd Batn. Gordon Highlanders, composed largely of members of the London Scottish, in the face of a heavy fire, which caused much loss in their ranks, was brought specially to notice by General Buller.

On Sunday, Buller, in active pursuit towards Spitzkop, crossed the Mauchberg ten miles east of Lydenburg, and became again engaged in a country of extreme difficulty, the roads being, as he reported, "too bad for description." Meanwhile General French, who had again passed to the south of the railway, left Carolina on Sunday with Dickson's and Gordon's Cavalry Brigades, Mahon's Mounted Infantry, two battalions of infantry, and 4.7in. naval guns, and advanced towards Barberton. He was opposed throughout the entire march, but drove the enemy successively from three positions, one of which was taken with great dash by the 1st Batn. Suffolk Regiment. The column crossed the Komati River on Monday and was reported on Wednesday to have been heavily engaged again. General Hutton having reinforced Colonel Henry's Mounted Infantry, operating nearer to the railway, was engaged at the same time in the difficult country about Waterval Onder, and General Pole-Carew, occupying with his infantry the central position as before, witnessed the fight from the hills to the north of the same place. Hutton by a rapid turning movement caused the enemy to abandon their strong position and to retire hastily. On Monday Buller, driving the routed Boers before him, was within ten miles of Spitzkop. He had captured en route many waggons containing food and ammunition, and fourteen had been thrown down a mountain precipice by the enemy, who despaired of getting them clear of their pursuers. On Tuesday this column occupied the junction of roads from east and south near Spitzkop, the enemy retiring, some to Nelspruit, and others north across the Sahie Drift. Hutton was then moving forward to reinforce French on the right, Ian Hamilton, passing through Helvetia, was due at Waterval Onder on Thursday, and Pole-Carew was moving on by Nooitgedacht to Godwaan Station. The entire front covered by the British advance, which has been slow owing to the difficulties of the country, has been little short of fifty miles.

Telegraphing on Thursday, from Machadodorp at 6.20 p.m., Lord Roberts announced that Sir Redvers Buller was comfortably settled in Spitzkop, where they found 300,000 lbs. weight of Boer supplies, principally rice, sugar, flour and coffee, and 300 boxes of Martini-Henry ammunition.

The War correspondent of a leading journal, telegraphing from Belfast on Monday, announced that at a council of war the Boer chiefs had definitely decided to make a formal declaration of guerilla warfare. This need cause us no uneasiness. It would be in itself a confession of the complete defeat and disintegration of the organised Boer armies in the field. It would threaten nothing more than what is already in full operation in various districts throughout the Orange River and Vaal River Colonies, and it would have the advantage of clearly defining the situation, and of concentrating the best energies of the Commander-in-Chief and his generals to the thorough disarmament of the country, as Lord Roberts has indicated in the proclamation he issued on hearing of the departure of President Kruger and resignation of General Botha. The general situation is as follows:—To the north of the Delagoa Railway General Buller occupies Spitzkop. General Pole-Carew is advancing along the line, General Ian Hamilton to the north of it, and General French twenty miles to the south. In the south General Hunter is organising a movement against the raiding commandoes known to be infesting the Ladybrand, Ficksburg, and Senekal districts, and the small British garrisons of those towns have been withdrawn to form part of his force. The western Transvaal has been traversed from Mafeking towards Lichtenburg by Lord Methuen, who on Sunday attacked and dispersed a commando at Malopo Oog, capturing many prisoners, waggons, and much ammunition. Colonel Dalgety, at present commanding General Little's Cavalry Brigade, has experienced in the same district some severe fighting during several days, and suffered a rather heavy loss at Quagafontein on the 7th inst., and General Douglas, in an action south-east of Ottoshoop on Tuesday, beat off an attack and captured stores. A Boer force some 4,000 strong is still reported to be in the Zeerust district. In the south-east Transvaal General Hildyard, moving from the Natal Railway near Volksrust, occupied Wakkerstroom on the 5th, the Boers under Joshua Joubert retiring, and on Monday he forced the Langwacht Pass, making for Utrecht. General Clery advanced from Standerton on the 8th against a body of Boers threatening the line in his quarter. In the central Transvaal General Clements has been marching through the Pretoria district, where he was successfully engaged on Saturday with a force under Delarey near Kekepoort, between Krugersdorp and Rustenburg, while General Hart, operating to the south-west of Krugersdorp, has been clearing the vicinity of the railway there. Commandant Theron is now known to have fallen in one of the actions in this district. De Wet was believed to have joined Theron south of Johannesburg, and their combined force was stated to be 1,800 strong, but to be without guns. The latest surmise, however, regarding De Wet is that he heads the guerilla bands about Thaba N'chu.

With relentless energy the enemy's parties make descents at all points on the railways, firing into and derailing trains, and ripping up the rails. On the night of the 5th the engine of a train was destroyed by dynamite between Pretoria and Belfast, and the train derailed, and a span of a bridge has been demolished by the same means on the Krugersdorp line. The northern posts continue to be held by General Paget and Colonel Plumer, where they watch the bush-veldt now becoming too unhealthy to harbour the enemy much longer. For the same reason Warmbaths has been evacuated by Paget. Thus over the entire field the British forces are now widely dispersed, operating for the most part by almost independent divisions or brigades, and based on the railways, which are guarded by continuous chains of defensive posts. The chief requirement is still, as from the beginning, an almost unlimited supply of horsemen to confer on our flying columns the mobility necessary to hunt down, circumvent, and destroy the numerous bands of mounted guerillas raiding the country. It is satisfactory to learn that between now and October 25 nearly 13,000 fresh horses will reach South Africa. That complete success will finally crown the efforts of Lord Roberts there is now no reason to doubt, and the disappearance in flight of ex-President Kruger from the scene is an important step towards the desired end.

LORD WOLSELEY'S RETIREMENT.

AS the time approaches when Lord Wolseley will complete his term of office as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, the question naturally arises as to what his lordship's pension is to be. According to the provisions of the Royal Warrant, Lord Wolseley is entitled as a field-marshal to an allowance of £1,300 a year; but, having regard to his long and distinguished career, and the great value of the services he has rendered to the Army, an exception, we understand, will be made in his favour. For a period of fifty years Lord Wolseley has spared himself in nothing. The Army has been his one and constant thought. He has been a soldier before all things, and has been instrumental in introducing many reforms which were urgently needed to place our land forces somewhat on a par with the military system of the Continent. The whole Empire has benefited by his work; benefited to an extent which future generations will recognise and appreciate. That an officer of his distinction should go into retirement with the pension of £1,300 a year only, would be a national scandal, and this, we are pleased to find, is the view of those who have been directly associated with his lordship at the War Office. When it is considered what the retiring allowances are to which eminent lawyers are entitled, it will be allowed by even the most exacting of economists that an officer who has risen by his own merit, and his own merit only, to the high position which Lord Wolseley occupies should not be cast aside in his declining years unrecognised by the State he has served so well. If the war in South Africa has done nothing more it has at least shown this—that the officers of our Army will make any sacrifice at the call of duty, their lives are at the country's service, their reputations may be irretrievably ruined for others' faults. It is only right that these facts should be kept in view. The distinguished lawyer runs none of the risks of the soldier in high command. He has the machinery of the court under his complete control within four walls. Not so the general in the field.

The task which Lord Wolseley has had set him during his term of office has been herculean in its dimensions. No four walls have compassed his responsibilities. It is well that this should be considered at the present moment, when a splendid career is drawing to its close, and it is left for the Government to decide how the nation can best reward the brave and honoured soldier, who for half of a century has carried his life in his hand in its service, and has led the way in every reform calculated to advance the welfare of its army. In Burma, in India, in China, in Canada, in Ashanti, in South Africa, in Cyprus, in Egypt, and in the Soudan Lord Wolseley has borne the burden as a servant of the Empire, and he lately crowned his brilliant achievements in the field by five years of office as Commander-in-Chief during four campaigns, which have put the organising capacity of our administrators, the leadership of our generals, and the fighting capacity of our soldiers to the severest possible test. On the North-West Frontier of India in 1897-98, and in the Soudan in 1898 the result left nothing to be desired. Victory in South Africa may have been more dearly won, but the formidable character of the opposition which our forces have had to face is in itself evidence of the great strain which the Commander-in-Chief of the Army has had to bear during months of anxious waiting whilst operations have been in progress thousands of miles away from London. Is all this to go for naught? Is the Commander-in-Chief of the Army of a huge and scattered Empire, one who has been fighting the country's battles for half a century, to be placed in a lower position than the superannuated judge? If ever a man deserved well of his country Lord Wolseley does, and we feel sure we express the views not of the Army only but of the Empire at large, when we express a hope that Lord Lansdowne may be successful in his endeavours to obtain for Lord Wolseley the recognition he so richly deserves.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE ARMY.

ON Monday last the Morning Post, in a powerful leading article dealing with the momentous subject of the status, powers, and qualifications that should be sought for in the successor to the outgoing Commander-in-Chief, entered boldly on a field where hitherto angels have feared to tread. After duly discussing the weighty question that presents itself, it declared that "The true solution of the problem seems, therefore, to consist in the appointment of Lord Roberts on his return from the Cape to succeed Lord Lansdowne as Secretary of State for War," . . . "with a younger general of his choice as Commander-in-Chief." It is not to be supposed that this view will be accepted by politicians on either side; nor indeed do soldiers generally regard the proposal with the favour that they might be expected to do. Many thinking men are strongly of opinion that the time has not arrived for such a reform, but rather favour the idea of an independent report from the Commander-in-Chief annually as to the state of the Army, and indicating its most pressing wants. At the same time, it has been long patent to all, whether military men or civilians, who have carefully thought the matter out, in view of the enormous growth of the Empire and the yearly augmenting demands upon the military forces of the Crown, that the anomalous state of things now existing in the relations between the Secretary of State for War, the Commander-in-Chief, and Parliament, cannot indefinitely continue with safety to the Commonwealth.

The position of the Commander-in-Chief, as constituted by Mr. Balfour in 1895, and still existing, is an absurdity, a makeshift arrangement to save the amour propre of Civilian Secretaries of State for War, indefensible in itself, and subordinating the status of the military Chief of the Army, and through him the efficiency and interests of the Army itself, which are primary concerns of the Empire, to considerations of statecraft. To give the Civilian Secretary of State for War power to call on the Commander-in-Chief for his best consideration of a vital military matter affecting the defence of the Empire or the conduct of a war, while at the same moment he can consult the heads of the several military departments, which properly should be subordinated to the Commander-in-Chief in their relation to the Secretary of State, and can take or reject at will the advice of the Commander-in-Chief, is to place the latter exalted officer in a false, an invidious, and a humiliating position, derogatory alike to himself as a soldier of long service and tried experience, and also to the Army of which he is the military chief. A modern army is a very comprehensive, if not a complicated, machine, requiring for its proper management experts with special training; and to place such a machine, so constituted, under the supreme direction of a civilian, however personally capable or endued with whatever good intentions, must produce imperfect and unsatisfactory results, if not end in absolute failure. It is in no spirit of disparagement of Lord Lansdowne, who has grappled with enormous difficulties with vigour and capacity, we say that the qualifications required in the chief of an important department cannot be looked for under existing circumstances in the civilian head of the War Office. Both the Minister for War and the Commander-in-Chief are placed in an impossible position as matters stand at the War Office at the present time. The system now existing, if system it can be called, cannot be defended, and must be swept away.

There need be no fear of an attempt at the exercise of undue power resulting from the placing of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army in a proper position of authority over the officers of his own staff. Parliament must still be the supreme judge as to whether proposals involving the expenditure of money shall be carried into effect or not. The War Minister's duty has been performed when, after arriving at a conscientious conviction that such and such measures are absolutely necessary, he has laid them, with full explanation, before Parliament. What the Army requires for its effective organisation and administration is a War Minister acquainted, in a general sense, with its requirements, both in the relations of its several parts to the whole, and in its relation as a whole to the Empire which it has, together with the Navy, to safeguard. Such a Minister alone can be entitled to hold office in Pall Mall, but unless the officer filling the position of Commander-in-Chief is supported by the Minister for War there must be friction, and directly that happens the interests of the nation are bound to suffer. On the appropriateness of the appointment of the Secretary of State for War depends that of the Commander-in-Chief, and with the high functions of the latter in the hands of the first soldier in the land, the position of the former becomes simplified. But if the Commander-in-Chief is to be more or less a puppet, and is to be interfered with even in the business of his own department, what can be looked for but failure directly the machinery of the office is submitted to anything in the form of a strain. We agree with those who have gone into the subject most thoroughly that the issue of an annual report by the Commander-in-Chief to be made public only on a vote of the House of Commons, would make a great advance in the direction of military administration. But before anything else is done one step is essentially necessary: The Commander-in-Chief must cease to occupy the position he does at present, which is indefensible from every point of view but that of the unsympathetic statesman who does not want to be bothered with ugly questions of national defence, which he cannot understand, and may be too wrapped up in party controversies to have time to master.

Army Notes.

A telegram from Simla gives particulars of the proposed reliefs between India and England when the war is over. The regiments, it is said, to proceed to India will be the 5th and 6th Dragoon Guards and 9th and 12th Lancers. Two batteries R.H.A. will also move from the Cape, viz. G and J. The Field Batteries named for Indian service are the 13th, 18th, 61st, 67th, 69th, and 75th. The 10th Mountain Battery will go there, as will also the following infantry units, viz., the 2nd Batn. King's (Liverpool) Regiment (8th), 1st Batn. Devonshire Regiment (11th), 2nd Batn. Leicestershire Regiment (17th) (from Egypt), 1st Batn. Gloucestershire Regiment (28th) (from Ceylon), 1st Batn. Royal Sussex Regiment (35th), 1st Batn. Essex Regiment (44th), 2nd Batn. Shropshire Light Infantry (53rd), 2nd Batn. King's Royal Rifles (60th) (from Ceylon), 1st Batn. Durham Light Infantry (68th), 1st Batn. Seaforth Highlanders (72nd) (from Egypt), and 2nd Batn. Gordon Highlanders. The units to be removed from India are the 22nd, 50th, and 70th Batteries R.F.A., 3rd Mountain Battery, 1st Batn. Buffs (3rd) to the Mediterranean, 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Regiment (18th) to Malta, 1st Batn. Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (32nd) to Ceylon, 1st Batn. Royal West Kent Regiment (50th) from Aden, 1st Batn. Shropshire Light Infantry (53rd) to Aden, 2nd Batn. Essex Regiment to England, 2nd Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers (104th) to England, 2nd Batn. Durham Light Infantry (106th) to England, and 2nd Batn. Royal Sussex Regiment (107th) to England.

The only fault which can be found with the arrangements, so far as cavalry are concerned, is the return of the 5th Dragoon Guards to India. The regiment has already been ten years abroad, and will be the first for return to England when it gets back to Indian quarters. The artillery reliefs show that the G and J Batteries, R.H.A., go back to India. G Battery went from St. John's Wood to South Africa, and J Battery from Bangalore. The Field Artillery brigades which proceed to India are the 1st, which includes the 13th, 67th, and 69th Batteries, and the 3rd, made up of the 18th, 62nd, and 75th Batteries. The 13th, 67th, and 69th Batteries were serving in Natal prior to the war; the 18th, 62nd, and 75th were mobilised at Aldershot and sent out in November last. As regards infantry little can be said against the arrangements. The battalions in India first for relief are at present — we take them in order of precedence — the 2nd Royal Munster Fusiliers (104th) which went abroad in July, 1882; 2nd Royal Sussex Regiment (107th), July, 1882; 1st Royal West Kent Regiment (50th), August, 1882; 2nd Durham Light Infantry (106th), August, 1882; 2nd Essex Regiment (56th), August, 1882; 1st Shropshire Light Infantry (53rd), August, 1882; 1st Black Watch (42nd), August, 1882; 2nd York and Lancaster Regiment (84th), October, 1883; and 2nd Royal Irish Regiment (18th), February, 1884. It will be seen that all but two of these — the Black Watch and York and Lancaster Regiments — are to be brought home, or, at least, homewards. This will leave the Black Watch and the York and Lancaster, with the 1st Batn. East Surrey Regiment (31st), 2nd Batn. South Lancashire Regiment (82nd), and 1st Batn. Hampshire Regiment (37th), first for relief. The passing over of the Black Watch and York and Lancaster is, of course, due to the fact that they have been in India, comparatively speaking, very long, as before going there they had some years Colonial experience.

The regiments ordered from India for service in South Africa were the 5th Dragoon Guards, 9th Lancers, 16th Lancers, 19th Hussars, 1st Batn. Devonshire, 1st Batn. Gloucestershire, 2nd Batn. King's Royal Rifles, and 2nd Batn. Gordon Highlanders. These all return eastward, with the exception of the 16th Lancers and 19th Hussars. Of the regiments ordered to India from the Cape the 1st Batn. King's occupied Wynberg before the war broke out. The appearance of the 1st Batn. Buffs in the relief programme will occasion some surprise, as it did not go out until January, 1885. It goes to the Mediterranean where it already has had experience during its present tour. Its inclusion is due to the fact that its 2nd Batn. had put in nearly fourteen years on home service when it embarked for the Cape. Among battalions now in South Africa which will be selected to remain on foreign service we believe the following may be named with some degree of certainty: — The 1st Sherwood Foresters (45th), 1st Northumberland Fusiliers (5th), 2nd Rifle Brigade, 2nd Royal Berkshire (66th), 2nd Black Watch (73rd), 2nd Royal West Kent (97th), 1st Loyal North Lancashire (47th), 1st York and Lancaster (65th), 2nd Royal Irish Fusiliers (89th), 1st South Lancashire (40th), 2nd Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (46th), and 2nd Dorsetshire (54th). If any of these are brought home it will only be to prepare for embarkation again on an early date.

Recent letters from officers of the columns engaged in dislodging the Boer guerillas from their temporary resting places indicate weariness and irritation at the continuance of the war, which cannot be written off by a statement of the highest official character that it has ceased to exist, while the casualty lists still chronicle the losses from enteric and dysentery which have clung to the troops since operations began in South Africa. Many of the writers confidentially inform their friends and relatives that "they are heartily sick of the war"; others declare they are "sick of the country"; some are "burning to get home again," and nearly all the communications which we have seen express astonishment at the contentment and spirit of the men and admiration of the cheerfulness of the rank and file under all their privations and incessant hard work. Some battalions have been on the tramp since they left the rail and took to the road for months, fed by ox transport, and often on the trek ox, the men without greatcoats, and with only one blanket part of the time, and in rags, carrying 150 rounds each, sometimes on half rations (three biscuits for twenty-four hours), but full allowance of bull beef, one pound per man (if he could only eat it) served "hot" from the animal. Change of boots unknown, unless when they changed themselves; cold nights and hot days — thunderstorms and torrents of rain — still, there is no grumbling; but, as one officer says, "I don't think many of the men will go in for 'three acres and a cow' in the Transvaal when they are discharged."

"Notwithstanding the praises of the Mauser that I see in the papers, I know," says one of the officers of a crack regiment, "that whenever the Boer can get hold of one of our rifles he uses it in preference to his own. Some swear by the Martini-Henry, and prefer it to Mauser and our own. As to artillery fire, it is interesting how little damage shrapnel and percussion shells do against the enemy in these kopjes. The other day I shelled the Dutchmen posted in a kopje 3,000 yards off, and gave them 100 rounds, and next day when we bagged them I was told that only three men were hit; and I believe it, though the whole face of the rock was pitted with shrapnel."

The leading journal yesterday waxed angry over the idea that Germany contemplates "aggressive action" in Yang-tze Valley, which we have come to think of as our own particular little slice of China, but as our contemporary observed that "the whole story was probably an invention," like other disagreeable rumours, perhaps it was a little previous to deal with it. An alliance between Russia and Germany for the partition of China (as if they were repeating the appropriation of Poland, all of the Flowery Kingdom north of the Great Wall becoming Russian, and an extensive region in the south going to Germany) would be a direct challenge to this country in what we have declared to be our special sphere of interest, in the opinion of the Times, which we could not refuse to take up. The ugly word "maulheldenthum," which is used in the same article, might be applied just now to the implied threat of war against Germany and Russia if they meddled with Chinese landed property, for it is surely empty braggadocio and "tall talk" to menace the two great military Powers with hostilities on the strength of mere rumour, especially in the present "entanglement" of our forces in South Africa.

Mr. B. V. Darbishire read an interesting paper on "Military Maps" before the Geographical Section of the British Association. It is a subject to which the war in South Africa has lent a peculiar significance. Again and again our generals in Natal and the Orange River region were baffled by their want of accurate knowledge of the country in which they were operating, a discreditable state of affairs, for which the responsibility must be equally divided between the Home and Colonial authorities. A great lesson of the Franco-Prussian war may or may not have been taken to heart by Continental nations, though the recent operations in China would lead one to suppose that we do not stand alone in our neglect of military topography. India has at its disposal trustworthy surveys of central and south-eastern Asia, and the self-governing colonies are similarly far-seeing. What we require is accurate maps of countries with which our frontier is coterminous, and with which, therefore, we may find ourselves at war. Should an advance into the interior of China be agreed on by the Allies we shall discover exactly how the British Intelligence Department stands towards the Intelligence Departments of Europe. Already the Americans have been led into disaster and have lost a distinguished officer for lack of a map of the neighbourhood round Tien-tsin, and several other misfortunes of a similar kind were reported on the march to Peking. It is, however, obvious that something is lacking in the training of our officers when nothing was done to secure maps of the Stormberg region, though General Gatacre was operating in it for six weeks before the disaster, which we owed almost entirely to defective topographical knowledge. For many years there has been a danger of hostilities between this country and the Transvaal. Nevertheless, nothing was done, owing to lack of money, to obtain accurate maps of the district in which operations would take place. It is to be hoped that, in the future, this happy-go-lucky system will be abandoned. When the Earl of Chatham arrived in the Netherlands to command an expedition destined to destroy Antwerp's shipping and to occupy the city, he suddenly remembered that he knew nothing of the nature of the country, and returned home. His action was applauded at the time, though it has since provoked the amused criticism of historians. After what happened at Stormberg Lord Chatham would certainly seem to have been fully justified in the course he pursued.

The appointment of General Baden-Powell as Chief of the Transvaal Police has met with the approval of the whole Empire. Throughout the campaign he has proved himself superior to the Boers at their own game. Moreover, the enemy have a superstitious dread of him, seeing that, in the most hopeless circumstances, he was able to hold out against their ablest generals for seven months. The troopers of the new force will be equally competent to undertake the duties required of them. General Baden-Powell will have for his special purpose a pick of the finest raw material in the world. Bushmen from Australia and New Zealand, ex-mounted policemen and roughriders from the Dominion and Cape Colony, all men trained to the saddle from childhood. It was with the hope, doubtless, of just such a chance that many of them volunteered to join the various Colonial contingents. Like the Cape Mounted Police and the North-West Mounted Police, the Transvaal Mounted Police will be military in character, and will, there is every reason to believe, maintain the same high standard of efficiency. The appointment of General Baden-Powell has a further significance. It means that the South African War is practically at an end, and that Mounted Policemen, not an Army, is now required to secure order.

"An Outsider," who evidently knows well what he is writing about, defends the Intelligence Department of the War Office in this month's United Service Magazine. The department, it is said, "has been most unjustly charged with culpable ignorance as to the strength and efficiency of the Boer artillery, and excuses have been made for the authorities at the Horse Guards and for our generals in the field upon the ground that sufficient information upon this and other subjects was not at their disposal." Such assumptions, it is contended, are entirely at variance with truth. As an actual fact our Intelligence Officers had most thoroughly investigated and reported upon the whole matter. This we stated as far back as the end of last year, and the writer of the article before us fully bears out what we then said. We are told that the numbers, calibre, weight of projectile, range, and all other details regarding the Boer guns were plainly tabulated in a book compiled by the Intelligence Department, together with the reports furnished by a considerable number of officers, who spent many months in the Transvaal and Orange Free State. "The information collected was thoroughly comprehensive, including reports on the offensive and defensive value of many localities and positions, the quality of the roads, the span and description of bridges, and the probable quantity of available supplies, water and accommodation in towns, villages, and districts. Not only was everything known about the Boer artillery, but everything else that could reasonably be expected with reference to the general conditions under which the campaign would be fought out." There was no lack of expert opinion available, indeed many of the highest officials on the staff of the Army had had personal experience of South Africa. But for the time all seemed to have completely lost their heads. We could have no better evidence of this than the decision not to accept the service of mounted troops when proposed by the Colonies. If it had been recognised in good time that the Boers were a mobile force, is it to be supposed that Stormberg and Magersfontein would have been the disasters they were? As "An Outsider" clearly shows, we bungled into the war and then endeavoured to cast the blame on individual officers because, in all the circumstances, it was impossible for them to score victories. "Mobility is the secret of success in both strategical and tactical manoeuvres," as "An Outsider" says with all truth. In South Africa, however, at the onset, every principle of modern warfare was set at defiance, and Lord Methuen and Sir William Gatacre were called upon to drive the Boers back from strong positions without the wherewithal to ensure anything in the form of success. "An Outsider" sums up the situation thus, and it is difficult to refute his arguments: "All things considered, it seems fairly certain that had a really adequate strength in mounted troops and a more powerful artillery been from the first included in the expeditionary force, the war would have been over long ago." This being the case it does seem most unfair to bring charges against individual generals who have had to accept a heavy burden of responsibility and have done their best to carry out orders.

Dr. Leigh Canney, well known in Egypt, addressed an able letter to the Standard on Monday on the subject of the prevention of disease on service, which ought not to be overlooked by the medical authorities of the Army. He deals with the matter under two main heads: 1. Could the epidemics of typhoid and dysentery have been prevented? And 2. Could the conditions of the sufferers have been ameliorated? He holds that much might be done on a campaign to prevent enteric and kindred diseases by the use of filtered or boiled water, but he gives favour to the process of boiling. This would entail, of course, a certain additional strain on the transport, but even that would be preferable to all these deaths, and the vast amount of suffering entailed by the absence of proper precautions. Dr. Canney is not satisfied with simply making a suggestion, but from his practical knowledge has been able to work out in round figures the equipment which would be necessary to produce the end he has in view. He puts the case thus:—

"An army of 50,000 men such as moved from the Modder to Paardeberg, and thence to Bloemfontein, would require for—(a) Filtration: 500 filters (and each filter would require a fresh candle daily). Total weight, 50lb. x 500 = about 11 tons. Total cubic space, 1,000ft. Or (b), Boiling: 500 combined heaters and stoves in separate wooden cases. Total weight, 100lb. x 500 = 22 tons about. Total cubic space, 3,000ft. This army would require as fuel about 150 gallons of petroleum and 20 gallons of methylated spirit daily. The boiling system would abolish the need for some 4,000 kettles, probably supplied at present to this army, and weighing, probably about 20 tons. The boiling system would, therefore, only add 2 tons + the weight of 150 gallons of petroleum and 20 gallons of spirit to the 500 tons of stores daily necessary for such an army. The boiling system or the filtration system would render the transport of vast typhoid and dysentery hospitals unnecessary. As in war, as practised at present without prevention, there are five times as many cases of disease (mostly preventable) as there are of wounds, the hospital equipment to be transported, under preventive measures, could be reduced, if not by four-fifths, at least very largely."

It is not denied that the soldier is "an absent-minded beggar" averse to drinking—water at any rate—to order; but we are quite with the worthy doctor when he says that the majority of the "absent-minded" ones of these days are quite as amenable to reason, if not more so than their brethren in civil life. It might well be considered therefore whether it is not desirable in future campaigns to organise a system of water boiling on the lines laid down. We are not quite sure whether in the long run it would not relieve transport officials. One thing is quite sure, it would lessen the risk of further hospital scandals such as those of which so much has been heard lately.

When the calumniators of Sir W. Butler at Cape Town found at home sounding boards for their slanders in Parliament and in the press, the attitude of the Government was not thought to be amiable or convincing respecting the extraordinary charges preferred against the gallant officer. But the fact that Sir W. Butler had been appointed to one of the most important commands in the kingdom was proof that the authorities did not attach the least credit to them. The announcement that the Government had resolved to allow Sir W. Butler to institute legal proceedings against his libellers gave universal satisfaction, and the humble but meagre apology of Lord Heneage to the General, in reply to a letter from his solicitors, was the result of the only notice that was taken of these unworthy slanderers. Now the Government have made a full amende for any indifference to the injury which had been suffered by Sir W. Butler in the latter part of 1899 and the beginning of 1900 by giving him the command of the Aldershot Division, which is for earnest soldiers the Blue Riband of the Service in peace time, and places him in the front for active service.

Naturally many changes in the Army will result from the experience gained during the war in South Africa. Amongst others, the organisation of an adequate force of mounted infantry must certainly be proceeded with. This question has, we understand, already been under consideration by the military authorities, but so far no decision has been arrived at. One suggestion is that each battalion of infantry should have its own company of mounted infantry. That, no doubt, would be the cheapest way of raising a large force of mounted infantry, but whether it would be the most efficient is quite another question. In our view, the only possible method of raising an efficient force of mounted infantry is to organise a distinct arm of the service. Composite regiments have never been a success on active service, and for the sake of a petty economy it would certainly be most unwise to spoil a reform of the greatest importance by such piecemeal legislation as would be involved in the formation of one mounted infantry company in each battalion of the Line.

We are pleased to learn from several brigadiers who have been in command of Volunteer emergency camps that the result has been in every way satisfactory. Some officers, indeed, write in terms of the highest praise of the officers, non-commissioned officers and men, whose discipline has been, they say, quite a revelation. This is very satisfactory. There have been attempts, unfortunately, in some quarters to prevent the carrying out of the War Office scheme, employers of labour having resisted what they call the pressure of militarism; but, on the whole, the Government has reason to congratulate itself on the success of the experiment which brought some 150,000 Volunteers into camp. One Line officer, who has been in command of a brigade, assures us that "it was a real pleasure to be associated with men who so well maintained the credit of their regiments." He goes on to say: "Not a single case of drunkenness was seen throughout the time the brigade was under my orders. Every unit marched in correctly and left in the best of order. Duties were performed with the utmost regularity, and the intelligence of officers and non-commissioned officers was a feature which struck me greatly. So satisfied was I, that my report has been couched in terms of high eulogy, and the praise is richly deserved." It certainly is creditable to the Volunteers that they have done so well, seeing that in almost all cases the keenest men are on active service in South Africa; but that shows what the resources of the country might be if only a serious effort were made to grapple with the big question of defence on something approaching a sound basis, and a scheme were drawn up by soldiers which would prevent the possibility of the different branches of the Service overlapping, as it is to be feared they do at present, in the field of recruiting.

On September 7 a telegram was sent from London to Lord Roberts, asking if he would give the approximate date of his return. His reply, which was dated Belfast, September 8, was as follows: "I wish I could." Lord Roberts gave evidence before the Hospitals Commission at Pretoria on Tuesday.

He said that on entering an unknown, sparsely-populated, and hostile country, it was absolutely necessary to take large food supplies, and the number of mules and horses, and the amount of forage for these, were limited. Rapid movement was only possible by cutting down the equipment of the field hospital and other details, as every day's delay put more heart into the enemy. Every care was taken of the sick and wounded, and there were no complaints from the men, who said they were more comfortable in waggons than in ambulances. In Bloemfontein everything that was possible was done for the care of the sick, and an unlimited order was given to commandeer everything obtainable. To show the enormous difficulties which had to be overcome, Lord Roberts mentioned that from March 13, when Bloemfontein was reached, to March 28 not a single truck was able to cross the Orange River, and no food was obtained from the base except a little which was commandeered at Norvalspont and was brought up by road. For 16 days, therefore, there were no supplies and but few medical comforts obtainable, although the requirements of food for the troops were 40 trucks per day, or 400 tons, for both men and animals. From March 29 to April 17 the troops were only just fed, and not one day's reserve was accumulated. Sixty-two trucks with hospital stores came in during that period. The doctors brought on a load of equipments and nurses in waggons from Norvalspont, and these reached Bloemfontein on March 22, seven days before the railway was opened. From April 18 to May 3 a reserve of food for 45 days was accumulated, and this justified the advance on Pretoria from Bloemfontein. He thought that no blame attached to the home authorities in reference to the supply of military stores and equipment. It would be advisable when the war was over that there should be a departmental inquiry into the questions which had been raised in connection with the R.A.M.C. in time of war. With regard to Mrs. Richard Chamberlain, he had given orders forbidding her to enter the Wynberg hospital, as she had not obeyed the regulations.

At the conclusion of his evidence Lord Roberts stated that the campaign had been an extraordinarily difficult one from the hospital point of view, and gave it as his opinion that the R.A.M.C., assisted by the civilian surgeons, had met the difficulties magnificently.

That is, says the Westminster Gazette, a pretty story about Lady Roberts and her trunks, and men returning from South Africa vouch for its truth. At the height of the transport difficulties, in the teeth of the officials, she carried eight large trunks from Cape Town to Bloemfontein. Everyone wondered, everyone murmured. No one but Lady Roberts could have got the things through. The transport of stores had been stopped for the time, the sick lacked every comfort, and those who were not sick were half-starved and half-clad. Therefore, when a fatigue party was told off to fetch those eight trunks from Bloemfontein Station things were said, probably about the "plague of women." But next day seven of the trunks were unpacked and their contents distributed amongst the Tommies. The clever lady had snatched her fingers at Red Tape, and smuggled comforts through to the men in this way. One small trunk contained her kit.

An officer home from India on leave writes to us:—

"It is six months now since Gen. Sir William Lockhart died, and as yet the name of his successor as chief commander at Simla is more or less uncertain. Gen. Sir Power Palmer has been officiating since Gen. Lockhart was incapacitated by illness, and every letter I receive from India tells of the confidence he has won by his masterly administration of affairs. When the order came for the despatch of the expedition to China the whole business was carried through without a hitch; and not a single appointment was made which did not meet with universal approval. Not being an Indian officer myself, I am the more ready to endorse the views of your correspondent of the 1st inst. But I cannot bring myself to believe that it is good for the Army in India to have it supposed that there is any question as to Sir Power Palmer's qualifications, as is the case just now. No one serving in India can doubt for a moment who the new Commander-in-Chief should be. The present position of affairs, however, is not calculated to raise the home authorities in public estimation or do good in any way. I trust, therefore, that you will permit me to have my little growl, which is distinctly in the public interests and not due to any personal feeling of my own beyond that of admiration for one of the ablest officers in India."

General Sir A. G. Montgomery-Moore will be placed on the retired list on vacating command of the Aldershot District. He was made supernumerary to the Establishment on attaining the age of sixty-seven on April 6 last.

Lieut.-General Sir James Hill-Johnes, V.C. R.A., has arrived home from South Africa in the mail steamer Scot. Interviewed on his arrival, Sir James said he went out in a private capacity, being a personal friend of Lord Roberts, with whom he served in the Indian Mutiny. He had been with the Headquarter Staff, and declared it was impossible to exaggerate the difficulties of the campaign. He believed the hospitals and the Royal Army Medical Corps would come creditably out of the Hospitals Inquiry. Mr. Burdett-Coutts's statements were exaggerated, though undoubtedly there had been great difficulty at times in finding beds. His opinion of the soldiers engaged in the war was that they were quite as good as those with whom Lord Roberts and himself were associated in the old Mutiny days.

Lieut.-General Sir William Butler will take over his duties in command of the Aldershot District on Monday next. The Westminster Gazette thinks "the appointment of Lieut.-General Sir William Butler to the Aldershot command is an excellent one, and the War Office is to be commended for its choice of an officer who has the courage of his opinions and who will have ample scope for his great ability. We want not only a good soldier but a strong man at Aldershot. It is the most important of our military stations, and the character of the training there exercises a wide-spreading influence on the type of instruction for the whole Army. Sir William Butler is the more to be congratulated on account of the patient dignity with which he bore himself throughout the remarkable campaign of calumny of which he was the victim not long since."

Lieut.-General Sir Alfred Gaselee has received a high compliment from Sir Claude MacDonald, which all will allow to be well deserved. The Viceroy of India telegraphed to the British Minister congratulating him on the rescue of the Legations after a heroic defence. To this Sir Claude MacDonald replied:—"Thanks from the garrison for your telegram of sympathy. We all know that but for the splendid energy of General Gaselee and his troops relief would have arrived too late."

Major-General Sir William Gatacre distributed the prizes on Saturday to the local company of the Church Lads' Brigade at Brixton, and took advantage of the occasion to express his views on the subject of service in the Army and Navy. He said:—

"He did not come there to advise every boy to enter the Army or the Navy, but if a lad did not fancy any trade or profession, let him enter one of the Services. The Army and the Navy were now conducted under a very different régime from that which formerly prevailed. The men got good food, good clothing, and their health was well looked after. When he entered the Service matters were different. Barracks were badly ventilated, the food was 'sketchy,' the medical attendance poor, and the treatment and language were not what they ought to have been. If, then, a boy had a fancy for the Service, and parents approved, let him enter the Army to serve her Majesty, for it was everybody's duty to serve her Majesty in one form or another."

Major-General R. Oldfield has been selected for the appointment of Colonel-Commandant, R.A., vice the late General Sir John Adye.

Major-General Sir Henry Colville, C.B., will resume command of the Infantry Brigade at Gibraltar on or after October 1.

Major-General F. W. Hemming, C.B., will take the Cavalry Brigade at Aldershot (1st and 2nd Dragoon Guards and 7th Hussars) to Woolmer, Bordon, and Frensham for a week's training in reconnaissance duties. The brigade will return to camp on the 22nd inst.

Major-General A. E. Turner, C.B., R.A. Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces, has been granted permission to attend the manoeuvres of the 14th Army Corps of the Grand Duchy of Baden from the 16th inst. to the 1st prox. General Turner, accompanied by Lieut.-Colonel R. Holden, 5th Worcestershire Regiment, and Major E. L. Engleheart, D.A.A.G. for Volunteers, visited Colchester on Wednesday to inspect the Militia Brigade encamped there under Brigadier-General Morgan Crofton, C.B., D.S.O. Lieut.-General Sir William Gatacre, commanding the district, was also present. The battalions comprising the brigade, the 5th Royal Warwickshire, 4th Norfolk, 3rd Bedfordshire, and 4th Essex, marched past in column, quarter column, and in line of quarter columns; after which some field operations were carried on according to a scheme arranged by the brigadier. General Turner highly complimented all ranks on the steadiness and marching in ceremonial, and expressed great satisfaction at the intelligence and tactical knowledge exhibited in the subsequent operations. He said the regiments in question were fit for any duty anywhere. General Crofton deserves the greatest credit for the care and ability with which he has handled the brigade since he assumed command in May last.

Major-General R. S. S. Baden-Powell has been appointed Chief of the new Transvaal Police Force. His duty will be to organise the force on a military basis and make use of it for the pacification of the country. His visit to Cape Town was undertaken in order that he might consult with Sir Alfred Milner as to the best course of procedure. The citizens of Port Elizabeth have resolved to present the general with a sword of honour. The gallant general was accorded a public reception at Cape Town on Wednesday. The streets were crowded. In reply to an address the general eulogised the Colonial forces, who, he said, were responsible for the defence of Mafeking. Whatever critics might say of the strategic insignificance of Mafeking he knew better. He had his orders to hold it, and it was held. General Baden-Powell, writing to the Liverpool Conservative Club in acknowledgment of its generous donation for the relief of the sufferers from the siege of Mafeking, has added, "I fear I do not deserve your goodwill to the extent you offer it, for I was merely the figure-head of a lot of good men who carried the job through."

Major-General A. G. Raper, who has left for Jamaica to assume command of the troops at that station, issued to the Army Service Corps a farewell order before vacating his appointment as A.Q.M.G. at Headquarters. In this he expressed his grateful sense of the loyal and unflinching support he had received from all ranks of the corps during his service at Headquarters. He went on to say:—

"It has been a real pleasure to me to work with those animated by the soldierly sense of duty and the healthy esprit de corps which characterises the personnel of the corps. No branch of the Army is more necessary to success in the field, and I congratulate the corps on having proved its sterling worth during the South African campaign, and having evinced a devotion to duty and a thoroughness of work which have gained general admiration and must win the recognition which is due to efficiency. It has been my privilege to form many valued friendships in the corps, and I shall not cease to follow the future, both of individuals and of the corps as a whole, with the deepest interest. I heartily wish all its members success and happiness."

Major-Generals F. W. Kitchener and H. L. Smith-Dorrien, D.S.O., have been highly complimented by Sir Redvers Buller for their "excellent leading" Lord Roberts reports that on the occasion of the attack on the Boer position near Lydenburg, on Saturday last, it was largely due to the admirable dispositions made by these two officers that the enemy was driven off.

Major-General Sir Rudolph Slatin Pasha, K.C.M.G., C.B., had the honour of dining with the Queen and Royal Family at Balmoral on the 6th inst.

Brigadier-General M. O. Little, 9th Lancers, commanding the 3rd Cavalry Brigade, consisting of Lancers, Brabant's Horse, Kaffrarian Mounted Rifles, and Cape Mounted Rifles, was wounded in a skirmish at the end of last month, near Johannesburg, and was obliged to hand over his command. The gallant Colonel Dalgety took his place at the head of the brigade.

Major Lees, reporting to the United States Government, has borne handsome testimony to the value of the work done at Tien-tsin of Brigadier-General A. R. Dorward, C.B., R.E., whom he speaks of in the most eulogistic terms.

Colonel F. J. Graves has, as was expected, been given an extension of command of the 83rd Regimental District, Belfast, for three months from October 1, in recognition of the enormous increase of recruiting brought about by him. Last year he was successful in obtaining 1,878 recruits, and already this year the local papers say some 2,200 have been obtained.

Colonels H. C. B. Farrant, A.A.G. at Headquarters, and E. R. Courtenay, 10th Regimental District, have been appointed members of the War Office Committee which is to inquire into the subject of officers' band and mess expenses.

Colonel W. E. Briggs, 2nd Batn. Hampshire Regiment, and Majors F. Herapath, 2nd Batn. Lincolnshire Regiment, and A. C. Becher, 2nd Batn. Norfolk Regiment, formed the committee appointed by Lord Roberts to investigate the question of the treatment of British prisoners in the hands of the Boers. Their report, dated Pretoria, June 25, was issued on Wednesday night. Lord Roberts, in sending the document home, severely criticises the treatment of the non-commissioned officers and men, especially of the Colonial forces, who were treated with marked inhumanity. To have treated Colonial prisoners as criminals, just because they were Colonials, was vindictiveness of the meanest order. To have similarly treated British subjects in the Transvaal because they refused to swear allegiance to the South African Republic was, says the Commander-in-Chief, "opposed to the usages of civilised warfare." There was no excuse for the bad quality and the insufficiency of the food given to the prisoners; for, he continues, "supplies of excellent meat, bread, and vegetables were easily procurable." The Committee found all the charges of bad treatment fully justified.

Colonel F. H. Whitby, late Durham Light Infantry, has been confirmed in his appointment as D.A.G., Punjab command, with the rank of brigadier-general.

Colonel T. P. B. Ternan, C.M.G., Royal Warwickshire Regiment, was on leave in England when news reached him of the disturbance in Uganda. He at once made arrangements for his return, and left England a few days ago to resume the duties of his command.

The circumstances in which Colonel C. W. Helyar, retired list, late 3rd Hussars and commanding the 7th Batn. Imperial Yeomanry, met his death are very sad. In his official despatch Lord Roberts characterised the gallant officer's death as murder. Losing his way, he sought shelter for the night at a farmhouse, where he was very hospitably received. As he was leaving in the morning he was shot in cold blood by a number of Boers and killed, hardly a couple of hundred yards from the house. His servant, who had gone on ahead, returned on hearing the firing, and was captured by his master's murderers, but he managed subsequently to escape and tell the tale.

Colonel G. H. More-Molyneux, C.B., I.S.C., colonel on the staff, has been confirmed in command of a 2nd Class District in India, with the rank of brigadier-general.

Colonel Lord Wemyss, A.D.C., has appeared as an inventor, having just produced an implement to be added to the soldier's kit. It can be used as spade, pickaxe, or saw, and also as a shield for protection from bullets. The contrivance is not unlikely to be adopted.

Colonel A. R. Martin, I.S.C., D.A.G., Indian Army headquarters, will leave for England at the end of the month on furlough, Colonel B. Duff, C.I.E., I.S.C., who was on Sir George White's staff in Ladysmith, and is now with Lord Roberts, succeeding him.

Colonel W. R. Anderson, I.S.C., Military Accounts Department, is to be employed at Simla for two years to revise the Army Regulations, India, volume I., parts 1 and 2.

Colonel Sir F. Cardew, Governor of Sierra Leone, accompanied by his staff, is stated to have returned to Sierra Leone from the Rotifunk district, where he held a meeting of chiefs to explain the benefits of the new railway, and made an official tour of inspection.

Lieut.-Colonel Lord Edmund Talbot, M.P., has decided to comply with the request of his constituents in the Chichester division of Sussex, who asked him to reconsider his determination to resign the seat in order to accept the command of the 11th Hussars. Lord Edmund says, in a letter, the kindly appreciation of his humble efforts as member for the division encourages him for the future, and he hopes that the Unionist party will now meet its opponents with united force.

Major (Lieut.-Colonel) F. G. Stone, R.F.A., has resigned his appointment as officer commanding the artillery under the Government of Canada. Colonel Stone took up his appointment eighteen months ago, and has already effected many very necessary reforms. His departure the local press says, is greatly deplored by those over whom he was placed in authority.

Major G. A. P. Evans, retired list, late of the 7th Hussars, Governor of the Military Prison at Malta, has been approved as Governor of the Military Prison, Dublin, vice Captain C. S. Haines, Cheshire Regiment, transferred to Gosport.

Major R. H. Murdoch, retired list, R.A., so long associated with the regimental records at Woolwich, has been appointed Secretary of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Help Society.

Major S. C. N. Grant, R.E., on return from active service in South Africa, has been appointed to the staff of the Ordnance Survey at Southampton, being succeeded as D.A.A.G. in the Intelligence Department, by Captain E. H. Hills, R.E., who has been officiating for him during his absence.

Major H. S. Massy has been appointed to the command of the 19th Bengal Lancers, A.

For ALL or ANY of the Subjects,
COMMENCES 1st OCTOBER. 4 WEEK COURSE.
TERMS ON APPLICATION.

90a and 88, GLOUCESTER ROAD, S.W.

Wallace of the 27th Punjab Infantry, and L. H. Baker of the 3rd Punjab Cavalry.

Major A. St. H. Gibbons, 3rd Batn. East Yorkshire Regiment, the leader of the Cape to Cairo Expedition, has arrived in England from Egypt after an absence of two years. In ascending the Zambesi Major Gibbons reached in due course the Victoria Falls. Livingstone reached the falls with his steamer on September 9, 1858. No other Englishman since then had passed beyond this point on the Zambesi until Major Gibbons arrived there. Curiously enough he found there an old man who formed as a boy one of Livingstone's party at the time, and he as an old man helped Major Gibbons to get his steamer beyond the falls! Another curious fact is that the second explorer to reach the Falls, and to pass them, was born on the day that Livingstone discovered them! Major Gibbons reports the existence of a large native state—Marotseland—situated at the sources of the Zambesi, the government of which, under a titular king, marks an advanced stage of civilisation. The whole machinery of state is in perfect working order. Under the king are the chiefs, divided into two classes.

Captain J. A. Hefferon, late Quartermaster 8th Hussars, has been granted a Good Service Pension of £50 a year. He has excellent service extending over a period of forty years on the active list. During this time he has taken part in three campaigns, including the Crimean War, for which he has the medal with four clasps, the Indian Mutiny, and the Afghan War of 1879-80.

Captain Percy Green, late of the Buffs, Governor of Preston Prison, has been appointed to the Governorship of Winson Green Gaol, Birmingham, vacant by the retirement of Admiral Tinklar.

Captain P. H. G. Cotton-Powell, 3rd Batn. Northumberland Fusiliers, the Abyssinian explorer, who arrived home recently, has left for Malta to join his battalion, embodied at that station. His departure was somewhat delayed, as he was summoned to the Intelligence Department, to the officials of which he was able to give much valuable information. Captain Powell Cotton purposes giving a full account of his expedition in book form.

Captains P. R. Fuller, 3rd Batn. Leicestershire Regiment; G. W. Biggs, 4th Batn. Royal Irish Regiment; F. E. Christian, 3rd Batn. Cheshire Regiment; E. S. St. B. Sladen, 4th Batn. South Wales Borderers; Lieuts. H. de Putron, 5th Batn. Northumberland Fusiliers; W. R. Roe, 4th Batn. Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, and H. Hudson, 3rd Batn. Shropshire Light Infantry, and 2nd Lieuts. C. M. Berington, 5th Batn. Worcestershire Regiment; E. O. Warden, 4th Batn. Essex Regiment; P. C. Huth, 3rd Batn. Shropshire Light Infantry, and W. Jenkins, 5th Batn. Rifle Brigade, have been selected for special service on the Gold Coast.

Captain G. S. Haines, Cheshire Regiment, has been appointed Governor of the Military Prison at Gosport.

Captain E. V. O. Hewett, 1st Batn. Royal West Kent Regiment, has been appointed Professor of Strategy and Tactics at the Royal Military College, Kingston, Canada.

Captain G. C. Benson, Shropshire Light Infantry, has died in Ashanti under very distressing conditions. He had been sent out to raise Akim levies. On the 28th ult. he moved from his camp with 3,000 of them to attack the enemy near Ojesu. Directly the levies got under fire they turned and fled to Odumsi. It is understood that he was shot by his own men.

Captain H. St. G. Thomas, Madras Infantry, C. A. Fowles, 24th Punjab Infantry, and E. L. Sullivan, 36th Sikhs, have been selected to officiate as D.A.A.G.'s in India in the absence of the permanent incumbents on field service.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, Sept. 8.

Lord Roberts telegraphed late last night from Belfast that Lydenburg had been occupied during the day by the cavalry under Lord Dundonald and Major-Gen. Brocklehurst on Thursday afternoon, Sir Redvers Buller's and Lieut.-Gen. Ian Hamilton's forces being then within four miles of the town. They had sustained few casualties. Gen. Ian Hamilton's successful operations of Thursday, when he turned the enemy's right flank and cleared the way for Sir Redvers Buller's advance, having scattered the Boers, driving them in two columns, some going to Kruger's Post and others eastward to Spitzkop. Lord Roberts also stated that a portion of Lieut.-Gen. Hildyard's division had occupied Wakkers-stroom on Wednesday, a Boer force under Joshua Joubert retiring as he advanced. Major-Gen. Clements, who was moving the Pretoria district, had received some opposition on Wednesday near Kekepoort.

In a despatch giving further details of the defence of Ladybrand, Lord Roberts said the credit for the relief of the place was mainly due to Major-Gen. Bruce Hamilton, "who managed the operation with judgment and despatch. His infantry marched 80 miles in four days and a half." The Commander-in-Chief, in another despatch, said the enemy continued to fire into trains, and were very persistent in their endeavours to derail trains and destroy railway lines. These attacks were annoying, but in every case prompt punishment follows, and Lord Roberts thinks the Boers will soon discover that those operations are more injurious to them than to us.

The position at Spitzkop held by the Boers was carried during the morning by Sir Redvers Buller's troops. The Boers again retreated. Of this engagement Lord Roberts wrote on Sunday:—

"I have just heard from Ian Hamilton, who reports the result of yesterday's operations at the request of Buller, who is away from the telegraph line. Hamilton stated that Buller yesterday morning attacked the enemy's position, which was on a precipitous ridge 1,500ft. high, shaped like a horseshoe. The Spitzkop road lies to the furthest point of the ridge. Anything like a turning movement was most difficult as the ridge was cleft asunder at various points by deep ravines almost impossible even for infantry. Under cover of our artillery the position was carried, the Devons on the right, the Royal Irish Regiment in the centre, and the Royal Scots on the left. The enemy retreated over a narrow causeway—they lost a good many, and would in all probability have suffered more seriously but for a thick mist by which our troops were overshadowed when they reached summit of mountain."

Great praise is given to the Volunteer Company attached to the Gordon Highlanders which bore the brunt of the losses. Particulars will be found in our regimental columns.

Sunday, Sept. 9.

Gen. Buller occupied the Mauchberg to-day. The enemy made considerable resistance, but were dislodged by 1st Batn. King's Royal Rifles, supported by artillery fire. Roads said to be too bad for description.

Sir Redvers Buller's force was again brought into telegraphic communication with Lord Roberts's headquarters—removed to Pretoria—during the day, when further particulars were furnished of the Lydenburg success. Gen. Buller stated that the position held strongly by the Boers had a command over Lydenburg of about 1,800 ft. Lord Roberts wrote:—

"The three battalions which attacked—the Devons, the Royal Irish, and the Royal Scots—started on a front of about six miles, and gradually approached nearer each other as they came to the top of the hill.

"Buller gives great credit to Gens. W. F. Kitchenier and Smith-Dorrien for their excellent leading. He adds:—'I am deeply indebted to Ian Hamilton for the assistance he has given me.'"

Lord Methuen to-day moved on Molopo, where a force was reported under Commandant Vermaak. The column advanced and the troops came under fire at 6.30. Gen. Douglas's guns were heard on the left flank. The Yeomanry, under Lord Chesham, moved to the right flank, the remainder of the brigade and Lord Methuen's column reaching Molopo at 10.30 a.m. The mounted troops pursued the enemy till three o'clock this morning, capturing 30 prisoners, 22 waggons, two heliographs, some horses, and 40,000 rounds of ammunition. The enemy fled in disorder, leaving waggons, grain, &c., en route. The pursuit was abandoned, as the horses were tired out.

Lieut.-Gen. French resumed his march from Carolina towards Barberton. His advance was opposed throughout, but he drove the enemy from three successive positions without, it is believed, suffering much loss.

Lord Roberts, telegraphing from Belfast at 11 p.m., said:—

"French, who left Carolina this morning with Dickson and Gordon, the 4th and 1st Brigades of Cavalry, Mahon's Mounted Infantry, the Suffolks and Shropshire battalions, and Capt. Bearcroft's 47 naval guns, met with opposition throughout the march. He drove the enemy from three successive positions, one of which was taken with much gallantry by the Suffolks, who, being skilfully led, had but few losses. The enemy left some dead on the field.

Major-Gen. Knox, who was moving about north-west of Kroonstad, captured to-day two despatch riders of De Wet's, who were carrying interesting letters from that officer.

Monday, Sept. 10.

Gen. Buller reached a place called Kupgat to-day, about half-way between the Mauchberg and Spitzkop, driving the Boers before him. Several tons of food stores were captured, the gun tackle of a heavy gun, and some of its ammunition. Thirteen waggons carrying ammunition were thrown down the ridge of the mountain to prevent them falling into our hands.

Lieut.-Gen. Hildyard drove the enemy from the Lanwacht Pass during the morning, and went through the Pass afterwards.

Lord Methuen moved to-day on Commandant Vermaak's camp at Malopo Oog, and completely dispersed the enemy. Thirty prisoners, 22 waggons, and 40,000 rounds of ammunition were captured. The casualties were confined to the Bushmen, of whom two were dangerously, one severely, and six slightly wounded.

Wednesday, Sept. 12.

Lord Roberts, having returned to the front from Pretoria, after having given evidence before the Hospital Commission, sent home a despatch from Machadodorp stating that the British advance eastward was slow owing to the very difficult nature of the country. The columns, however, were gradually gaining ground.

Gen. Pole-Carew, with the Guards' Brigade, was at Nooitgedacht railway station, and proposed to move to Godwaan station on Thursday.

Gen. Hutton was holding the high ground south of the railway, and protecting Pole-Carew's right flank. From this position he was able to communicate by signal with Gen. French. Hearing that French was heavily engaged, he was going to his support.

Gen. French crossed the Komati River at Homoslot on the 10th, and was making for the high land west of Barberton, either Kafers Kop or Deerde Kop. He met with no opposition on Monday or Tuesday.

Sir Redvers Buller occupied the junction of roads from east and south near Spitzkop on Tuesday. The enemy who opposed his advance seemed to have divided, some having gone to Nelspruit, and the rest in a northerly direction, across the Sahie Drift.

Gen. Ian Hamilton's column reached Helvetia on Wednesday, and was to move to Waterval Onder on Thursday. Lord Methuen reported that Douglas was attacked on Tuesday morning when marching on the road from Ottoshoop to Lichtenburg. After some hours' fighting he drove the enemy off and captured a quantity of grain and other stores. His casualties were: Wounded: Capt. Bryce, Australian Bushmen, severely in shoulder; two men severely, and four slightly.

Gen. Clements was clearing the country near Heckpoort, between Krugersdorp and Rustenburg. He was engaged on Monday by a force commanded by Delarey, on which occasion he had two men killed and 14 wounded. He drove the enemy out of two positions.

Thursday, Sept. 13.

Lord Roberts telegraphed from Machadodorp, at 6.20 p.m., stating that Buller's troops were comfortably settled at Spitzkop, where they found 300,000lbs. weight of Boer supplies, principally rice, sugar, flour and coffee; also about 300 boxes of Martini-Henry ammunition.

Ian Hamilton's column, strengthened by the Elswick 12-pounder battery, marched during the morning from Helvetia to Waterval Onder to replace the 11th-Pole-Carew's—division, which reached Godwaan at noon. The enemy had been holding a formidable position south of and commanding Godwaan in considerable strength for some days, but finding their retreat threatened by Hutton's occupation of Kaapschehoop, they abandoned it. Pole-Carew moved along the narrow valley through which the railway runs, without a shot being fired at his troops. Rundle had arrived at Bethlehem with Boyes' Brigade. Hart had reoccupied Potchefstroom.

Clements advanced yesterday against Delarey's little force, and made it retire to the north of Megaliesberg, through Oliphant's Nek. Delarey admitted to having had 40 casualties the previous day, and the country people reported that he had very few rounds of gun ammunition left. W. Knox, commanding in C. Knox's absence, with a movable column, reported that he scoured the country west and south of the Rhenoster, and drove back a few small parties of the enemy.

Officer commanding the lines of communication in Natal reported that the Boers at Vryheid were much perturbed at our occupation of Utrecht, and were moving their stock away in a northerly direction.

Kruger had fled to Lorenzo Marques, and Botha had been obliged to give over the command of the Boer army temporarily to Viljoen on account of ill-health. He was reported to be at Nelspruit station.

Lord Roberts to-day issued the following proclamation:—

"The late President Kruger, with Reitz, and the archives of the South African Republic, crossed the Portuguese frontier, and arrived at Lorenzo Marques, with a view to sailing for Europe at an early date. Mr. Kruger has formally resigned the position he held as President of the South African Republic, thus severing his official connection with the Transvaal. Mr. Kruger's action shows how hopeless, in his opinion, is the war which has now been carried on for nearly a year, and his desertion of the Boer cause should make it clear to his fellow-burgers that it is useless for them to continue the struggle any longer. It is probably unknown to the inhabitants of the Transvaal and Orange River Colony that nearly 15,000 of their fellow-subjects are now prisoners of war, not one of whom will be released until those now in arms against us surrender unconditionally. The burghers must, by this time, be cognisant of the fact that no intervention on their behalf can come from any of the Great Powers, and, further, that the British Empire is determined to complete the work which has already cost so many valuable lives, and to carry to its conclusion the war declared against her by the late Governments of the Transvaal and Orange Free State, a war to which there can be but one ending. If any further doubt remains in the minds of the burghers as to her Britannic Majesty's intentions, they should be dispelled by the permanent manner in which the country is gradually being occupied by her Majesty's forces, and by the issue of the proclamations signed by me on May 24 and September 1, 1900, annexing the Orange Free State and the South African Republic respectively, in the name of her Majesty. I take this opportunity of pointing out that, except in the small area occupied by the Boer Army under the personal command of Commandant General Botha, the war is degenerating, and has degenerated, into operations carried on in an irregular and irresponsible manner, and in many cases by insignificant bodies of men. I should be failing in my duty to her Majesty's Government, and to her Majesty's Army in South Africa, if I neglected to use every means in my power to bring such irregular warfare to an early conclusion. The means which I am compelled to adopt are those which the customs of war prescribe as being applicable to such cases. They are ruinous to the country, entail endless suffering on the burghers and their families, and the longer this guerilla warfare continues the more vigorously must they be enforced."

Total casualties since the beginning of the war up to the end of last week:—

	Officers.	N.C.O. & Men
Killed	283	2,683
Died of wounds ...	85	791
Missing and prisoners (excluding those who have been recovered or died in captivity)	40	945*
Prisoners died in captivity	3	86
Died of disease ...	149	5,472
Accidental deaths ...	3	101
Sent home as invalids...	1,219	27,937†
	1,782	38,003

Total Losses (exclusive of sick and wounded men now in British Hospitals in South Africa) ... 39,785

* This total probably includes a large number of men reported "missing" who subsequently rejoined, but whose return was not notified.

† Of these 173 have died, 740 have been discharged from the Service as unfit, and 920 are in hospital.

THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The article on the Battle of Waterloo, written by Sir Herbert Maxwell, in the Nineteenth Century, which is noticed in your issue of the 8th inst., is an excellent piece of work, but I venture to think that he does his countrymen some injustice in assuming that we ought to cry peccavi for attributing to ourselves an undue share in the result of the action, and to make amends to the Prussians, to the other Germans, and the Netherlands. We are at this moment the objects of a great deal of suspicion and dislike on the Continent, and it is not a good moment to accuse ourselves of meanly filching away credit from other nations, especially as it is not a justifiable accusation. It would be perfectly natural for English writers on that great event to lay most stress in their descriptions on the fact their countrymen played in it, because that would interest their leader most, and as we had living among us for a whole generation the English commander and other great actors on the scene, the part they played no doubt especially impressed itself on their fellow countrymen. Moreover, certain striking incidents of the battle happened to be enacted by British troops.

But the remarkable thing is that our opponents the French connected the English more particularly with this battle. In the well-known recorded conversation before the battle between Napoleon and his marshals—it is the English alone who are spoken of—his satisfaction at having at last pinned them—his marshal's opinions founded on their own experiences as to the best way of dealing with British troops and so on, and subsequently the revenge for Waterloo was to be wreaked on England. So late as 1894, when there were some tableaux presented in Paris representing the career of Napoleon—the programme which I have now in my possession described the "defaite des Anglais," as a leading incident of the battle. (Thus, by the way, is history taught in France.) That some of the troops of other nationalities were not to be relied on, and some bolted in bodies, is a fact which possibly discredited them and their comrades en masse more than was strictly just, is belief enough, but implies no deliberate design on the English part to attribute themselves more than a fair share of credit.

But Sir Herbert Maxwell is entirely mistaken in his supposition that the actual facts in their true bearing have not hitherto been set forth in England. It must be at least 30 years since Col. Chesney fully criticised the whole campaign, certainly not sparing the Duke of Wellington, and amply crediting the Prussians with the staunchness and energy which they displayed in cutting in on Napoleon's flank and rear, and in reliance in which the Duke fought the battle; and endless books and articles have appeared in England since then in a similar sense.

E. F. DUCANE.

THE NEW LINE BATTALIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The King's Royal Rifles and Rifle Brigade, being four-battalion regiments, have each a colonel-in-chief and two colonels-commandant. Ought not the same course to be pursued in the case of the new four-battalion regiments—the Northumberland Fusiliers, Royal Warwickshire Regiment, Royal Fusiliers, Liverpool Regiment, Lancashire Fusiliers, Worcester Regiment, Middlesex Regiment, and Manchester Regiment? I am sure these regiments would all deem it an honour if they were placed on the same footing as the two distinguished rifle corps, and there is no reason why the privilege extended to others should be denied them. Gen. Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein is not yet colonel-in-chief of a British regiment. Why should not he be associated with, say, the Royal Warwickshire Regiment, one of the first to raise two new battalions? Lord Roberts and Sir Redvers Buller might fairly be made colonels-in-chief of other corps. Sir Neville Chamberlain is a field-marshal; why should not he be made a colonel-in-chief? He is an officer who deserves recognition, and any corps which has served under his command would appreciate the honour of having so popular an officer at its head. I can speak from personal knowledge of the feelings of the units concerned, as I happen to belong to

ONE OF THEM.

To commemorate the patriotism of the men of the Yeomanry and Volunteers of the district who have gone to South Africa, there has been erected upon the Town Hall at Slough a very fine "latten" brass and moulded-oak tablet, upon which are engraved the names of the men, figures of Imperial Yeomanry and Volunteers on guard at each end, and over the inscription a view of the transport ship leaving harbour with the drafts on board, a laurel and oak wreath adding to the adornments. The work is cut in strong relief upon the brass, and the oak is suitably moulded and fitted to its form. The whole has been well designed and engraved by Mr. Gawthorpe, of Long Acre, who has several memorials in hand to those who have died at the front.

THE R.A.M.C. ON SERVICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I hope you will allow me space in your columns to express my annoyance, and that of all officers out here, at the insertion, by what should be regarded as respectable newspapers at home, of cruel, unfounded, and ill-mannered criticisms on the officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps in the field. No one can have been brought more directly into touch with these officers than I have, and I have no hesitation in speaking of them in the highest possible terms. From Surgeon-General Wilson downwards all have done their duty devotedly, cheerfully, and well. Their difficulties have been enormous, but whenever it has been possible for these to be surmounted they have been. What I trust you will condemn, and condemn in the strongest possible terms, is the employment of civilian practitioners. I am not going to say one word in disparagement of these gentlemen, for I believe that they have, with very few exceptions, done all in their power to fulfil their duties to the best of their ability, but, unfortunately, they have most of them been ignorant of the very rudiments of military hospital procedure, and as to the maintenance of discipline. Their want of knowledge has led to endless friction. I cannot think that it is good for an army in the field to have a whole contingent of civilian doctors sent out to it. The trials of the Army doctors have been great enough in the war, but they have been increased tremendously by the folly of those who have called upon them to be continually acting as instructors when all their energies were required to look after the sick. I have made it my business to watch this detail, and I am the more ready to condemn it, as, until I saw the arrangement carried out on service, I was one of those who favoured the idea of a reserve of civil doctors. A week or two's experience, however, of the system in practice was sufficient to convince me that it is unsuitable to the requirements of an army on service. Had all the doctors with the army corps been properly qualified army surgeons I question whether the "Hospital Scandal" would ever have been heard of.

The influx of a lot of untrained—in a military sense—civilian doctors seemed to completely throw the organisation out of gear. Some, though I am happy to say very few, of these gentlemen have been most difficult to deal with. One or two desired altogether to "boss the show," and created endless confusion when they found that they were required to submit to discipline. These are the gentlemen, doubtless, who are doing much to disparage the officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps; but, as one who can pronounce an independent judgment, I hope that no one will be led away by false evidence. Having been brought into the closest touch with the Royal Army Medical Corps officers, it is to me a pleasure and satisfaction to bear testimony to their proverbial courtesy, kindness, thoughtfulness, and consideration. Never once have I found them anything but what they ought to be, and I do think, and all who are in a position to express opinions agree with me, that it is monstrous for a few, whose personal feelings have got the better of them, to attempt to blacken the character of a body of earnest and good soldiers who have borne the burden and heat of the campaign in the best spirit of professional zeal. There is a general feeling here among those who ought to know that the greatest injury is done to the whole Army hospital system by the action of some of the Service clubs. That, however, is a thing which will have to be mended. I have no object to serve in addressing to you this letter, but to do an act of simple justice, which in face of Mr. Burdett-Connors' scandalous charges, and the criticisms which have followed therefrom, I think I might do.

A STAFF OFFICER WHO DOES KNOW.

South Africa, Aug. 9, 1900.

THE Secretary for War has decided that the purchase money to be paid by men of the Royal Reserve, who wish to leave their present engagements, shall be that fixed by Article 1,142 of the Pay Warrant for other soldiers, as that sum practically represents the cost to the State in bounty, clothing, and necessities of a Royal Reservist on enlistment. Such discharges will have to be sanctioned by general officers commanding, in the same manner as other special cases.

MILITIA REFORM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The letter of a "A Militia C. O.," which appeared in your columns of the 8th inst., is deserving of consideration. Your correspondent's proposal may not possess the merit of novelty, but there can be no questioning the result if some such scheme as he propounds could be adopted. It is most desirable, in the present condition of our land defences, that the Militia should be levelled up. All are ready to allow this. Your correspondent puts forward a definite proposal by means of which much might be done to bring about an increase of efficiency. There is a strong feeling among the best Militia officers that in many respects their Service is behindhand, and those in this category would hail with delight any scheme by means of which the constitutional force would be rendered more of a military reality than it is at present. The idea of your correspondent has this merit, at least—it presents a practical means whereby a pressing difficulty might under certain conditions be overcome. No one will pretend to say that in these days a training of one month is sufficient for a Militia unit. A month scarcely gives time for an infantry battalion to complete a proper course of musketry. What in such circumstances can officers and non-commissioned officers learn of their duties. By training a certain number of regiments for longer periods according to roster, there would be a chance of those, who are anxious to do so, keeping up the knowledge they have gained during the present embodiment. I quite expect to hear that your correspondent's scheme is an impossible one, but everything usually is regarded as impossible by those whose aim it is to raise objections. I know that many commanding officers take the same view as your correspondent. They do not recognise that the difficulties would be so great as some would have us think. On the contrary, they say that, so far as the rank and file are concerned, it is all a matter of terms. If that be the case, there ought to be an attempt made to put the proposal to the test of experiment, for it cannot be well to permit so valuable a reserve as the Militia has again been proved to be, to sink once more into the condition in which it stood a year ago. Now is the time for action, and action, I trust, will be taken whilst the moment is opportune.

ANOTHER MILITIA F. O.

SUPPLY OF AMMUNITION IN THE FIELD.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Lord Roberts has called attention to the difficulty with which the supply of ammunition has been carried out in South Africa, and has invited officers to give their special attention to the subject and suggest a remedy. I sincerely hope some one will hit upon a method, and thus benefit both his country and himself. Meanwhile an idea has come to me which seems possible, but, be it said, would only apply from the firing line to the S.A. carts. There seems little doubt but that one of the results of the present campaign will be that soldiers will carry some bullet-proof protection from the awful rifle fire of to-day. This might take the form of two light detachable bullet-proof shields for each soldier in the fighting line, which could be fastened together according to the direction of the enemy's fire. These, or similar ones, might be fitted to carry S.A. ammunition packages. The S.A. ammunition cart would be fitted with telescopic uprights, to draw out, in proportion to the distance from fighting line, stout wires being attached to the top, the other end of which should be carried by two or more men per section. When more ammunition was signalled for, it could be placed on the wire at the S.A. cart end and slid down to the fighting line. This idea may be crude, but it seems to present one means of overcoming an admitted difficulty.

C.O.

ORDERS have been given for immediate arrangements to be made to complete in each unit of Regular infantry at home the proper number of men trained in transport duties, as laid down in the war establishments.

AN Army Order lays down that the fact of a soldier serving in South Africa during the progress of hostilities will be regarded as sufficient evidence that he has fulfilled the conditions as to age and efficiency on which the grant of messing allowance depends.

Obituary.

NAVY.

Navigating Lieut. Thomas Capel Tilly died at Remuera, Auckland, N.Z., on July 27 last, aged 70 years. He became Naval Midshipman 1845, Naval Sub-Lieut., 1851, Naval Lieut. 1856, and retired under the Childers Scheme 1870. He served in the Shearwater during the Crimean Expedition, 1854 (medal). In 1857 he went to Australia in the Cordelia, and when she was paid off, 1861, superintended building the mission ship, Southern Cross and commanded her in the Western Pacific Islands under the late Bishops Selwyn and Patteson until 1869. He afterwards acted as Examiner of Masters and Mates under the New Zealand Government, and held that post until last year.

ARMY.

Lieut.-Gen. Thomas Ross, formerly of the 24th Regiment, died at his residence, Wallop House, Hants, on the 7th inst., aged 79. Gen. Ross entered the Service March, 1838, and after 16 years' service in the 90th Light Infantry, exchanged into the 73rd. With them he landed in India in 1858, and specially distinguished himself in the following year, capturing, after a personal encounter, the Kutwal of Azimghur. His subsequent skilful but daring management of a mixed force under his command was warmly commended in despatches. In 1860 Col. Ross was nominated for special service in Canada, and later on commanded for upwards of ten years the 2nd Batn. 24th Regiment. He became Captain June 4, 1847; Major Oct. 22, 1852; Lieut.-Colonel Oct. 26, 1858; Colonel, April 1, 1863; Major-General Oct. 28, 1868; and retired with the hon. rank of Lieut.-General Nov. 14, 1881. He married Fanny Gertrude, second daughter of the late Charles Frederick Huth. His gifts to his late regiment in South Africa since the commencement of the campaign have been many and valuable.

Col. John Lewes, Hon. Col. of the Royal Cardigan Artillery, died on the 11th inst. He served with the Buffs in the Crimea, and commanded the covering party of that regiment in the assault on the Redan on Sept. 8, 1855 (medal with clasp, the brevet of Major, Legion of Honour, the 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). The deceased officer subsequently became Lieut.-Col. of the 3rd West India Regiment in 1858, and retired in 1860 by sale of his commission. He was appointed Hon. Col. Royal Cardigan Artillery in August, 1888.

Lieut.-Col. Thomas Beckley, Major, retired list, Royal Engineers, of 21, Rosslyn Hill, Hampstead, died suddenly of cerebral apoplexy at 1, Silverdale Road, Eastbourne, on the 7th inst., aged 65. He joined the Army Dec. 29, 1852; became Captain Feb. 18, 1861; Major July 5, 1872; and retired with the hon. rank of Lieut.-Colonel Nov. 20, 1875.

Col. Charles Thornhill, retired, late Royal Artillery, died at the Crescent, Castle Bellington, Ireland, on the 7th inst., aged 61. The deceased, who obtained the rank of Lieut.-Colonel April, 1885, served in the Boer War 1881, and took part in the defence of Potchefstroom, being mentioned in despatches.

Capt. George Conolly Benson, Shropshire Light Infantry, has been killed in Ashanti. Born March 13, 1867, he joined the Army as 2nd Lieut., Shropshire Light Infantry, Feb. 5, 1887; became Lieut. Feb. 21, 1890; and Captain June 15, 1898. He had been employed on the Gold Coast since June 24 last.

SOLDIERS of the Royal Reserve regiments will, on discharge, be supplied with a suit of plain clothes or receive an allowance of 13s. 6d. in lieu thereof.

OVER one thousand candidates presented themselves at the recent examination in London for admission to Woolwich and Sandhurst.

SERVICE in the Royal Reserve is to be added to incomplete terms of service in the Regular Army for the purposes of awarding additional good conduct badges.

ABERDEEN GRANITE MONUMENTS, &c.—ALEX. MACDONALD and Co., Limited (late A. Macdonald, Field and Co.), Workers in Polished Granites to the Queen, undertake the erection of their work in any part of the country. The largest stock of granite monuments in the country may be seen at their London premises. For designs and prices, address as above, to the Aberdeen Granite Works, Aberdeen; or 373, Euston Road, London, N.W.

COMMISSIONS IN THE ARMY.

The next examination of candidates for cadetships at the Royal Military Academy will commence on November 27. The number of vacancies to be competed for will be 80. The successful candidates will be required to join the Royal Military Academy on January 30 next. No commissions in the Royal Marine Artillery will be given.

An examination of candidates for the Army will be held on November 27 and following days. There will be 16 cadetships at the Royal Military College awarded, namely 20 for Cavalry, 10 for Foot Guards, 125 for Infantry, 5 for West India Regiment. The Cavalry and Foot Guards candidates will be taken on one list, and no candidate will be accepted for the Foot Guards unless he is among the first 30 on the combined Cavalry and Foot Guards list. In the total of 145 cadetships allotted to Cavalry and Infantry (excluding Foot Guards and West India Regiment) are included a certain number carrying with them a nomination to the Indian Staff Corps. The exact number and allotment of these are determined as follows:—Thirty-five cadetships in all are given carrying this nomination. All Queen's cadets (British and Indian) and honorary Queen's cadets (Indian) have a right to one of these if they choose to take it. The balance, after these claims have been satisfied, will be allotted, in order of merit, to such of the successful Cavalry and Infantry candidates as have entered themselves as desirous of the Indian Staff Corps in their "form of particulars." Three commissions for the Royal Marine Light Infantry will also be given. Thirty commissions will be offered for competition by University candidates under the conditions laid down in the regulations on this subject.

OFFICERS AND FIELD SERVICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE"

SIR,—Letters from friends in South Africa tell of the difficulty of providing for the usual routine duties of regiments and battalions in consequence of the large number of officers wounded and invalided. Yet a glance at the "Army List" will show that many officers of regiments on active service have been throughout the war filling staff appointments on the home establishment. Is this quite right? It seems to me and others here that in an emergency like the present it is the duty of every officer to be at the front. It is not the fault of the officers that they are left at home, for to my knowledge most of them have applied to throw up appointments in order that they might rejoin their regiments for service. Permission, however has been refused them. I have heard it said frequently that our Army is over-officered. The experience of the present war does not certainly give support to that argument; quite the reverse.

LOOKER-ON.

Naval and Military Club, S.W., Sept. 12.

REVISED instructions for the civil employment of reservists, &c., have been approved, and general officers commanding are to arrange that copies are supplied to all sergeants' messes and reading-rooms in their commands.

SENTRIES IN THE FIELD.—In the district orders issued at the Curragh Camp Major-Gen. Upton Prior, referring to outpost duty, states that he "noticed on the recent field columns that sentries on outpost duty were unable to repeat their orders when asked to do so, though possibly when questioned they were able to answer some of the questions. The major-general considers this is not going far enough, and that every trained soldier should be so thoroughly well acquainted with the ordinary orders for a sentry on outpost duty, such as the direction of the enemy, the position of neighbouring sentries, &c., as to be able to repeat them with the same fluency as when sentry on a post in barracks. Each post would possibly, in addition, have a few special orders. In order to attain this object, the major-general considers it would be of great assistance to the soldier if some simple form of orders embracing the various general headings contained in Section 167, part VII., Infantry Drill, for sentries, and Cavalry Drill, par. 327, for vedettes, were drawn up by commanding officers, that every man who has passed in drill should at all times be able to repeat them by heart if asked to do so, and that no man should be passed as a trained soldier until he can do so. The major-general will take every opportunity of individually asking officers, non-commissioned officers, and men to repeat these orders on any parade he may be present at."

THE VICTORIA CROSS.

Last night's Gazette announced that the Queen had been graciously pleased to signify her intention of conferring the decoration of the Victoria Cross on the undermentioned non-commissioned officer, whose claims have been submitted for Her Majesty's approval, for his conspicuous bravery at the action of Wolve Spruit, stated as against his name:—

Sergt. Arthur Herbert Lindsey Richardson, Lord Strathcona's Corps.—On July 5, at Wolve Spruit, about 15 miles north of Standerton, a party of Lord Strathcona's Corps, only 38 in number, came into contact, and was engaged at close quarters, with a force of 80 of the enemy. When the order to retire had been given, Sergt. Richardson rode back under a very heavy cross-fire and picked up a trooper whose horse had been shot and who was wounded in two places, and rode with him out of fire. At the time when this act of gallantry was performed, Sergt. Richardson was within 300 yards of the enemy, and was himself riding a wounded horse.

CAVALRY.

2nd Life Guards.—Major Anstruther-Thomson left Cape Town on the 29th ult. in the Tantallon Castle for England.

2nd Dragoon Guards.—Capt. Dickin, who was so seriously injured some time ago when riding in the Reading Steeplechases, is making now as good progress as can be expected, but some time must elapse before he is fit to resume regimental duty. He was removed recently to his father's house in Shropshire, and is ordered to spend a few weeks in the bracing air of Llandudno.

9th Lancers.—Lieut. the Hon. D. M. P. Carleton has been appointed A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Hemming, C.B., commanding the Cavalry Brigade at Aldershot.

12th Lancers.—Lieut. Dunlop is on passage home from the Cape in the Custodian.

14th Hussars.—Lieut. Philipson-Stow is acting as orderly officer to Major-Gen. Upton Prior, in Ireland.

15th Hussars.—Lieut. Lord Kensington has arrived home from South Africa, having been obliged to leave the front by the pressure of private affairs consequent upon his accession to the peerage.

17th Lancers.—A stained glass window is being erected in Bangor parish church in memory of the late Earl of Ava, eldest son of the Marquis of Dufferin, who was killed during the siege of Ladysmith. The window will be unveiled by the Duchess of Montrose on Tuesday, the 25th inst. It contains a life-size portrait of Lord Ava in the armour of a Christian knight. It has been decided that any balance remaining over after defraying the cost of the window shall be applied towards the proposed erection of a memorial column in the family burying ground at Clondeboye.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Lieut.-Col. W. A. Plant, recently promoted from the Western Division, has been appointed to the Southern Division, and posted to the command of the garrison companies at Cork.

Major Gay and Qrmr. Collins, R.F.A., and Capt. Kempson, R.G.A., are on passage home from South Africa in the Custodian.

Capt. F. Lyon, R.G.A., has been selected for service with the West African Frontier Force.

The Assaye, which arrived in Southampton on Sunday last from South Africa, brought home Driver Glascock, G Battery R.H.A., who has been recommended for the Victoria Cross for his gallantry at the battle of Koornspruit, where he, with three comrades, rescued two guns under a heavy fire. They returned for the third, but were compelled to abandon the attempt. In this fight Glascock had six horses shot under him, and was slightly wounded in the back. Subsequently, at Diamond Hill, he was wounded in the knee and invalidated home. At Kroonstad Lord Roberts congratulated Glascock and his comrades on their gallantry before the troops on parade.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The corps did well at the recent rifle competition in the Thames District. M Company, under Sergt. Ridgewell, won the cup presented by Admiral Sir Nathaniel Bowden-Smith, Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, whilst the chief honour of the gathering fell to Sapper Gale, his score of 116 points winning him the Borough of Chatham Diamond Jubilee Championship Challenge Cup, Qrmr.-Sergt. Alexander taking second place with 113 points.

INFANTRY.

Coldstream Guards.—Majors Frederick and Monck have passed the tactical examination for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

Scots Guards.—That the new 3rd Batn., only formed in the present year, is making substantial advance in strength and efficiency was shown by the fine muster of officers and men at Wellington Barracks for the battalion's first inspection in physical drill this week, made by Major-Gen. Trotter. The men, who are generally well up to the standard height and breadth of the Guards, though mostly but young soldiers, were in the white jacket of undress, and were commanded by Major Drummond. The physical drill was smartly performed from the word of Capt. and Adj. King, the drums and fifes giving the musical accompaniment.

Irish Guards.—Major Hamilton has passed the tactical examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

Royal Scots (1st).—Lieut. Leggatt, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for five months on urgent private affairs.

Queen's (2nd).—Col. Collins has been granted an extension of twelve months in command of the 1st Batn.

Bufs (3rd).—Capt. Trevor, 2nd Batn., is acting as assistant to the staff officer for prisoners of war in Ceylon, and is graded as a staff captain.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—Lieut. Braithwaite sailed from Cape Town in the Tantallon Castle on the 29th ult. for England.

Bedfordshire Regiment (16th).—Lieut.-Col. Cavenagh, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from the Cape in charge of invalids in the Custodian. Lieut. Binny is a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, and has been appointed to the 6th Bombay Cavalry.

Royal Irish Regiment (18th).—Lieut. McRae, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, and has been appointed to the 25th Punjab Infantry.

Lancashire Fusiliers (20th).—With the formation on Wednesday of the eighth company, the 4th Batn. at Chatham has been brought up to full strength.

Royal Welsh Fusiliers (23rd).—A silver cup, offered by Brigadier-Gen. De Wend, for a marching and shooting competition among the regiments in his brigade on Salisbury Plain, was won easily by the 3rd (Militia) Batn. Seventeen teams competed, each consisting of one officer, a non-commissioned officer, a bugler, and 20 privates. The other battalions taking part in the competition were the 4th Devons, 3rd Gloucesters, 5th Irish Rifles, and 3rd D.C.L.I. The conditions were to march 10 miles to the firing point, and then fire 10 rounds advancing from 800 to 200 yards, at small single figure targets, khaki colour, the targets appearing for 15 and disappearing for 30 seconds. Three hours were allowed for the competition from start to finish. The winning team, which was under the command of Major Lord, was five hits ahead of their nearest rivals.

Worcestershire Regiment (29th).—Capt. Palmer is on passage home from the Cape in the Custodian to join the 4th Batn. at Aldershot, on promotion.

Dorsetshire Regiment (39th).—Capt. Banks, having obtained an extension of leave, has vacated his appointment as D.A.A.G. in India.

Welsh Regiment (41st).—Major Harkness is en route to the Cape in the Hawarden Castle, to join headquarters.

Black Watch (42nd).—Lieut. Harvey, of the 2nd Batn. (73rd), has been recommended for the Adjutancy, vice Capt. Collins, term expired. He will be promoted to his captaincy immediately, being senior subaltern.

Essex Regiment (44th).—Col. (Major-Gen.) Stephenson will complete to-morrow his extended term of 12 months in the lieut.-colonelcy.

Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (46th).—Lord Roberts, in a despatch from Pretoria dated the 10th inst., says: "Col. Henry specially mentions excellent service rendered by Capt. Harvey, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry."

Northamptonshire Regiment (48th).—Lieut. Kent has been granted leave from India to England for one year on private affairs.

Royal Berkshire Regiment (49th).—A correspondent writes:—

"Many friends and old 49th officers will congratulate Lieut.-Col. Burney on his succeeding to the command of the 2nd Batn. (66th), vice Lieut.-Col. Evans Gordon, who has been placed on half-pay. All Col. Burney's service has been passed in the Berkshire Regiment. He joined the old 49th as a cadet from Sandhurst some 21 years ago, and with that battalion served in the Egyptian War, 1882. For five years he was adjutant of the 6th Batn. Manchester Regiment at Ashton-under-Lyne, where, by his tact and kindly manner, he made many friends."

Middlesex Regiment (57th).—Capt. Chichester, 6th (Militia) Batn., is on passage home from the Cape in the Custodian.

Black Watch (73rd).—The executive committee of the Lieut. Tait Memorial Fund has issued a statement reporting that £1 600 has been raised; £120 has been devoted to furnishing a bed in the Scottish Hospital in South Africa, and expenses amount to £50. The executive recommends that the balance be disposed of as follows: £1,000 in equipping a bed in the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary and £400 in endowing a bed in St. Andrew's Cottage Hospital.

Highland Light Infantry (74th).—Lieut. Segrave has been appointed A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Verner, C.B., commanding the 5th Infantry Brigade at Aldershot.

Seaforth Highlanders (78th).—Sergt. M'Kenzie, attached to the 1st Batn. West African Frontier Force, has been recommended for the Victoria Cross for distinguished bravery at Dompsoasi, Ashanti.

Loyal North Lancashire Regiment (81st).—A Company embarked at Malta yesterday in the Hawarden Castle for Cyprus, there to be stationed.

Royal Irish Rifles (83rd).—Lieut.-Col. Haggard has been granted a twelve months' extension of command, with effect from Oct. 28.

Royal Irish Fusiliers (89th).—Capt. Cracroft was slightly wounded on Sunday last in the operations under Gen. Hildyard near Driefontein.

Gordon Highlanders (92nd).—Lord Roberts, in his despatch dated Sunday, giving particulars of Sir Redvers Buller's attack on the Boers' position at Spitzkop on Saturday last, says:—

"We had 13 killed and 25 wounded. Three of the former and 16 of the latter belonged to the Volunteer company Gordon Highlanders. The company was marching in column at an estimated distance of seven miles from the enemy's position when a shrapnel shell burst over it. Notwithstanding this heavy loss the company, which has distinguished itself on several occasions, continued to march forward as steady as if nothing had happened."

North Staffordshire Regiment (98th).—Lieut.-Col. Bradley continues to do good work in South Africa. Lord Roberts said in a telegram from Pretoria on Monday: "A column under Col. Bradley, which went into the district to exact retribution for the destruction of the railway near Klip River Station, which brought in some prisoners, 26 horses, 465 cattle, and 1,550 sheep."

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (102nd).—Lieut. Watson was slightly wounded on Sunday last in the operations under Gen. Hildyard near Driefontein.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (103rd).—Capt. Perreau, who was severely wounded at Talana Hill, Dundee, and afterwards went through the siege of Ladysmith, has taken up duty with the details from the 1st and 2nd Batns. attached to the 3rd (Militia) Batn. at Gosport.

Durham Light Infantry (106th).—Major Davison is acting as commandant of the camp for Boer prisoners in Ceylon.

Rifle Brigade.—Capt. Wingfield Digby, 4th Batn., is a passenger home from Cape Town in the Custodian.

Royal Army Medical Corps.—Lieut.-Col. J. L. Peyton has succeeded Lieut.-Col. Hughes as P.M.O., Salisbury Plain. Major Hilliard, who was dangerously wounded in action during a reconnaissance at Ingogo on the 5th inst., is reported to be going on fairly well.

Army Pay Department.—Changes in August:—Lieut.-Col. and Staff Paymaster Humfrey, retired for age on August 30, is retained as a temporary measure on the establishment. Major J. J. Burnett to be Staff Paymaster, vice Humfrey. Capt. Ormsby, South Staffordshire Regiment, from Nov. 4, 1899, and Lieut. A. A. P. Butler, Leicester Regt., from Oct. 8, 1899, are permanently appointed to the Department. Capt. P. S. Dyson to be Major, Aug. 31.

Army Ordnance Corps.—No. 14 Company was formed at Woolwich yesterday, and proceeds to-day to the Curragh to be stationed.

LIFE IN THE ARMY.—Under the auspices, and with the assistance, of the War Office, a lecture, illustrated with animated pictures and lantern slides, has been prepared, entitled "Our Army," describing the life of a soldier from the day he joins. The Commander-in-Chief is much interested in the matter, and is desirous of assisting in every possible way the publication of details concerning a soldier's life, feeling confident that the more that is known by the public on the subject the better it is for recruiting. Two matinees will, therefore, be given on Wednesday and Thursday next respectively, at three o'clock, at the Polytechnic Institute, Regent Street, W. Admission will be by invitation ticket, which will be missioned by receipt of a stamped envelope by Mr. Ernest Esdaile, Holly Lodge, Elmers End, Beckenham.

THE ROYAL NAVY—A HISTORY.

section is concerned with the minor operations of the fleet, and is very complete and carefully compiled. Mr. Clowes is himself responsible for the whole volume, since Mr. H. W. Wilson, who wrote part of the chapter on "Minor Operations," was unable to complete it or to revise what he had finished. Mr. Clowes shows himself a warm admirer of Nelson, and he insists that it was the presence of Nelson rather than the better quality of our ships and their companies which gave us victory, and he points out significantly that we must not depend upon the possession of other Nelsons.

We have received three most useful volumes from Messrs. Gale and Polden, of Aldershot. The name of Capt. S. T. Banning is well known, and he has added Regimental Duties Made Easy to his other works. The volume is devoted to subject "A" for the promotion examination, and, although it does not claim originality, the arrangement has special merits, and it is undoubtedly a most handy and complete guide to the subject. The Officer's Pocket-Book for Home and Foreign Service, by Capt. William Plomer, is a practical aide memoir for field days and manœuvres, putting into brief form the necessary matter, and including in a portable form additional leaves for the issue of orders, which can be replaced by well-arranged refills. The pocket-book is bound in khaki. Aids to Manœuvre Duties, by an "Adjutant," gives, in a waistcoat-pocket volume, instructions from the "Queen's Regulations" and the drill books, with a great deal of useful information concerning marching, outposts, field manœuvres, camping, &c.

The Kriegsgeschichtliche Einzelschriften of the German General Staff are well known to military students, who will be glad to know that a volume, entitled Die taktische Schulung der Preussischen Armee durch König Friedrich den Grossen, 1745 bis 1756, has just been added to the series (Mittler, Berlin). The volume contains an admirable account of the tactical training given to the Prussian Army by Frederick the Great during the peace. Here we see him restless in his efforts to prepare his forces for the work before them, and the volume describes the methods he adopted for the training of leaders, and for the tactical development of the work of troops in the field. Military students who understand German will find the book extremely instructive.

Besieged with B.-P., by J. Emerson Neilly (C. Arthur Pearson), is well described as a full and complete record of the siege of Mafeking. In addition,

Questions on Military History, by Lieut.-Col. H. M. E. Brunker (Gale and Polden), makes a capital little book for those who wish to prepare for examinations in military history. The questions are admirable, and are such as to lead the student to read and understand. No answers are given, but these the student will look out for himself in Hamley's Operations of War, or other like books,

The Cavalier Soldier's Vade Mecum, by Edward Almack, F.S.A. (Blades, East and Blades), is a fac simile from the unique copy of a volume discovered by Mr. Almack, which was a small book of prayer and praise for the soldiers in the Cavalier army, printed in 1648. The language is simple and dignified, and the booklet is historically interesting. It is scarcely necessary to say that coming from such a house the reproduction is as good as could be,

British America is a volume in the "British Empire Series" (Kegan, Paul and Co.). It contains a vast amount of information concerning Canada and all our possessions in America. Most of the papers contained in it were given originally as Sunday afternoon lectures at the South Place Institute, Finsbury. The idea was to afford trustworthy information concerning our various possessions, and although the lecturers did not all approach their subjects from the same point of view, undoubtedly a great store of information was brought together. The present volume contains chapters by Lord Strathcona, Professor J. P. Sheldon, Sir J. G. Bourinot, Col. E. C. S. Moore, Sir Augustus Adderley, Sir William Robinson, and other well-known authorities. The British Empire Series is a remarkable undertaking, and the present volume is as sound and useful as its predecessors.

The Antarctic Regions, by Dr. Karl Fricker, is a translation by Mr. A. Sonnenschein from the German original (Swan, Sonnenschein and Co.). The author has written well, and is an excellent authority upon his subject. He deals with it historically, as well as practically, and is intense in his enthusiasm both for Antarctic explorations and for German explorers, being very much afraid that this "Nation of Thinkers and Investigators" will be left behind in the race. All those interested in the subject should read the book, and they will find the bibliography at the end very useful.

THE HEALTH OF THE NAVY.

THE statistics published by Captain Ernest Rason in connection with diseases of the respiratory organs of seamen in the Navy are sufficiently striking to demand official attention.
Had they appeared while Parliament was sitting there can be no question about what would have happened. As it is, we hope that the matter will not be allowed to drop without some further attempt to investigate the circumstances. "The astounding fact has to be faced," says Captain Rason, "that in spite of better care, and being drier and less exposed, sickness from lung troubles has tremendously increased, and invalid-ing for pleurisy, pneumonia, bronchitis, phthisis,

&c., has more than doubled since masts and yards have gone." In 1868, 49.9 per thousand of men in the Navy underwent treatment for diseases of the respiratory organs, and five per thousand were invalided. In 1883 the figures were 84.9 and 1.45, while in 1898 they were 102.5 and 3.79 respectively. The increase here is obvious, and the serious nature of the matter urgently demands remedy.

In the discussion which has ensued a number of possible causes for this increase in the Navy of diseases of the respiratory organs have been suggested. Captain Rason himself says:—"My own idea is that it is principally due to the present idea of building ships of steel without any lining to the plates in the habitable parts of the ships. No one on land thinks of sitting on an iron seat on a cold day, and no sanitary authority would sanction a house built of corrugated iron as a place to sleep and live in unless the iron was coated with felt or lined with wood." It is the contention of another writer that an explanation may be found for this unfortunate state of things in the fare of the Service, which he declares has not improved in recent years. "Salt beef is still served out when fresh beef might be obtained, and other articles of diet, which were only served out in the past because no other so satisfactory could be obtained, still form the main articles of diet of the British sailor. Lieut. Carlyon Bellairs thinks that some of the increase in lung complaints may be attributed to a want of precaution and care when men are subjected to sudden movements from a hot to a cold station or the reverse. He is of opinion that the general principles of naval hygiene should be included in the naval officer's instruction, as it is really part and parcel of the art of handling warships under all conditions of service. Several writers refer also to the dampness of the decks on which the men sleep, and generally it appears to be thought that there is much more washing and cleaning than is absolutely necessary, and, on the contrary, baneful to the men's health. Overcrowding and want of exercise are two other causes which have been suggested, and a correspondent signing himself "R.N." attributes the trouble to the increased length of time which the vessels now remain in port. "At all events," he asserts, "the sick rate of the Navy would be largely reduced if more time was spent at sea." "Mariner" believes that it is the stokers who have raised the rate, and not the seamen proper, while "Behind the Scenes" declares it to be due to the insalubrity and the damp and germ-laden timbers of the old hulks in which the boys are housed and trained. It is manifest here that if one of these writers is correct the other cannot be. Admiral Henderson points out that in the modern ships the men have lost the superior shelter of high bulwarks, main decks, and topgallant forecastles given by the old wooden walls. As opposed to the theories of "R.N.," it may be mentioned that history provides many instances where admirals have pointed out that additional sea work meant an increased sick-list, while, as regards Admiral Henderson's idea, it must be true that, in spite of their better shelter, the conditions in the old vessels were, on the whole, less favourable than in the ships of to-day. Fleet-Surgeon Christopher Harvey supports the suggestions of "Mariner." He states that from his experience of two years as senior medical officer of the training ship Lion, at Devonport, that lung diseases are generated among the boys in vessels of that service through overcrowding and deficient hygienic surroundings. The statistics he produces appear to bear out the truth of his argument.

On the whole, then, it would appear that at least a portion of the trouble may be traced to overcrowding and insanitary conditions in the depot and training ships. As Dr. Harvey says, the result of such serious drawbacks to health is that when the boys are drafted to seagoing ships they readily acquire disease. The hospitals abroad are filled with relapses of the complaints that originated in the training service, or from the development of pneumonic phthisis. It is possible, of course, that the alternations of heat and cold and damp that obtain in iron or steel-built vessels may also conduce to diseases of the respiratory organs, and that, given these originating causes, the matters referred to by other correspondents may have their effect in causing the change which has come about. The only doubt thrown upon the statistics of Captain Rason comes from Dr. Donkin, who declares that no discussion of the kind we are referring to can be anything but futile unless the nature of the lung disease in question be accurately specified. This appears to us somewhat captious criticism; the importance of the subject cannot be questioned, and, therefore, anything that will throw light upon the cause of the condition of affairs to which Captain Rason has drawn attention is to be welcomed.

AN AUXILIARY OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

THE American Naval War College has lately devoted attention to a subject which deserves notice. Our own revenue cutters in the old days did many gallant acts in our wars, but the Americans claim that the vessels of their Revenue Service are better as an armed force than those of any other Power, and are available for naval duty in any part of the world. Last February Captain Stockton, of the War College, requested the Chief of the Revenue Cutter Service to nominate an officer to lecture at the college on the question, "How can the Revenue Cutter Service be made to reach its utmost efficiency as a part of the Naval Organisation of the United States in time of War?" The officer selected was Lieut. G. L. Carden, and he appears to have delivered a very interesting address. Originally, when the Revenue Cutter Service was established in 1790, all its officers were to hold commissions in the American Navy. In 1798 the revenue cutters captured many prizes in the West Indies, and in the next year it was ordered that the service should be available as a naval force when the President should so direct, and it was thus employed during the war of 1812, in the course of which it took a large number of prizes. Indeed, the revenue cutters have generally accompanied the vessels of the United States Navy in their operations, and they played a notable part during the last war, both with Admiral Sampson and in the Pacific, and shared in nine engagements.

At the present time the American Revenue Cutter Service includes thirty-seven vessels, and it was the object of Lieut. Carden to show how these could be made more useful in war. He indicated the Manning and Gresham class as the best type. We learn from the Army and Navy Journal that the length of the craft is 205ft. 6in., the beam 32ft. 10in., and the mean draught of 12ft. 3in., while engines of 2,650 h.p. give a speed of over 18 knots. The Onondagua and Algonquin resemble the Yorktown class of cruisers, and the McCullough, which did notable service in the war, is somewhat larger. The Seminole is 188ft. long, and two other vessels are building. All are gunboats of good sea-keeping quality, and are capable of high speed. Speed has, in fact, been attained by the sacrifice of protection for the machinery, and in this direction improvement is possible. The boats have good coal capacity, and the McCullough steamed from Yokohama to Honolulu, and the Manning from New York to San Francisco at 10½ knots. The new 14pr. quick-firer is recommended for the boats, and it is suggested that three, or possibly four, could be carried in the broadside in the Onondagua class; 5in. guns forward and aft are also said by Lieut. Carden to be necessary, and he would have the boats armed in miniature on the same plan as heavier ships. He believes that the McCullough, armed in this way, would be able to meet with advantage the average third-class foreign cruiser carrying heavier pieces with slower fire. He thinks that the Navy Department should take up the work of equipping the cutters for war service.

According to the view of this officer, the function of the Revenue cruisers is to constitute an active coast-guard as opposed to a passive one, and he would have squadrons of them mobilised twice a year for drill and manœuvres. He believes that if this were done, and the action of the cutters well defined, the fleet itself would be free in a large measure from duty near the coast. One division of the cutters should cover the Atlantic shore from Vineyard Sound to East Port, another from Buzzard's Bay to Philadelphia, a third from Norfolk to Jacksonville, a fourth from Key West to Galveston, and a fifth be upon the Pacific coast. The Revenue cutters would also act as despatch boats, and would supplement the work of the signal stations by scouting within a considerable distance of the shore, and carrying intelligence to the stations. To give the boats efficiency, he thinks they should from time to time cruise in company with a squadron in order to make their officers more familiar with naval duties. Undoubtedly, organised upon this plan, the Revenue cutters would be a force available for service in war, and may be regarded as a useful auxiliary to the United States Navy in the work of coast defence.

NAVY NOTES.

The promotions which have been announced this week in connection with China should, to some extent at least, allay the rising feeling of dissatisfaction with the distribution of honours to the Navy which has been finding expression in the Press during the last two or three weeks. Not only in the Morning Post and several of the London evening papers, but particularly in the provincial Press, both articles and correspondence demonstrate that the friends of officers and men who have been serving ashore in South Africa are getting discontented at the seeming want of recognition which the Admiralty is showing of these services. A curious phase of the agitation, if we may call it so, is the evident intention of some of the writers to give expression to their feelings in the field of politics. This is a point of view which will probably appeal more directly to Mr. Goschen, Mr. Macartney, and Mr. Chamberlain than to the naval officers at the board. The circumstance that the officers and men who were serving with Captain Lambton have been rewarded while others have not, and that Captain Lambton is a political adversary of the present Government gives a colourable value to these protests, even though the more experienced may deem it an electioneering dodge. The remedy is manifest, the Admiralty have only to make public the principles upon which they intend to distribute rewards both in South Africa and China, and they will take the wind out of their accusers' sails.

Looking at the matter purely from the naval point of view, there is also something to be said for the Admiralty taking such a course as is indicated above. At first it was understood from what Mr. Goschen announced in reference to the Ladysmith rewards that it was intended to deal with each case as those connected left the scene of action. But if any such rule was made it has been broken through, and it would certainly seem to be fairer to deal with each case as it arises instead. In this connection people are asking why Captains Lambton and Scott received the Companionship of the Bath. Captain Jones, who accompanied General Buller in his Natal campaign and march to Laing's Nek, is apparently to be rewarded by preference to a larger vessel, while Captains Protheroe and Sir Edward Chichester have not as yet had their services recognised. In another grade—in that of the warrant officers—it is pointed out that while the gunner of the Powerful received a commission, the gunner of the Terrible remains unrewarded, and that this is the more strange since the latter has also been doing good service in China. Criticism and comparison of this nature is not good for the Service at large, and every effort should be made to prevent any grounds for it arising.

The promotions of Commanders Stewart and Cradock, and that of Captain Halliday, of the Marines, for their distinguished services in China will be most cordially received, not only by their brother officers, but by the country generally. This is exactly what we should expect. The private accounts of the fighting at Taku, at Tien-tsin, and in Peking all go to show that these officers have specially distinguished themselves, and when we get, as we hope we may soon, the British official reports, we may be certain the private accounts will find ample corroboration therein. Some of the foreign official reports have already been published, and Captain Stewart's handling of the Algerine, Captain Cradock's gallant leading of the naval contingent, and Captain Halliday's courage and resource in the defence of the Legations are all referred to in terms of well-deserved praise. In all probability now that the naval brigades have returned to their ships, the officers and men of the sea service will not have much more chance of showing their mettle. It might be a good thing for the authorities therefore to seize this occasion for making public the further rewards which will doubtless be distributed among those who at the above-named places and in Admiral Seymour's expedition have added fresh laurels to the glorious records of the Navy.

The promotion of Captain Lewis Halliday to the rank of brevet major in his corps does not appear a sufficient recognition of the splendid gallantry of the Marine detachments which so largely contributed to the safety of the Legations in Peking. Captain Strouts, who was killed during the siege, was the senior of the three Marine captains, and would, presumably, have been promoted had he survived. The promotion has been bestowed upon Captain Halliday as the next in seniority, and as his captain's commission only dates back two years, the reward is substantial in the professional sense. It is unusual in the Royal Marines to promote a junior captain to the substantial rank of major, but the circumstances were also very exceptional. No such defence has perhaps been recorded in our military history since the stirring days of the Indian Mutiny, and it seems certain that the Legation must have been captured and all the Europeans butchered and tortured but for the presence of those small detachments of Marines, and the mere handful of foreign troops which acted with them. Precedent has been followed, as we have said, but the Navy would have been heartily glad, we think, had the Admiralty bestowed other honours upon Captains Halliday and Wray. The name of the latter, Captain Edmund Wray, is not yet mentioned, but there can, we assume, be no doubt that this officer will be advanced ere long. The Admiralty cannot afford to neglect the claims of Marine officers who distinguish themselves as these two surviving officers of the British guard in Peking have done. One brevet majority does not meet the case.

The appointment of Staff-Surgeon Beadnell to the Barracouta appears to be an odd manner of rewarding a man for services such as this officer has rendered to science and his country. Dr. Beadnell, it will be remembered, was one of the officers of the Powerful who was promoted on the return of that ship from South Africa. During the commission of the Powerful in China he was landed in the Philippines at the request of the American General, who was short of medical officers, and he there saw a good deal of the fighting, being under fire on several occasions. On rejoining his ship he received the thanks of the principal medical officer of the United States force. Next we heard of him with the naval brigade at the Cape, when he was present at all the actions under Lord Methuen, and afterwards accompanied Lord Roberts in the march to Bloemfontein. He was frequently mentioned in despatches, particularly for his services at Paardeberg, where he was reported to have served as a volunteer in the fighting line, although suffering at the time from dysentery. During the recent manoeuvres he served in the Scylla, so that apparently he has not had much leave since his return from foreign service, and to send him to the West Coast of Africa, unless at his own request, seems to be an unusual and inconsiderate step. The ways of the naval medical department are often inexplicable to the plain man, and it is to be hoped that there is a simple and straightforward explanation of its action in this matter.

It seems very likely that a good deal of mischief may be done by the manner in which the newspapers as a rule have referred to the operations which have recently taken place at Dover and Plymouth. It is perfectly true, of course, that these operations have been carried out for the purpose of testing certain defensive arrangements, but not such as generally described. At Dover, although the affair was written up as an attempted invasion, the real test was rather limited to certain matters in connection with the Langdon battery. It would be fair to assume that in the event of a war between this country and France, an attempt might be made under cover of darkness to land a small force in the neighbourhood of St. Margaret's Bay, and to rush this battery. In so far, therefore, as the operations at Dover represented something of the kind they might be useful; for the rest it was merely froth and frivol, a pretty spectacle for the sightseers and no more. At Plymouth it is very necessary to endeavour to ascertain whether, under cover of darkness, it might be possible for torpedo craft evading the batteries to run into the harbour and try and sink some of the vessels there. Primarily, therefore, the test at Plymouth was applied to the searchlights. It goes without saying that, given a sufficiency of q.f. guns, if the boats can only be kept long enough in the rays of the light, their destruction is assured. It is somewhat difficult from the reports in the papers to learn whether or no the torpedo boats succeeded in their purpose. The conditions, however, under which the test was made seem to have been very unlike those that an enemy would deem suitable, or would choose for such a desperate purpose.

The Navy League must look to its laurels, and furthermore will have to reconsider its position in light of the new enemy. It is not the Board of Admiralty whose actions it will have to criticise, but a more insidious danger to the State. There has recently been established an association styled the Army League, and Mr. Champneys, who signs himself the joint honorary secretary of this institution, has set forth in the Morning Post its views upon some questions of Imperial defence. "As to the impossibility of invasion," he says, "with a fleet available in English waters, some of us remain unconvinced. What would happen, for instance, if it were drawn away to stop a supposed attempt at invading Ireland, and the enemy's fleet got to the English Channel instead?" The letter from which we quote was published several days ago, and we have been expecting every morning to see the question Mr. Champneys propounds replied to by an official of the Navy League. It is stated further that a series of articles which have been appearing in a contemporary on "How to Make London Impregnable" by a series of forts round the capital, is also an emanation from this new League. That there is work for an organisation to instruct the country in the duties which our Army must be ready to perform we have not the slightest doubt about, but it will not go to work on the lines indicated by Mr. Champney. A much better lead was given by Captain Eardley Wilmot in his letter on Army Reform in the Times of yesterday week.

HARBOUR DEFENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Major Baker Browne, R.E., deprecates my raising the question whether our harbour defences should be manned by forces under the control of the War Office or the Admiralty, and wishes those who think as I do to accept the present arrangement. This I should be glad to do if the system appeared to me likely to prove efficient in time of war, but I am afraid this principle of allowing things to slide until we receive a rude awakening is responsible for much that we have to regret in the South African war. I did not so much raise the question of control as of the fitness of the forces to whom at present this work is entrusted, though of course a Naval Corps for coast and harbour defence would naturally be under the control of the naval authorities. I cannot see that the present policy frees the Admiralty in the development of our Fleet in a greater degree than if this department has the duty of protecting its own arsenals and anchorages as well as the waters beyond. I do anticipate, however, that with a hostile fleet as large as a hopeless confusion would result in a system which places the Spithead Forts, for instance, in charge of land artillery, unacquainted with the characteristics of our own ships, and therefore unable—without reference to some naval authority—to decide in time of war what should be done in the case of an approaching vessel. To obviate this difficulty, there is apparently some arrangement whereby vessels are to be intercepted outside to ascertain their bonafides, and the result communicated to the forts. Major Browne considers this requires further development. In the case of one of our small vessels being chased at night by a hostile cruiser and seeking protection, the feelings of its commander can be imagined when ordered to stop by another small craft that his nationality might be ascertained, while the fort gunners ply their search-lights on him, and remain undecided whether or no to loose off a quick-firing gun. As for passing over their mine-fields, capture outside would be preferable. As naval Commander-in-Chief in charge of and responsible for the safety of vessels within the precincts of the port, I should insist on no mines being made active without my knowledge and consent.

Major Browne says an Intelligence Department is wanted to report movements of vessels along the coast, and that the present arrangement does not suffice, as the coastguard with whom the duty rests would be withdrawn in time of war. It is the knowledge these men have of war-ships which makes the system efficient, as I have experienced when out with the Naval Manoeuvres. A portion of this force would be embarked in time of war, but not in sufficient numbers to impair the coast Signal Service; and I should like to see this valuable body of men increased. I am glad to hear that the position of every gun, mine, and search-light, has been agreed to by the Admiralty in concert with the War Office. This is the least that could be expected, but it was not always so, and the fact does not affect my argument that these weapons should, where required, form an inseparable portion of the whole of naval defence whether general or local. One of my reasons for advocating the change is because I want to see the Army untrammelled by such duties, and free to perform its principal function, that of acting beyond our shores as a compact expeditionary force, either in preserving our Empire, or, if need be, reducing the territory of an enemy.

Sunday, Sept. 9.

Li Hung Chang has requested the protection of an American escort in his proposed journey north.

The Secretary of the Admiralty informs us that the following telegram has been received from Li-u-kun-tau respecting the condition of the wounded at the naval base there:—

"The wounded are progressing favourably.

"Condition dangerous: John George Goulter, able seaman, 166685, of H.M.S. Terrible; George Parsons, ordinary seaman, 195630, of H.M.S. Endymion.

"Condition serious: Ernest Ford, stoker, 280281, of H.M.S. Terrible; A. J. Harwood, private R.M.L.I., Po 5799, of H.M.S. Terrible; George Clark, able seaman, 103747, of H.M.S. Centurion.

"Commander Philip N. Wright and 46 others improving."

The Minister of Marine in Paris has received the following telegram from General Frey, at Peking:—

"A battalion of marines, accompanied by a battery of artillery, has arrived here. Tranquillity continues to prevail at Peking and in the neighbourhood of the city. The health of the troops is excellent."

The Japanese Foreign Office has received a telegram, dated Shashi, Sept. 4, stating that large bodies of Black Flags, under the command of Gen. Liu, are passing northwards through the provinces of Hunan and Hupei.

Field Marshal Count von Waldersee arrived at Colombo on Thursday last, and after spending a few hours ashore resumed his voyage.

The transport Lalpoora, with a wing of the 4th Punjab Infantry, a section of the 51st Native Field Hospital, and the staff of the 3rd Brigade, the German cruiser Tiger, from Amoy, and the German cruiser Fuchs, from Singapore, arrived at Hong-Kong. The transports Dalhousie and India, with the remainder of the Hong-Kong Regiment, have proceeded to Wei-hai-wei. The transports Crefeld, Roland, and Valdivia, have left Bremerhaven with troops for the Far East. A despatch from Amoy states that the German cruiser Schwalbe has left that port.

Monday, Sept. 10.

Owing to the anticipation of disturbances occurring at Hong Kong on Saturday last, preparations were made to suppress any rising. Forty rounds of ball cartridge were served out to the troops, who were confined to barracks. The troops in the town were reinforced, and six Maxim guns were held in readiness. The police were ordered to suppress the Dragon procession, which was to be held in connection with the Feast of Lanterns. There was no rioting or disturbance. The Chinese were evidently aware that military preparations had been made, and were cowed, while heavy showers during the night helped to damp the ardour of any restless spirits.

A despatch from Amoy, dated the 6th inst., states that all the foreign Marines who had been landed there and at Kulang-fu were withdrawn on the morning of that day.

Tuesday, Sept. 11.

The Secretary of State for India has received the following telegram from Sir A. Gaselee:—"Sept. 2.—We occupied railway junction at Fung-tai, also road and railway bridge at Liukochao, which gives us command of line to Pao-ting-fu."

Gen. Chaffee telegraphs from Peking on the 4th inst.:—

"Evidence accumulates that diplomatic relations will not be resumed here for a long time. The staff of the Russian Legation will leave very soon for Tien-tsin. It appears to me certain that the Chinese Government will not return here while the foreign army remains, and, if this is true, our Legation can transact no business. In my opinion, Peking is to be merely a camp of the foreign army, pending a settlement by the Powers at other points."

A despatch from Peking, dated Aug. 28, says the allied troops marched through the Forbidden City this morning. The Chinese were not much impressed. The Russian Gen. Linevitch first inspected the contingent and exchanged compliments with the various commanders. The force then entered the Forbidden

City, followed by the Ministers and their staffs. A British battery fired a Royal salute, then the troops and the staffs having dismounted just inside the south gate the column passed through the Palace and out at the north gate. The Ministers and the generals and their staffs afterwards returned to the Palace and visited the audience halls. In the Royal buildings six mandarins, including a Tsung-li-Yamen official, were seen. The Imperial Palace consists of a large number of irregularly built and gaudily decorated edifices, approached through spacious grass-grown courtyards. There are many beautiful marble staircases, and the entrances are adorned by quaint bronze animals and large costly vases. The Emperor's throne is situated in a small building. It is surrounded by pedestals on which are caskets containing written wishes. These are only opened after death. The whole place was in a state of great neglect.

The War Office have received a telegram from the Officer Commanding the Troops at Li-u-kun-tau, saying that Pte. 4977 G. Jones, 2nd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, died of wounds on Sept. 3.

Four hundred men of the 20th Punjaubis were landed at Liu-kun-tau (Wei-hai-Wei) on Sept. 4 for the mainland garrison. It is expected that two Indian regiments will remain there during the winter. Orders have been received to proceed with the fortification work as fast as possible. The transport Umta has left Calcutta for China with B Squadron of the Jodhpur Lancers, the 53rd Native Field Hospital, and part of the staff of the 3rd Brigade.

Wednesday, Sept. 12.

Further reports of the march through the Forbidden Palace describe it as an historic event. After the procession, which began at eight o'clock in the morning, and occupied an hour and a-half in passing through the grounds, a party of civilians, including the ladies of the Legations and several well-known missionaries, was admitted. Tea was served, and then the Imperial palaces were inspected. The most remarkable features of the Imperial buildings are said to be the exterior gilding, and the staircases carved out of single stones, with figures of dragons, lions, and other ornaments. The bed of the Empress is trimmed with solid gold. After the inspection the gates were closed again, and no one was permitted to enter the grounds.

The Chinese forts at Peitsang, near Taku, are still undisturbed, and a British force is reconnoitring in the neighbourhood, while the Russians are supposed to be meditating an attack, but at present have not sufficient artillery. A Russian scouting party was blown up by a mine near the fort, and several men were killed. The commander of the Chinese forts at Chifu is greatly disturbed by reports that the Germans propose taking possession of the forts. He threatens to defend them to the end. The forts are strongly garrisoned, and filled with Krupp guns, and if a fight occurred the foreign settlement would be destroyed.

The expedition for Pao-Ting-Fu will consist of the following International troops:—British, two regiments of cavalry, B Battery of Horse Artillery, and 300 infantry; Italian, 1,000; Japanese, 300; Russians 300; Americans, 500.

The Viceroy of India having congratulated Sir Claude Macdonald on the rescue of the Legations, after a heroic defence by a force India was proud to have sent, the British Minister in Peking sent the following reply:—"Thanks from the garrison for your telegram of sympathy. We all know that but for the splendid energy of General Gaselee and his troops relief would have arrived too late."

Major Lees, U.S. Army, in his report on the battle of Tien-tsin, speaks in terms of high praise of Gen. Dorward, and of the British naval force.

The South Australian gunboat Protector was formally commissioned on Tuesday at Hong Kong, and hoisted the white ensign. The transport Nevassa, with the Ordnance Field Park, an advance Commissariat Depot, C Section of the 62nd Native Field Hospital, Field Medical Store Depot, and a British General Hospital for Chifu, has left Calcutta for Hong Kong.

Thursday, Sept. 13.

The mixed force of 4,000 men left Tien-tsin on Saturday last for the cities of Shanghaesien and Tilie, where the presence of Boxers threaten the Tien-tsin district. The advance will be made in two columns, for the purpose of flanking the towns. General Dorward commands the expedition in person. Japanese siege guns and a large body of cavalry accompany the force.

The British and Americans are considering the feasibility of transferring their winter supply base from Tong-ku to a point near Shan-hai-kwan, which is free of ice, and is also a railway terminus. The chief difficulty lies in the lack of troops to guard the railway. The Boxers are very troublesome between Peking and Tien-tsin. They entered the city of Tung Chow secretly, and burned the buildings occupied by the Russians and Japanese. They killed every male person whom they encountered, and set fire to the surrounding district. The British have executed a "Boxer" soldier whom they captured, and who confessed to the murder of eight Chinese Christians.

The Secretary of the Admiralty reports that the following telegram has been received from Liw-kun-tau:—

"Gunner William J. Horne, R.M.A., 6098, of H.M.S. Barfleur, died Sept. 11.

"Wei-hai-wei Marines and Terrible's Naval Brigade returned."

The Vadala and Nilerkotla have left Calcutta for Hong Kong with sappers and miners, Imperial service troops, an Engineer field park, and D Section of the 55th Native Field Hospital. The initial cost of the dispatch of the Indian force to China amounts to over £2,000,000. Large reserves and supplies are being rapidly despatched.

Friday, Sept. 14.

The departure of the international expedition, under Gen. Dorward, organised to proceed from Tien-tsin towards Pao-ting-fu, was delayed by rain until half-past two on Saturday last. After a march of 15 miles the force camped at Yung-liu-cheng, due west of Tien-tsin, having had no fighting on the way. On Monday it advanced to Maoshang.

Great Britain has replied to the Russian note with regard to the proposed withdrawal from Peking to the effect that such a proposal could not be entertained by the British Government before satisfactory terms had been arranged with China.

THE SICK AND WOUNDED.

The P. and O. Company's steamer China arrived at Plymouth on Sunday, bringing 17 naval and marine sick and wounded from Hong Kong, mostly belonging to Admiral Seymour's column.

In the Patrie there is an interesting interview with a sergeant of marines who came home in the China:—

"The French," said this sergeant, "are splendid soldiers, and you can say that we are unanimous in respecting their irresistible dash, and their contempt for danger. It would be better to fight with them than against them. They are, moreover, excellent comrades, sharing everything while in the field. The men of the French Marine Infantry were the bonds which united the foreign detachments, and their good humour often sufficed to smooth away the coolness which will inevitably arise in such a cosmopolitan army. The Chinese are dirty beasts. They are cowardly and ridiculous, but their instinct for doing harm obliged us to keep constantly on the alert. Uglier and more repugnant than the Soudanese blacks, for example, the disgust which they inspire is overpowering." To the question, "Where were you wounded?" the sergeant replied, "About twenty-one miles from Tientsin, on the second day of the retreat. I was in the advance guard when we perceived a number of Boxers advancing towards us, waving large flags. We took up a position in skirmishing order, and were able to repel the attack without difficulty at the very moment when the German detachment arrived to reinforce us. As the brigades were retiring, one of them fired, and succeeded in hitting me right in the face. The shock was so great that I fainted, but I remember that in falling a terrible thought struck me: my comrades will leave me behind, as I am hidden from them by the high grass. What a terrible death awaits me at the hands of the enemy! Luckily, however, the officer's instructions regarding the wounded are extremely strict. They must never be abandoned, even if their comrades have to wait by them until the arrival of reinforcements."

Navy Personal.

Admiral of the Fleet the Earl of Clanwilliam, had the honour of lining with the Queen at Balmoral on Friday in last week. The noble earl is staying at Glen Muick, Ballater, Her Majesty having graciously placed that residence at his lordship's disposal.

Admiral Sir R. More-Molyneux's appointment to the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, is a small recognition of his long and valuable services, especially during the period he bore the heat and hard work as Commodore at Suakin 1884-85. An aural affection has hitherto, unfortunately, stood in his way for active employment, but the presidential control of our great naval educational establishment for the next three years will in some measure compensate him for not hoisting his flag as commander-in-chief of a squadron.

Rear-Admiral V. O. Inglefield, who was accidentally killed in London on July 16 last, left estate valued at £4,168.

Rear-Admiral T. S. Jackson, Admiral Superintendent of Devonport Dockyard, is credited by a western newspaper with inventing a system of wireless telegraphy, while in command of the torpedo school ship Defiance, prior to the introduction of the Marconi apparatus. Captain H. B. Jackson, of the Vulcan, is the officer to whose ingenuity this earlier method is attributable. The gallant flag officer, although a distinguished naval artilleryman, was at no period of his previous career connected directly with the torpedo school.

Rear-Admiral W. Dyke-Acland, while attending a horse in the stable of his residence at Chudleigh, Devon, last week, was badly injured by the animal kicking him, and thereby rendered unconscious for some time. The gallant officer is now, however, making favourable progress towards recovery.

Commodore R. L. Groome, commanding the South-East Coast of America Station, arrived at Bahia in the Flora on Monday to meet the Wye, due on Wednesday last, from which port she will sail on Saturday next.

Captain Sir Richard Poore, Bart., and the officers of the Royal Naval Barracks, held the annual athletic sports of the General Depot on Wednesday last. Owing to the encroachment of the dockyard extension on the barrack's ground, the area for this desirable and popular display has been considerably curtailed during the past five years.

Captain H. F. Niblett, of the Diadem, was honoured with a visit from the King of Spain and the Queen Regent at Ferrol last week, royal visitors. Her Majesty afterwards visited the local infirmary, and conversed in English with three of the Diadem's men, who had been accidentally injured.

Captain Ernest Fleet, appointed to the Phaeton, and twenty-one officers and 390 men to recommission that vessel and the Virago, embark on Monday next at Liverpool in the Allan steamship Carthaginian for Halifax, N.S., from whence they will proceed by the Canadian Pacific Railway to Esquimalt, B.C.

Captain F. E. E. Brock, of the Eclipse, pays off that cruiser at Portsmouth to-day.

Captain G. A. Callagan, of the Endymion, and the Naval Brigade he commanded on the recent advance for the relief of Peking, have returned to their respective ships.

Captain A. L. Winsloe, of the Niobe, arrived at Plymouth on Monday last from St. Helena, where he has been employed for several months past, since the arrival of the Boer prisoners.

Captain F. G. C. Langdon, late commanding the Black Prince at Queenstown, and now in charge of the training ship Clio off Bangor, saved one of the boys from drowning unnoticed. At day-break the lad fell overboard unnoticed, but his cries, as he was swept away by a racing tide, were heard by a servant in the stern cabin, who roused Captain Langdon. The latter at once jumped through the port and swam after the little chap, whom he got on his back after a struggle. The pair were now a long way from the ship, but a boat had been promptly manned, and they were both picked up safely. Captain Langdon already holds the Royal Humane Society's bronze medal for having, when a sub-lieutenant, jumped off the Resistance in a heavy sea in the Bay of Biscay to save a marine. He will now, doubtless, at least get a clasp. He is youngest son of the late Captain Wm. Langdon, R.N., who fought through the old French War and was wounded at Corunna.

Captain H. D. Barry, appointed to the Mars, and Captain S. H. Login, appointed to the Repulse, will join their respective commands on Tuesday next at Devonport, those vessels being temporarily detached from the Channel Fleet for the purpose.

Captain A. J. Horsley, of the Europa, arrived at Malta on Tuesday last, and was to leave for Portsmouth yesterday. Before she reaches the latter port six months will have elapsed in the passage to and from Sydney, New South Wales.

Captain H. A. Warren, of the Vindictive, left the Nore on Wednesday for the Mediterranean Station.

Captain R. C. Prothero, of the flagship Doris, has inaugurated a fund for erecting memorial stones over the graves of officers and men of the Naval Brigades who were killed, or died of wounds or disease, at Graspan, Modder River, and other actions in which the Royal Navy took part in South Africa.

Captain Percy Scott and Commander (now Captain) A. H. Limpus, of the Terrible, while at Hong Kong in June last, delivered lectures on "Mountings of the Naval guns and their subsequent use with the Ladysmith Relief Column." The valuable information afforded by these gallant officers has now been published, and the proceeds of the sale will be given to the Indian Famine Fund.

Staff-Captain A. G. Douglas, of Chatham Dockyard, has for a long time been heavily handicapped with the amount of work at this largely-increasing arsenal, and is now to have an assistant. It is somewhat inconsistent that a naval establishment which requires a rear-admiral and captains for both dockyard and fleet reserves has not had two staff-captains.

Staff-Captain Charles Brent and Lieut. W. H. F. Montanaro have now been transferred to the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, from Portsmouth, for the instruction of acting sub-lieutenants in pilotage.

Commander J. P. Rolleston, of the Archer, left the Nore on Friday in last week for the Australian station to replace the Mohawk now in China. As the latter vessel has been three years in commission she will return home when her services are no longer required in the Far East.

Commander C. G. Cradock, of the Alacrity, landed with a naval contingent of 250 men in June last at Tong-ku, on the northern bank of the Peiho, and proceeded to the front. For that and other important services during the present complications in China he has been noted for promotion on completing the qualifying service. His advancement will be a gratification to the large number of cadets who served with him in the Britannia, 1896-99, as well as to the Naval Service generally. As he will be about forty years of age on attaining captain's rank, he stands a very good chance of becoming a rear-admiral.

Commander (retired) Thomas W. Chapman, who was awarded a naval pension in 1882, has been transferred to the more lucrative emolument that the Travers Pension List confers.

Commander E. C. H. Helby, who was only retired from the lieutenants' list in July of last year, is now the fortunate recipient of a Greenwich Hospital pension.

Lieuts. Wyndham Forbes and Fitzmaurice Acton embarked in the Union Castle Steamship Norman, at Southampton on Saturday last, for the Cape of Good Hope, on Saturday last, for the Cape of Good Hope, and Mosquito command respectively of the Widgeon and Mosquito.

Lieut. Henry Thompson, relieved from the Wallaroo after nearly four years' foreign service, arrived home on Sunday last in the P. and O. steamship China from Australia.

Lieut. the Hon. A. W. E. Boyle, a senior staff officer of the Excellent, has presented the officers' mess of the Gunnery Establishment, Whale Island, with a valuable silver centre piece in remembrance of his gallant brother gunnery officer, the late Commander F. G. Egerton, who died of wounds received in action at Ladysmith.

Midshipman the Hon. Arthur Coke, of the Crescent, and Lieut. H. E. F. Aylmer, of the Indefatigable, carried off the first and second prizes respectively at the Kebo Club Links last week. The prize cups were the gift of Mrs. George Sheldon, of New York.

Chaplain of the Fleet (retired) the Rev. J. C. Cox-Edwards is, in accordance with the Queen's pleasure, presented by letters patent, this week, to the living of Ecton, Northamptonshire. The reverend gentleman, whom we heartily congratulate, has been more fortunate than his predecessors in thus securing a valuable Crown patronage.

Staff Paymaster Andrew Hume, of the Rodney, goes to the Nore as secretary to Vice-Admiral Sir W. R. Kennedy, under whom he served in a similar capacity on the East Indian Station 1892-95. The secretarial staff at Sheerness otherwise remains unaltered.

ROYAL MARINES.

Major J. H. Swanton's confirmation to the Staff of the Western District ensures his retention of the appointment as District Instructor of Musketry for two years from November last.

Major Frederick White, on special service in South Africa, was the gallant commandant at Ladybrand during the recent siege of that town by the Boers, from which he and his brave comrades were relieved by Bruce Hamilton's Brigade last week.

Captain F. J. W. Harvey and Lieut. B. Neville, embark in the Diadem, vice Captain W. H. Smith and Lieut. W. H. Stopford; Captain Cecil Henderson embarks in the Collingwood, vice Captain E. M. C. Ommaney; Lieut. J. Carpenter in the Severn, vice Captain E. H. Bockett-Pugh; Lieut. John Bush in the Pembroke, vice Lieut. H. S. Lloyd, and Lieut. C. S. McN. Davenport, vice Lieut. B. J. D. Wallhall; Lieut. R. C. S. Walter in the Duke of Wellington, vice Captain C. J. Thoroton, recently promoted; Lieut. H. J. H. Davson in the Cambridge, vice Lieut. G. R. S. Hickson; Lieut. G. C. Wainwright in the Wildfire for R.N. Barracks, Sheerness, vice Lieut. C. Shelton; Lieut. H. Ozanne embarks at Liverpool on Monday next in the Allan steamship Carthaginian for Halifax, N.S., and from thence to Esquimalt to join the Phaeton when recommissioned; Lieut. B. R. de W. O'Sullivan joins the Gladiator, and Lieut. C. L. Hall the Amphion, on commissioning at Portsmouth and Devonport respectively.

Captain Lewis S. T. Halliday, who was badly wounded while serving with the British Legation Guard at Peking, has been most deservedly awarded the brevet of Major. As he is sixty-third in the Captain's list, this advancement must be exceedingly gratifying both to the gallant officer and the Royal Marine Force.

Captains L. W. Miller, N. F. Sampson-Way, and E. J. Stroud, and Lieutenant H. C. Festing, embark immediately for China to fill vacancies on that Station.

Lieut. C. Hood is A.D.C. to Major-General Smith-Dorrien, in South Africa, who was highly commended by General Sir Redvers Buller for his excellent leading at the attack on the hill above Lydenburg on Saturday last. This young officer has had a good baptism of fire since he left the Royal Oak in March last.

DEATHS REPORTED AT LIUKUNTAN.

Barfleur, R.M.A.—6098 Horne, Sept. 11.
Welsh Fus.—2nd: 4977 G. Jones, wounds, Sept. 3.

THE annual inspection of the 3rd Kent (Royal Arsenal) Artillery Volunteers was made on Saturday last, on Woolwich Common, by Major-Gen. Sir J. Maurice, commanding the district. The whole of its 16 guns of position, fully horsed and equipped, and nearly 400 officers and men, were on parade. Col. H. M. Hozier, C.B., was in command. Each of the four batteries in turn was passed under close scrutiny. The general, with his staff, then proceeded to the saluting point, and the march past commenced, all four batteries going past at half distances and half intervals with commendable precision and steadiness. They next ranked past in single file, and then re-formed with full intervals and prepared for action. After the usual parade movements, all admirably executed, an advance in "review order" brought the inspection to a close, the general addressing a few words of compliment to the C.O. and his officers before leaving the ground.

THE Queen has signified her intention of inspecting the detachment of the West African Frontier Force which arrived in England a few days ago under the command of Captain A. B. Molesworth, West India Regiment. The detachment, which consists of six Yoruba Engineers of the West African Frontier Force and seventeen Madras Sappers and Miners, now en route to India on the completion of their term of service in Northern Nigeria, will proceed to Balmoral for this purpose on Tuesday next. Captain Molesworth will be in charge.

ARMY RECRUITING.—A circular memorandum has been sent to general officers commanding districts at home which states that a serious decrease in the number of recruits joining the Army from the Militia having occurred during the past few months, as compared with the number who joined during the similar period of 1899, the Commander-in-Chief desires that the attention of all concerned shall be drawn to the matter, and he trusts that officers commanding embodied Militia units are rendering every assistance to eligible men desirous of enlisting into the Line. Only in exceptional cases should those officers refuse their consent to such enlistments, and each case must be submitted for the decision of the general officer commanding. It should be particularly brought to the notice of the men that they are entitled to a special bounty of a guinea on enlistment into the Army. In cases where it may be considered desirable general officers commanding may use their discretion in giving to such men a fortnight's furlough on their enlistment into the Line.

THE COLT AUTOMATIC QUICK-FIRING MACHINE-GUN AND DUNDONALD GALLOPING GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition or
303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition, loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready for transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom.
Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space,

THE END OF THE WAR.

THE important despatch received on Thursday from Lord Roberts at Nelspruit virtually declared the end of the South African War to have come at last. Lord Roberts in his telegram depicted the break-up and dispersal of the remnant of the Boer army. Of the 3,000 who retreated before our troops to Komati Poort about 700 have effaced themselves by crossing the Portuguese border, many have deserted, and the residue are on the spurs of the Lebombo mountains beyond the Komati River, south of the railway, and near the frontier. Here they are almost powerless for further mischief, and they will probably shortly follow their brothers in arms over the frontier, unless they elect to make there a final stand and receive the coup de grâce. Of the Boer artillery we learn that the enemy, in the tumult and desperation following the realisation that their last hope of success was gone, destroyed most of their guns, both heavy and light. In consequence of this final and utter collapse, Lord Roberts affirmed that there was nothing left of the Boer army but a few marauding bands, and, according to report—still wanting official confirmation—the Commander-in-Chief, having accomplished his difficult task in an exceptionally brilliant manner, it is stated, in a telegram from Pretoria, will leave South Africa and his victorious army on an early date on return to England.

Concurrently with the efforts made by the Commander-in-Chief to induce the burghers still hostile to lay down their arms and prevent further loss and destruction, the onward progress of the British columns has been pushed resistlessly eastwards with unrelaxed vigour. Lord Roberts on Tuesday had advanced his headquarters some fifty miles from Machadodorp to Nelspruit, a point about 110 miles east of Middleburg and sixty miles west of Komati Poort, the objective of the main column. Nelspruit was occupied without opposition on Monday by the 18th Brigade, commanded by Major-General Stephenson. General Pole-Carew, with the Guards Brigade of the same division, and General Ian Hamilton's column was, at the date of Lord Roberts's despatch, four miles to the eastward of Avoca Station on the Barberton branch line, having struck across country from the Delagoa Railway, following an independent line of march towards Kaap Muiden Station, where he was due on Wednesday. The enemy, who for a short time checked the advance of his Mounted Infantry, retreated before him towards the east. Lord Roberts at Nelspruit was in telegraphic communication with Sir Redvers Buller, who, at Spitzkop, twenty-five miles to the north, covered the left flank of the main advance. From Nelspruit also he was able to send supplies to Buller's force with greater ease than from Machadodorp. Of General French's recent doings we await further news. On Monday it was known that the Inniskilling Dragoons, moving in advance of his force, had captured fifty locomotives at Avoca Station, a welcome addition to the forty-three taken by the same intrepid commander at Barberton on the 13th inst., when by a dashing forced march over the difficult mountain pass into the Barberton valley, he surprised the enemy holding the town, released twenty-three officers and fifty-nine men, British prisoners there, and captured over 100 Boers, with rolling stock, and food for three weeks for his men, besides many Mausers, and much ammunition, with waggons, cattle, and sheep. He also intercepted large convoys arriving there, Barberton having been a grand depôt of supplies for the Boer forces in the district. Avoca is less than sixty miles from Komati Poort, and the news that French has reached that important point may arrive at any moment.

With the British in possession of Komati Poort—the frontier town of the Transvaal towards Lourenco Marques, the only seaport hitherto accessible to the Boers for procuring supplies—the last semblance of an excuse for prolonging even a guerilla war should disappear. Having fought stubbornly and well for nearly twelve months against overwhelming odds, the scattered remnants of the burgher armies would, if guided by wisdom and prudence, accept a defeat that would bring with it no dishonour, and would allow the suffering peoples of the conquered States to return to a condition of undisturbed peace. But it is much to be feared that they are now feeling the ill-effects of the misguided zeal in their cause of the friends who, in Europe and in South Africa, were active in the early days of the war in enlisting foreign mercenaries, and in commandeering the Colonial subjects of the Queen. To these two classes alone in the ranks of the enemy, irreconcilable and desperate men, is now attributed the desire and the determination to continue hostilities, by fair means or foul, to the bitter end. This view is borne out by a recent report received by Lord Roberts from Sir Redvers Buller at Spitzkop, to the effect that the bulk of those who opposed him were mercenaries and Cape Colony rebels. Should these trek into the mountainous regions of the Zoutpansberg, beyond the Olifants River, fresh work of a very arduous kind will be in store for our troops.

Desultory fighting on a small scale in many places with uniform success to the British, and many large and important captures by them, form the staple of the news from other parts of the field. General Rundle is again at Bethlehem with General Boyes' Brigade, and a patrol of the Derbyshire Yeomanry there had lately an encounter in which the commanding officer, Lieut. Power, gained much credit. Lord Roberts in his despatch of Wednesday stated that Rundle, acting from Bronkhorstfontein, had attacked a marauding band in position about ten miles to the south-west at Doornberg on the Zand River, and captured one gun and over thirty waggons. General Hart was moving successfully against another of these bands near Potchefstroom. The re-occupation of that town by his force on the 11th inst. was a smart affair. After a forced march, in which his mounted troops covered forty-five miles and his infantry thirty-five "straight off," he surprised the Boer garrison and took most of them prisoners. General Clements, west of Pretoria, drove Delarey's commando to the north of the Megaliesberg on the 12th, and on Tuesday he had a skirmish with a party near Heckspoort. General W. Knox, commanding at Kroonstad, came across some of the retreating Boers at Kiompje Doorns. General Barton has been clearing the country round Krugersdorp; General Bradley has been similarly employed near Heidelberg; and General Hunter has been preparing a concerted movement against the commando reported to be near Mequatling's Nek. General Macdonald has not been idle, having had a smart affair with a party of Boers who made a raid recently on the line near Brandfort. Moving from Winburg, Macdonald, on the morning of the 13th, attacked the enemy when crossing the Vet River near Tafel Kop, on the Winburg-Bloemfontein road, driving them northwards and capturing some prisoners with many waggons and much ammunition and general stores. In the south-east Transvaal General Hildyard, advancing towards Vryheid, has established a post at Droetvlei, sixteen miles south-east of Utrecht, where he met with very slight opposition. In the far west, a small British garrison holding Schweizer Reneke, not far from Vryburg, was recently surrounded and threatened with capture, but was relieved, and Buttfontein, in the west of the Orange River Colony, was attacked on Saturday by a very superior force, which was constantly repulsed until relief came from Brandfort. General Douglas also was fighting near Lichtenburg on the 12th, and made large captures. It will be apparent from the above record of general activity in many quarters, widely apart, that there is still much arduous work for the various generals commanding the columns engaged in crushing the marauding bands that infest the country.

"WHO SHALL DECIDE?"

FROM the point of view of the confiding British taxpayer, the correspondence between Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and Mr. St. John Brodrick is by no means pleasant reading. Mr. Brodrick, in a speech delivered at Bramley on August 29, brought serious charges against the Government of which Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman was War Minister during the years 1892-95. Mr. Brodrick's contention was that Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman was urged by his military advisers to increase the field artillery, but failed to do so. To that allegation Sir Henry gives a "flat denial." He refused nothing, he says, that the military authorities "deliberately requested," that being, as far as his "experience goes, the invariable course of a careful Administration." Sir Henry holds that there is "no more fertile source of waste, not only of money, but of efficiency, than bloated and ill-restrained expenditure," and he expresses his satisfaction that he fell short of Mr. Brodrick's standard in this respect. To this the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs replies that, while announcing to the House of Commons an increase of the artillery, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman "did not add a single gun to our supply, and, in fact, obtained the necessary guns by appropriating reserve guns from store which he did not replace." When he left office in 1895 we are told "there were only 286 field and horse guns altogether available. Large additions were made by Lord Lansdowne, and early this year 321 guns—apart from heavier artillery—had been already sent to South Africa, while an adequate reserve was available at home." And further, that "the Liberal Government unduly stinted the supply of military stores." Mr. Brodrick quotes figures from the "Appropriation Account" to give force to his argument.

As all are aware it was on the ammunition question that the Government in 1895 was removed from office. It was then explained, that though 146,000,000 rounds of small arms ammunition were necessary to equip our troops on mobilisation according to the authorised scale, the amount in store was 92,000,000 only—a deficiency of 37 per cent. To Sir Henry's credit, be it said, he does not attempt seriously to disprove the statements of the late Under-Secretary for War. The correspondence, however, goes a long way to prove how very undesirable it is for the nation to entrust the administration of its military affairs unreservedly in the hands of politicians without a check of any kind being put upon them by those who alone are capable of forming an independent judgment on the general situation. There is nothing easier than for a party in power to take credit to itself by showing economy. This is usually done by cutting down estimates, sacrificing efficiency, and depleting stores. The very party which has adopted these miserable tactics will not fail, perhaps, in opposition to take advantage of its own parsimony in order to prefer charges of extravagance against its successors, as we grieve to find Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman doing in his letter to the Times. As yet we have adopted no steps to guard ourselves against this scandalous system, which is lowering to our prestige as a nation, and ruinous to the efficiency of the Army.

A strong feeling is now asserting itself in favour of a strengthening of the hands of the Commander-in-Chief, who should be the real and responsible guardian of the public interests where questions affecting the well-being and efficiency of the Service under his orders are concerned. The remedy for most of the evils of administration, of which so much will be heard during the next few weeks on the hustings, is so easily to be found that we trust every effort will be made to bring about its speedy application. The first step of all should be the presentation annually of an independent report by the Commander-in-Chief setting forth the requirements of our military forces, and indicating the steps necessary to produce the general efficiency of the forces at large. The difference between Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and Mr. Brodrick must have had the effect of convincing everyone who is capable of taking an impartial view how desirable it is to modify the evils attendant upon government by party, so far as our national defences are concerned. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman asserts that in what he did when in office, as Minister for War, he had the full support and concurrence of his military advisers. But there is no document to which anyone could turn that we know of to ascertain how matters really stood at that time. There are not even minutes such as exist at the Admiralty. The nation has to take the War Minister's word for it, with a general election pending, and rely entirely upon the excellence of his memory.

We maintain that such a document as we speak of ought to exist, and in the absence of such report it is difficult to see how the affairs of the Army can be conducted on proper lines. What guarantee have the taxpayers that all is being done that it is desirable to do to guard the national interests under existing slipshod methods, which lend themselves to every conceivable irregularity? Would such a system be countenanced or tolerated in any business house in the world? We are told sometimes that the system of the War Office is responsible for everything that is wrong in the Army. Before, however, politicians make charges in this irresponsible manner, it is their duty to ask themselves whose fault it is that matters are as they would have us believe them to be. What check have they ever sought to put on the Minister for War, the official beyond all others who ought to be controlled so long as party government is run on the lines that it is now? What actual power has the Commander-in-Chief over the affairs of the Army? As we say, the hustings will shortly ring with denunciations of the War Office. The poor War Office! We wonder how many candidates for Parliamentary honours will approach the matter on practical lines, and show where the blame really rests. Few, if any. It will be now as it has been so many times before—party before everything, with a dash of "War Office abuses" thrown in to relieve the monotony of the proceedings.

CONSIDERABLE progress has now been made with the fortifications on the north and south sides of the Firth of Forth, and on Inchgarvie, the island lying midway between. The works are assuming large dimensions. The chief are at Carlingnose, North Queensferry, and occupy a commanding position 90ft. above the level of the sea. One of the batteries there is almost finished, and the construction of the others is being rapidly pushed forward. Two 6in. guns for the forts have arrived at Leith.

Army Notes.

Already rumours fill the air with regard to the honours and rewards for the officers brought to notice during the war in South Africa. We are assured that up to the present time only the fringe of the subject has been touched, and that although, as we have already announced, it has been decided to issue a war medal of new design, with a fresh ribbon, the preparation of the list of promotions and other forms of recognition has been deferred pending the arrival of Lord Roberts in England, when the services of all officers who have come directly under the notice of general officers in responsible command will require to be carefully gone into, with a view, in the first place, to selections being made for promotion in and appointment to the Order of the Bath. Unfortunately, the establishment of that "most honourable order" is at present somewhat crowded, and it is likely that difficulty may be experienced in providing for all who are held to possess a claim to be included in its muster roll. The appointments to the Distinguished Service Order will be numerous, and the principle of the Brevet will be made use of extensively to meet the more pressing demands for acknowledgment of exceptional merit so far as staff and regimental officers are concerned. We are informed that beyond the above general outline, nothing can be said for the moment, as the actual decision on many points which have to be settled will probably rest with the new Minister for War, in consultation with the Field-Marshal commanding the forces in South Africa, when the time arrives for them to go into the matter with the full despatches and complete lists of recommendations before them to guide them in their judgment and influence any course of action which it may then be deemed necessary to take in order to place the distribution on a fair basis, having respect to the importance of the services rendered, the strength of the forces in the field, and the proportion of honours to numbers in previous campaigns.

We make the above statement on the highest authority, and in doing so cannot but express a hope that officers and their friends will exercise patience, in full assurance that her Majesty's Government recognises most readily and thoroughly the gallantry and devotion of all ranks of the Army during twelve months' severe campaigning, and that the principal actors in the drama of war will in no way suffer by any change in the political situation which the next few weeks may bring about. Lord Lansdowne would desire to have some of the first details arranged before leaving office, but many difficulties present themselves, and in any case the full list could not be completed. In all the circumstances it is in the interests of the Service, we feel convinced, that the Army should await the outcome of events, as the absence of Lord Roberts, who is still in the field, is not favourable to the prospect of an immediate distribution, on any solid grounds, of justice to the large number of officers whose interests are so directly affected. As experience has shown more than once, a hastily prepared Honours Gazette is fruitful in disappointments unless it is divided into a series, as was the case in the Crimea. The field of operations in South Africa has been exceptionally extensive. It is held, therefore, to be imperative that time should be allowed for full and complete data to be at hand before the duty of weighing individual claims can be embarked upon, simply as a safeguard against injustice.

The collapse of the Boers is more complete than the most optimistic could have imagined a month ago. Now that the war is drawing to an end, it becomes clear that the Orange Free State has offered the most formidable resistance, and it was here, and in British colonies, that the Boers scored their most brilliant successes. The irreconcilables, as everyone supposed the Transvaalers to be, have simply retreated on every occasion before Lord Roberts, until they are now on the frontier of a neutral State, and can retreat no further without exposing themselves to attack from another foe. Whatever sympathy we may have for the enemy must be reserved for the burghers who have allowed themselves to be deluded. As long as the mystery of the guns is still unsolved, however, even the simple farmer must be regarded with suspicion. Where are the "Long Toms" which played such an important part during the earlier stages of the campaign? Utterly demoralised as he now is, the burgher is as clever at carrying off his heavy artillery as he was six months ago. Only that we know Krupp and Crenset guns were directed against Ladysmith, Kimberley, and Mafeking, it might be supposed that they were no more real than the Boer resistance at Pretoria. That they are buried, with stores of ammunition and rifles, is more than likely, and, while their whereabouts remains a mystery there can be no real peace in the Transvaal. One of the conditions of the return of the 15,000 Boers in our hands should be the production of the buried artillery. The ground sown with dragon's teeth is sure, sooner or later, to produce a terrible crop. Up to the present our captures of artillery have been relatively small. Hence, until accurate account of every big gun is given, it will be impossible to regard the surrender of the Boers as anything but conditional.

The Chinese puzzle shows no sign of straightening out. Sir Robert Hart is a better judge of the situation, from the European point of view, than a Chinese Viceroy, and he warns the Powers that hostilities are about to be resumed. The truth is the action of Russia has given the Empress and her Ministers an opportunity of which they are too astute not to avail themselves. Division in the Concert is as strong a weapon in the hands of Far Eastern Orientals as it is in those of European diplomats. That Russia meant to profit by the situation is obvious; that the allies generally refused to rise to the bait she so temptingly held out is a happy sign that a working alliance may yet be formed. The demand of Germany for reparation is quite reasonable, but how is it to be enforced? Up to the present little or no progress has been made towards securing a competent authority with whom to negotiate, and if hostilities are resumed the difficulty will assume greater proportions than ever. Russia, we fear, who was supposed to be the Great Power in the Far East, has not lived up to her reputation. In order to despatch her contingent, Germany is obliged to dislocate her mercantile marine. Great Britain is still engaged in South Africa. How, then, is China to be coerced? No European Power is capable of attempting it with advantage to herself, and no one will undertake it to drain her resources without the slightest prospect of return. The only Power which has, so far, profited by the situation is Japan, and she will profit yet more in the future. It is just possible that by maintaining an armed force in Peking the Allies may tire out Chinese patience, and adequate compensation for the late outrages may be given. In any case Great Britain has lost less prestige by the situation than Russia. The only policy for this country is that which has been maintained. Whether or not we are suffering for previous mistakes is another story.

Matters in Ashanti are now settling down, thanks to Sir James Willcocks' vigorous action since he took the field. The episode of 1900 is one which cannot fail to add lustre to the British arms. Bad as the management of affairs was previous to the arrival of Colonel Willcocks and his expedition subsequent events have shown once more how bravely and well black troops will fight, even in the trying climate of the "West Coast" when led by British officers on whom they can rely. With the political aspect of the Ashanti difficulty we have nothing to do; that is a detail which may well be left to be discussed between the Colonial Office and Sir Frederic Hodgson. So far as the officers in military command are concerned it would be impossible to write in terms too complimentary, for under the masterly leadership of Sir James Willcocks, they have done wonders, and this at a season of the year when the climate of the coast is most unhealthy for Europeans. What makes Colonel Willcocks' achievement the more praiseworthy is the fact that he has been suffering considerably from fever throughout the operations, and has at times found it difficult to move about; but undeterred by physical weakness he has never ceased to exercise direct control over all that has gone on around him. Beloved by those under his command he has carried his little force to victory in face of everything, and the whole army may congratulate itself upon the prestige which has come to it through the gallantry and ability of Colonel Willcocks, Lieut.-Colonel Burroughs, and the officers and men generally of our latest Kumasi relief force.

The magnificent defence of Ladysmith, Kimberley, and Mafeking, touched the imagination of the Empire so deeply that the heroism displayed at Peking and Kumasi have passed almost unnoticed. Yet it may be doubted if British endurance has ever shown to greater advantage than in the fort, far away in malaria-haunted Ashanti. Captain Bishop had to contend with a foe far inferior indeed to the Boer, but he had only two white companions with him, the rest of the garrison being natives. For the horrors created by a pestilential climate the siege of Kumasi stands unenviably alone in the sieges of the year, and the sufferings borne by its defenders and relievers dwarf even the sufferings of the Legations at Peking. When Sir Frederic Hodgson took his departure only 115 Hausas were left, and of these not more than twenty-five were fit. "They could hold the fort and that was all." Simple words, but infinitely suggestive of pluck, resource, and devotion. "A third of the garrison died from sheer starvation, and when the relief column arrived the survivors were too weak to fire their carbines." The most horrible feature of the siege was the stench arising from the decaying bodies in the huts and shelters, built under the walls of the post by the friendlies, traders, and coast people, who went with the Governor's column. For six days, owing to the tropical rains, Captain Bishop was unable to burn the dead. Before this was done, however, he visited each one with Lieut. Ralph, in case anyone should be alive, a piece of heroic humanity which required the highest courage. When three shillings were paid for half a biscuit some idea of the straits to which the garrison was reduced may be imagined. That, in such circumstances, the discipline of the Hausas never wavered, even to frame a complaint, is a tribute to the British officer more eloquent than words. Indeed, the whole story of the defence of Kumasi would be on every tongue only for military happenings involving greater issues elsewhere. Captain Bishop has brought infinite credit on the whole Militia Service to which he belongs.

It is most satisfactory to find the lessons of the war are already, in so many instances, being taken to heart at headquarters and the reforms shown to be necessary frankly adopted. In the matter of musketry a most important new departure has been taken. It will be impossible in the future to say—as has so often been stated with truth in the past—that the reason why the shooting of the rank and file is so inferior is that the majority of officers are themselves unable to shoot with the rifle, and consequently take no interest in the training of their men. On and after January 1 next all officers gazetted to the cavalry and infantry will be required to obtain the "Officers' extra certificate of musketry" before promotion to the rank of lieutenant. Moreover, with the exception of those who are candidates for the Indian Staff Corps, all gentlemen cadets on leaving the Royal Military College at Sandhurst will, on being gazetted, proceed to the School of Musketry, Hythe, or to such other school of musketry as may be prescribed, to attend a course of instruction before joining their units. Those who fail to obtain the certificate will be required to attend a subsequent course, as opportunity offers, and, except in the case of those whose failure has been owing to sickness or other special cause duly certified by the Commandant of the School, at their own expense. Officers appointed to the Militia on or after January 1 next, who may become candidates for commissions in the cavalry or infantry, will not be eligible to attend the Militia Competitive Examination, or to be selected for direct commissions, unless they have attended a course at Hythe, and obtained the "Officers' extra certificate of musketry." There will be a course at Hythe for gentlemen cadets from January 8 till February 20 next.

We understand that in the case of officers invalided home from South Africa lodging allowance will be allowed to be drawn for a period of two or three months after arrival in this country, even though those concerned may be residing in their own homes away from any military centre. Also that something of the same kind will be allowed in the case of the wives and families of officers who are invalided home and are retained in military hospitals on arrival. The cases in question are, of course, exceptional, and it is only fair that an officer still unable to perform his duties on account of the effect of wounds received in the service of his country should feel that he will be no worse off in pocket than while in the regular performance of his ordinary military duty.

The question of quick-firing guns is naturally occasioning much notice just now. It is of such importance that the views of an officer who served with the artillery throughout the siege of Ladysmith are most opportune and valuable. Captain C. Holmes Wilson, R.F.A., in the United Service Magazine, devotes eight pages to the consideration of the subject. His paper is one which all artillery officers will, of course, make a point of reading, but there are many in the Army and out of it into whose hands the magazine will not fall, and who may yet desire information, being more or less ignorant as to the professional aspect of the problem involved, which is engaging the close attention of all leading artillerymen in our own and foreign armies. To summarise Captain Wilson's argument for the benefit of the uninitiated:—

"There are a few technical questions connected with the so-called quick-firing guns that require further explanation. Rapidity of fire can be secured in a field gun by more means than one. That to which the greatest efforts of manufacturers have been directed of late has been the recoil. If the recoil could be checked, a quick-firing field gun could be produced. At present different devices are employed with varying success, but none have as yet led to a rigid mounting being obtained. Besides the carriages there are, however, other points connected with the gun that tend to increase the rapidity of its fire and necessitate attention. If a gun is to fire quickly there are two important factors that must be provided for in the gun itself. It must (1) be rapidly laid and (2) easily fired. Our 15-pr. carriage, like the carriages of most modern field artillery, has been fitted with a contrivance to check the recoil; the gun, however, has not been touched, and, consequently, loses proportionately in rapidity of fire and power. As regards (1), improved sights (the present sight of the 15pr. field gun has to be removed before the gun is fired; this operation causes delay), are believed to be under consideration now. As far as (2) is concerned, there appears to have been a strong objection brought forward by some experts against the employment of metal cases for the charges of our field guns. When a metal case is used the gun can be fired by a percussion lock. At present three distinct motions have to be performed before the charge can be ignited, which all tend to cause delay. Now, the Boer field artillery used these metal cases, and in some cases their ammunition was fixed, that is, the charge in a metal cylinder was attached to the base of the shell. The result of the employment of these modern improvements was frequently self-evident; the guns could fire several shells in rapid succession; they could follow up moving targets; and could be employed separately. These were all important advantages.

Some there are who will have it that our troops did not suffer from the Boer artillery fire in Natal to the extent that has been represented. This may be the case, but the fault, if there was a fault, rested with the enemy's gunners, not with their guns. It will be found, we believe, when the matter comes eventually to be investigated, as it must be, that our guns were not the equals of those in the possession of the Boers. All artillery officers who have given us the benefit of their opinions, after experience in the field, say this unhesitatingly. And certainly the best known war correspondents hold this view. It is very annoying, of course, that we should find ourselves outmatched in these particulars by a body of Dutch farmers, but it must be recognised by all that in some respect Boer methods have been sounder and more practical than our own.

The work of Major Gibbons, 3rd Batn. East Yorkshire Regiment, and Captains Quicke, King's Dragoon Guards, and Stevenson-Hamilton, Inniskilling Dragoons, in the direction of exploration in Central Africa reflects credit not only on the officers themselves but on the profession to which they belong. Major Gibbons and his companions left England quietly, over two years ago and have explored Central Africa, covering in all about 13,000 miles. The party set off in different directions, so that the expedition might produce the best possible results. Major Gibbons has been able to make many corrections in what has hitherto been supposed to be the facts as to the geography of these regions. In particular, he has fixed definitely the source of the Zambesi at a point distant by a hundred miles from that where it had been placed by previous explorers. He saw much of hostile and even of cannibal natives, but, unlike some famous African travellers, he encountered little opposition. It is characteristic of the devotion of British officers that, when they heard in Central Africa of the war with the Boers, Captains Quicke and Stephenson-Hamilton at once repaired to the Cape in order to place their services at the disposal of the military authorities, and were both of them in time to take part in the relief of Mafeking. The value of the work done by these three officers it would be impossible to over-estimate, and it is fortunate that all have returned safely to give us the benefit of their experience. That none of them should have come into conflict with the native races speaks highly for their qualities as leaders, and clearly demonstrates the advantages of a military training for those whose aim it is to enter the department of exploration. It was the same with Captain Powell-Cotton, 3rd Batn. Northumberland Fusiliers, who has been rendering most useful service since last year in Abyssinia. He, too, came through the ordeal without any differences with the people among whom he found himself in touch. True he had the advantage of King Menelik's good offices; but explorers are not always regarded with favour, and when they are we may be sure they have possessed the qualities of tact and discretion.

The old "Battle of Dorking" played its part in many a controversy, and "The New Battle of Dorking," which is by an anonymous officer, is its worthy successor. The intention is admirable—to arouse us to some dangers that exist and to necessities that may lie before us. A vivid and well told story is that of the French raid, and the purpose is to draw attention to the present attitude of the French, and to the assumed fact that it is within their power to make such a raid as that described. The author insists that they could put 200,000 men afloat, and that they already possess adequate transport for at least 120,000 men in the northern ports of France. We do not suppose that the naval critics will be content with his description of the inability of the Navy to forbid the landing which is related. The struggle begins with a sudden raid of French torpedo boats upon Portsmouth harbour, where a vast amount of damage is done. Then it appears that the transports are already approaching our shores, and troops are soon landed at various points along the Sussex coast from Arundel to Rye. Immediate preparations are made, and a line of resistance is prepared from Wimbledon by Horden to Mitcham, and thence to Croydon, Beckenham, Southend, and Shooter's Hill, and defences are also laid out on the North Downs and elsewhere. By this time the French have reached the fork of the roads at Horsham, and the "battle of Chaldon Downs" begins in the neighbourhood of Holmwood. The fight is vigorously described, and the author evidently knows what he is talking about. The tide of battle rolls onward, and some 6in. guns and howitzers on Sydenham Hill play a great part in the operations, and Bromley, which by this time is in French hands, is shelled and destroyed. Presently the enemy are in Charlton and Blackheath, and there is much fighting on the south and east. Alarm prevails, with a great deal of panic; the bullion is moved from the Bank. Happily, we have other forces in the field, and a severe defeat is inflicted on the French at Dorking. The raid is at an end, but not the war. We have seen the foe within our gates, the country has risen en masse, and "disloyalists and little Englanders have been swamped in the rush of patriotic Imperialism." But the author of the book has a further purpose. He quotes on the cover a passage from the speech of Lord Salisbury to the Primrose League, to the effect that great Powers are paralysed or killed, not by disasters in outlying provinces, but by blows directed at the heart. Therefore, the new army which is to be embodied after this disastrous raid is to be fit for its ultimate task of fighting its way into Paris. "Though our fleets are still fighting those of France, that we must meet her again on land with our army is certain—unless a miracle takes place. We must face the fact and prepare to conquer her upon her own soil." Thus is the lesson of the "New Battle of Dorking" driven home. It is a new view that we need an army for aggressive purposes in France, and we do not suppose that many people go anything like so far as is suggested in these ingenious pages. The booklet is extremely interesting, and, in addition to being a military treatise, makes a capital story, both readable and exciting.

The French national organs, and among them our military contemporary, the Echo de l'Armée, are greatly exercised by the departure of Colonel Marchand to China. They are very anxious to represent the gallant officer as the victim of persecution on the part of the French Government, and the Echo draws glowing pictures of the honours that would have been showered upon "this Christopher Columbus of the African desert" if he had been an Englishman, a German, or a Russian. We read that History, while registering the bitterness and the humiliations to which Marchand was subjected, added that he was a Frenchman. When the colonel planted upon the banks of the Nile the flag which Bonaparte had carried to the Pyramids, he received the order from his Government to haul it down, and, according to the Echo, he wept accusing tears which have not been pardoned. The last insult, says this organ, which the French Government has heaped upon the head of Marchand has been his appointment to the International Commission in China, with the hope that he may share the fate of Admiral Courbet. Perversion of reason could scarcely go further.

Lloyds' Patriotic Fund is an admirable charity, administered by those who know well how to use money to best advantage. The annual report of the fund has been published, and gives full details of the special amounts handed over for the purposes of the war grants from the commencement of operations in October to the end of the third week in August. In that period the amounts paid in, either from the Mansion House Fund or by individual subscriptions, reached the sum of £115,332, of which £106,000 came from the Lord Mayor and £9,332 from other sources. Of the former £104,959 has already been handed over. The following grants have been made:—To the Colonies, £10,200; to disabled men in the United Kingdom by direct grants, £2,570; to provide great-coats for disabled men on discharge from Netley, £238; to provide invalid chairs for disabled men in York Hospital, £8; total £13,016. The number of men assisted by direct grants up to August 21 was 489, a fair proportion of whom have thereby been enabled to start in some business or occupation by which they will be able to maintain themselves permanently. The trustees point out that, according to the official return published on August 15, the number of invalids sent home up to that date was 26,000, of whom, it is estimated by the hospital authorities, about 25 per cent., or 6,500 will eventually be discharged from the Service and will apply for assistance to Lloyds' Patriotic Fund. These figures—which will be largely increased—do not include the disabled men of the Colonial Forces who have remained in South Africa, or those who have been sent back direct to their own Colonies. With the funds now at their disposal it will be quite impossible for the trustees to make more than a small grant for the benefit of each man, and no permanent allowance as an addition to Government pension can be considered. The trustees therefore appeal for additional funds. Fresh subscriptions, we trust, will be forthcoming, for the administration of Lloyds' Fund is excellent, and the charitable can have no doubts as to the care with which any money in the hands of its executive is distributed for the benefit of those for whom it is paid in.

THE YEOMANRY AND ITS FUTURE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The Yeomanry has from time to time been proclaimed, by more than one authority of high standing, to be a defunct force, the time for the existence of which had now passed. With this opinion I must humbly state that my experience leads me to differ, and I think the present war supports me in such. The Yeomanry, without doubt, had, and has, many points which require drastic though careful treatment to render it a really practical component part of the fighting strength of the Empire. But I have always thought and maintained since I severed my connection with the Yeomanry that it was still a most valuable nucleus or cadre on which to form or enlarge a most valuable force of mounted men, ready to act anywhere; and the present crisis has proved this to be a possibility. Granting such to be the case, surely this in itself should be a sufficient reason to ensure the permanent existence of the force, without even taking into consideration the fact of which every Yeoman and the public at large are proud, viz., the prompt manner in which the force responded to the call to arms, their soldierlike bearing, coolness under fire, and the good fighting qualities that have proved them to be such an important addition to the mounted forces operating in South Africa at a time when mobile mounted infantry were so sorely needed.

There is no doubt that the exigencies of the moment demanded the formation of a mounted rifle-armed force, and the authorities wisely decided to alter the arming of the Yeomanry for the war. But, on the return of the force, it is to be hoped that the authorities will as wisely transfer the Yeomen back to their former state, and re-arm them with sword and carbine. It is comparatively easy to turn cavalry-trained men, of the type of thinking men from which the average Yeoman is recruited, into excellent mounted infantry; yet it is a very different thing, if cavalry were required, to transform men, trained as mounted infantry, with the same facility and at short notice into even moderately good cavalry. Besides, other points must be taken into consideration, for with a force recruited under such conditions esprit de corps and recruiting, both most important matters, would be seriously interfered with. These considerations may not appeal with such force to those unacquainted with the sensitive intricacies of Yeomanry recruiting, though they will, I am sure, be apparent to all who have come into immediate contact with the Yeomanry, their interior organisation, and feelings.

Every Yeoman considers himself a cavalry soldier, and is proud of it. Therefore leave well alone. The first move towards the improvement of the force has most wisely been made. Nothing will conduce more to its practical utility than a more extended training, and that under canvas, where the members are under more soldierlike control and discipline. Under the old regime six days' hard work was considered sufficient in which to compress all the knowledge necessary to make a useful cavalry soldier. After the excitement of the war is over and the Yeomanry has returned, it will be necessary to do something to strengthen and ensure the efficiency of the Yeomanry. If some form of the Ballot Act were enforced, by which all able bodied males between the ages of 20 and 45 were made liable for service in the Army, Militia, Yeomanry, or Volunteers, then there would be no difficulty in getting the pick of the very best material for the Yeomanry, men of education who possessed horses and wished to be trained as cavalry. At the conclusion of the war, when many reforms will be occupying the minds of all responsible for and interested in the Army one point must not be lost sight of—that unaccountable regulation by which cavalry officers retired under certain conditions are compelled to serve for 10 years in the Militia. They should, if they wish, be allowed to serve with Yeomanry.

I must, as I have done before, return to the attack on this subject. Why lose all this good material? How valuable such men with their experience and knowledge would be to the Yeomanry. In order not to force unnecessarily the hands of commanding officers, application might be made as to whether they were willing to accept the services of certain officers. Each regiment might be allowed to have two officers posted as supernumerary and drawing Yeomanry pay of the rank (or one rank higher, up to that of Major) with which they left the Army until such time as they were absorbed. One per brigade would always be available and most valuable as Assistant Adjutant, and still by Yeomanry Regulations be supernumerary. For the better officering of the Auxiliary Forces every officer leaving the Regulars and medically fit of the rank of Major or under should be liable for service in the Militia, Yeomanry or Volunteers. It is to be sincerely hoped the Service members in the House will not lose sight of these and many other points bearing on the welfare of the Yeomanry in the future.

Army Personal.

The Queen inspected, at Balmoral, on Wednesday, a detachment of the West African Frontier Force, under the command of Captain A. B. Molesworth, West India Regiment. The contingent, consisting of sixteen Madras Sappers and Miners and six Yoruba Engineers, left Aberdeen by the Deeside train at five minutes after eight o'clock, and reached Ballater about ten o'clock. The party was received by Major McRae-Gilstrap, 3rd Batn. Black Watch, of the Queen's Guard, and the proceedings at the Castle were of brief duration. The troops were drawn up on the lawn, and when Her Majesty appeared a royal salute was given. The Queen made a close inspection of the ranks, the men being afterwards put through some evolutions, and then marched past the royal carriage in single file. After the inspection the Queen, addressing the men, said: "I am very pleased to see you here. I am very proud of my Indian Army, and watch with the greatest interest the excellent work they have been doing, not only in Africa, but also in China." The speech was repeated by Captain Molesworth to the English-speaking sergeants, who interpreted it to their men. We are indebted to the Daily Telegraph for some additional details of the ceremony:—

"Her Majesty's official inspection did not conclude the Queen's interest in her coloured guests. After they had been dismissed for dinner her Majesty herself came personally to see the tents in which they were to be entertained. Exchanging the landau for a more convenient donkey carriage, the Queen came down by the bakehouse, near which, on a grassy plot, the temporary erections had been put, three in number—one for the seven caste Indians, one for the nine non-caste, and a third for the Yorubas. As an instance of the forethought and consideration of the Queen, several days ago a request was sent to the military authorities that they would learn from the men themselves the description of food they would prefer. When the venerable Sovereign thus all unexpectedly appeared on the scene the men at once stood at attention. Walking alongside of the carriage were Prince Henry of Prussia on the right, the Princess Henry of Prussia and Princess Margaret of Connaught on the left. Sending for Col. Davidson, who had been most attentive to the visitors, the Queen expressed a desire to see the English-speaking sergeants of the two sections, whereupon, with a beaming face and sprightly gait, Sergt. Munisami, an Indian sapper, stepped forward, and, saluting, had the honour of a brief conversation with his Sovereign. In answer to one of her Majesty's questions, the sergeant had to admit that he found Scotland a little cold; and, replying to other queries, he informed the Queen that he had been nearly eighteen years in her military service, and had medals for Burma, the Soudan (two), and Tirah. The next to be called up was Sergeant Ahbadhu, a Yoruba, and to him, likewise, the Queen addressed a few words. Capt. Molesworth had also the honour of a brief conversation; and then her Majesty passed on for her usual morning drive, and the men stood to attention again, while she bowed to them her farewell. The soldiers returned to Ballater as they came, Col. Davidson seeing them off, and as they left the grounds they raised aloft their rifles, and gave a cheer for the Queen. At Ballater they had tea in barracks, and returned to Aberdeen at 4.5 p.m."

Thursday was the forty-sixth anniversary of the battle of Alma, when among the survivors on the active list were Field-Marshal the Duke of Cambridge, Sir Frederick Haines, and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar; Generals Sir Robert Biddulph, G.C.B., R.A., and J. H. Dunne; and Lieut.-General Sir William Stirling, R.A. To the list of officers in employment must be added Colonel G. G. Gordon, C.B., formerly of the Scots Guards and 3rd Batn. Royal Scots, and now commanding the 2nd Batn. Royal Scottish Reserve Regiment. It would be difficult to give anything like a complete list of survivors who have retired, so many having sold out and been lost sight of, but among those who have passed on to the "fixed establishment" are:—Generals Sir Collingwood Dickson, V.C., R.A.; Sir Julius Raines, Sir William Cameron, Sir John Ross, Sir Richard Taylor, Sir Mark Walker, V.C., Sir John Ewart, Sir Hugh Rowlands, V.C., Sir George Higginson, Sir Charles Daubeney, Sir Reginald Gipps, Sir Richard Farren, Hon. R. Rollo, W. H. Seymour, C.B., A. Low, C.B., F. R. Elrington, C.B., and W. H. Bradford; Lieut.-Generals Hon. S. J. G. Calthorpe, Sir Roger Palmer, Bart., Sir Robert White, Sir Edwin Markham, R.A., Sir Edward Newdigate, Sir William Bellairs, Sir Robert Hume, Hon. J. J. Bourke, F. W. Traill-Burroughs, C.B., W. Roberts, C.B., V. H. Bowles, H. Kent, C.B., E. Chippindall, C.B., W. H. R. de Horsey, C. B. Ewart, C.B., R.E., S. M. Wiseman-Clarke, C.B., H. J. Buchanan, C.B., T. H. Pakenham, A. McI. Macdonald, and F. G. Wilkinson; Major-Generals Sir Henry Alderson, R.A., F. Hardy, C.B., W. Mussenden, Hon. C. J. Addington, W. Allan, and H. B. Feilden.

A tribute is paid to Lord Roberts and to the British people by the Neues Wiener Tagblatt, in an article on the field-marshal's recent proclamation. "There has never been a victorious general less addicted to boasting," says the Vienna paper, "He has never concealed unwelcome truths and never exaggerated success. He has made the impression upon all who followed his career, and more particularly on soldiers, upon which ever side their sympathies might be, of having invariably told the unvarnished truth. His generalship has been of the highest order. Before he arrived everything went wrong. Since he took the field the British have scored a succession of victories. The critics of Europe have been quite silent, for it has been recognised that Lord Roberts knows his business as well as the best of them." And the paper goes on to say, "It is an estimable English tradition, to bow before greatness even in defeat, and wherever it is to be found." Our foreign contemporary points out further that we generously acknowledged the great qualities of the late Boer General Joubert, though his death occurred at a moment when we were smarting under the humiliation which he had inflicted upon us in the battlefield. It concludes that the proclamation of the British General, whose statements with regard to the situation have invariably proved accurate, "will be unreservedly credited by the whole world." "The British through Lord Roberts have," it is said, "undoubtedly added greatly to their reputation as a people by their action throughout this war. This must be the verdict of all sober-minded people."

General Sir A. G. Montgomery-Moore, on vacating command of the Aldershot District on Saturday, issued a farewell order, in which he thanked his staff, the generals commanding brigades, the heads of departments, and officers commanding corps, for the support they had given him during his command. He particularly acknowledged the work of officers commanding Militia battalions, which had been attended with excellent results. The great number of troops despatched from Aldershot to South Africa was sufficient to show, he said, the labour entailed on the staff and departments. In addition, a large number of sick and wounded had been received, which had heavily taxed the resources of the medical department, and which they had efficiently dealt with. He wished to dwell on the ability and zeal of all who had worked under him during the onerous and anxious months in the early part of the year, and he felt sensible of, and grateful for, the loyal efforts of the staff and departments in difficulties which had been truly described as enormous. That things held together at all at that time and subsequently under great pressure was due in the main to the regimental system, which, he trusted, would always be maintained, whatever the future had in store. He was satisfied that all ranks would continue to discharge their important duties as they had done in the past, in spite of some discouragement, and he bade them good-bye.

A Militia officer, who certainly deserves to have his say, writes to us from Aldershot:—

"Gen. Sir A. G. Montgomery-Moore has left us after holding his command here for nine months. I express, I know, the feelings of all who have been associated with him when I say that he carries into retirement their best wishes for his future. After the absurd action adopted by the Press recently in regard to the work of the 'Division' at this station, and the cruel and unmanly attacks on Gen. Montgomery-Moore himself, his brigadiers, and staff officers, he, like the chivalrous gentleman and good soldier that he is, was left no alternative but to hand over on the earliest opportunity the duties of an appointment which has entailed the greatest strain on him. I can write the more freely as I do not happen to be a personal friend of the worthy general's, whom I never met until I arrived here with my battalion on embodiment. I can only say that, so far as the Militia is concerned, every officer is thoroughly disheartened. It is no easy thing to get a battalion into complete working order on embodiment, more particularly when orders are continually arriving from the Headquarters of the Army taking away one's best officers, non-commissioned officers, and men for duties elsewhere. This has been the case with my battalion since it came up for duty. My whole time has been devoted to arranging for the carrying out of the orders from Army Headquarters. But for the proverbial courtesy and helpfulness of the general and his staff it would have been impossible to have run the show at all. We all feel this; we all recognise the great obligations which Gen. Montgomery-Moore has placed us under, and all will remember when the disbandment comes that he and his staff, heavily worked as they have been, and badgered to death by constant and irritating orders, did their utmost to make matters run smoothly until a number of hysterical Press writers sought to inflict injury on the War Office by the most unjust onslaughts on unoffending officers that, I venture to say, ever were penned. General Montgomery-Moore has refused to be party to the proceeding. Hence his retirement."

General Sir William Olpherts, V.C., R.A., will preside at the Lucknow dinner on Tuesday evening next at the Hôtel Métropole.

General H. Le Cotq has been selected for appointment as Colonel Commandant, R.A., vice General A. A. Bayly (late Bombay), deceased.

Lieut.-General Sir Frederick FitzWygram, Bart, Colonel of the 15th Hussars, and Major-General Frank Russell, C.M.G., Colonel of the 1st Royal Dragoons, who have rendered such valuable services to the Army, will, we regret to say, not seek re-election to the new Parliament. It was said that Major-General Goldsworthy would not stand again, but this rumour has happily no foundation, and the popular general will be found in his place again, as, in view of his decision, there is to be no contest in Hamersmith, no one caring to oppose "the kindest man in the House."

Lieut.-General Sir William Butler's appointment to the command of the troops at Aldershot is only temporary pending the return of General Sir Redvers Buller to England.

Lieut.-General Sir Leslie Rundle, it is stated, is to return to England from South Africa to succeed Sir William Butler in command of the Western District. This appointment was never even contemplated, we are assured, and on no circumstance is the rumour likely to be confirmed.

Major-General H. A. Bushman, C.B., who served in the North-West Frontier Expedition 1863; in the Zulu War, 1879; in the Afghan War, 1879-80; and commanded the 9th Lancers in the Kabul-Kandahar march, has, as was expected, been appointed colonel of the regiment in place of the late Lieut.-General Sir William Drysdale.

He declared that the cutting down of the hospital transport under the order of January 29 was absolutely necessary in order to act quickly for the relief of Kimberley. Everything was cut down. The problem resolved itself into what could be carried with the number of mules available. The divisional transport, of which the figures were 1,666 mules and 416 oxen, were cut down to 964 mules. The idea was that up to Kimberley the field hospital and the ambulances could do the work, as, being near by, the sick and wounded might be sent to the base. Gen. Cronje's escape to Paardeberg altered the whole plans. The personnel of the field hospital was not cut down, and it worked well. He heard no complaints in Bloemfontein. The Commander-in-Chief gave orders for everything that was necessary to be obtained. Lord Kitchener deprecated placing the transport altogether under the charge of field hospitals, and confirmed Lord Roberts's evidence with regard to the supplies brought into Bloemfontein while the force was there. In all 1,680 tons of medical stores were brought up—all that was possible under the conditions then existing. The activity of the enemy necessitated the troops being sent out, and the field hospitals had to be emptied to accompany them, causing overcrowding. On the advance from Bloemfontein the field hospitals and ambulances were brought up to their full strength. He had never heard of men having fallen out on the road with no one left to attend to them. Only two complaints were made in Bloemfontein, and both of these were about men being brought in at night and not accommodated in hospitals till the morning. Although he saw Mr. Burdett-Coutts frequently, Mr. Burdett-Coutts never made any complaints. If he had done so matters would have been investigated at once. The medical service worked hard and well during the campaign.

Major-General Sir Henry Colville will resume his duties in command of the Infantry Brigade at Gibraltar on the 1st prox.

Major-General Sir William Meiklejohn, who has been on leave from India for some time past, will return next month to resume the duties of his 2nd Class District command.

Major-General F. W. Hemming, C.B., and the Cavalry Brigade at Aldershot came in for high praise on the occasion of General Sir A. G. Montgomery-Moore's final inspection on the 14th inst. The parade took place on Laffan's Plain, the 1st and 2nd Dragoon Guards and 7th Hussars being present. At the conclusion of the evolutions the general, addressing the officers, said he had never seen a better turned-out brigade, and congratulated all concerned on the high excellence the regiments had attained, for they rode well and sat well, and the horses were in splendid condition. The usefulness of cavalry was amply demonstrated in the present campaign, and in future they would require to be more generally employed. He was more than satisfied with what General Hemming had done to promote the efficiency of his comrades.

Major-General Sir Reginald Wingate left London on Thursday for Cairo, to resume his duties as Sirdar. It was stated lately from Egypt that the Sirdar would prolong his stay at home until November, but all occasion for an extension of leave was removed owing to the benefit he derived from the bracing air of Dunbar, where he has been staying during the last six weeks.

Brigadier-General A. R. Dorward, C.B., R.E., who has been in command at Tien-tsin, has proceeded to Peking. His successor is Colonel L. M. Campbell, I.S.C., who has taken over the duties with the rank of brigadier-general.

Brigadier-General F. D. Lugard, C.B., High Commissioner, Northern Nigeria, has, since his arrival from England, been doing his utmost to establish a settled government. Survey parties have been sent out under Lieut.-Colonels G. V. Kemball, R.A., A. W. G. Cole, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, T. L. N. Morland, King's Royal Rifles, and Captain (Lieut.) R. H. Monck-Mason, Royal Munster Fusiliers. All these officers are said to have done good work. Many healthy sites had been chosen for camping grounds, and altogether satisfactory progress had been made. Lieut.-Colonel Cole has been in command of a column of 200 men with 7prs. and Maxims, which has subdued a most troublesome tribe, the Kedari, pagans of a very low type, who had been a terror to the neighbouring chiefs. Colonel Cole's force was accompanied by Lieut.-Colonel Morland, Captain H. Bryan, Manchester Regiment, Lieuts. S. B. Dyer, 2nd Life Guards, G. H. F. Abadie, Royal Scots, and D. F. MacCarthy-Morrogh, 3rd Batn.

Royal Munster Fusiliers. The operations tried all ranks severely, as the country was almost impassable. Colonel Cole fully succeeded in his enterprise.

Colonel N. L. Walford, R.A., will command the Western District, with the temporary rank of major-general, during the time that Lieut.-General Sir William Butler is absent in command of the troops at Aldershot.

Colonel C. E. Beckett, C.B., who vacated the appointment of Deputy Director General of Ordnance at Headquarters to proceed to South Africa, was severely wounded at Talana Hill and afterwards a prisoner of war, has been selected for the appointment of A.Q.M.G. at the Horse Guards, vice Colonel R. Auld, who has succeeded Major-General A. G. Raper as A.Q.M.G. in charge of A.S.C. administration, &c.

Colonel W. M. Campbell and E. B. Standbridge, R.A., remain in their present positions as Inspector Generals on the reorganisation of the Indian Ordnance Department. Lieut.-Colonel J. L. Fiscott and Major K. S. Dunsterville revert to the position of Deputy Inspector Generals in consequence of the decision that in future there shall be two Inspector Generals only.

Colonel J. W. Wolfe-Murray, R.A., returns to India from the Cape to resume charge of the Intelligence Department.

After a long and trying illness, during which he bore up with soldierly fortitude, Lieut.-Colonel Cokayne-Frith succumbed on the 16th inst., at Canterbury, at which place it was that he met with the unfortunate accident which has robbed the service of one of the smartest, best, and most popular cavalry officers who ever did duty on the staff of the Cavalry Brigade at Aldershot. It was a great disappointment to him when he found that he could not get to the Cape. His abilities were more than recognised, but he could not be spared from his post as Officiating Commandant at the Cavalry Depot. Had he gone on active service he might have been coming home now full of honours, for one of his great merit could not have failed to have done well in any capacity.

The London Gazette publishes the despatches of Lieut.-Colonel (Brevet-Major) C. H. P. Carter, C.M.G., Royal Scots, Commandant Niger Coast Protectorate, dealing with the operations of the Central Division, and Benin Expedition of last year. In the former of these Captain R. E. P. Gabbett, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Protectorate Force, is brought to notice in very favourable terms, and in the latter Captain W. C. G. Heneker, Connaught Rangers, is highly commended. Of Captain Gabbett it is said that "he at all times showed great zeal and ability, which eventually effected the capture of the rebel chief Ologboshi." Sir R. Moore, in sending home the despatches, writes:—

"I am of opinion that the services of Major Carter are deserving of recognition, for the operations were carried out successfully with very little loss of life. . . . I would endorse the recommendation in the enclosed despatch with reference to Capt. Gabbett, who, after the hard work of the operations, was left in charge at Okemue, and effectually drove off the scattered followers of the rebel chiefs, and captured the chiefs Ologboshi and Abuhun. I also commend to favourable notice Capt. W. C. G. Heneker, Connaught Rangers, whose knowledge of the territories was invaluable, which, with the energy and zeal he displayed, contributed largely to the success. I also wish to specially mention the following officers:—District Commissioner Brevet-Major N. Burrows, South Wales Borderers; Assistant District Commissioner Major F. R. W. Sampson, 7th Batn. King's Royal Rifles; Local Auditor Lieut. J. P. Smartt, 2nd V.B. Hampshire Regiment. Had it not been for the volunteering of these officers, it would have been impossible to carry out the operations without co-operation or assistance from other forces, and I should therefore wish to bring forward their names as having displayed exceptional zeal in the public service in undertaking risks which the positions they held in the public service did not require of them to take."

But where, we may ask, are Colonel Carter's despatches dealing with the battle of Dompoussi Ashanti, on June 6 last, when the casualties were ninety-three—six out of eight officers being wounded? Are the documents resting in official pigeon-holes? It is so like our system of complicated routine if they are.

Lieut.-Colonel O. T. Duke, late of the 5th Batn. Rifle Brigade, and formerly of the Indian Medical Service, who was assistant agent to the Governor-General for Beluchistan during the Afghan War, 1878-80—mentioned in despatches (medal), will oppose Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman for Stirling Burghs.

Major Sir Claude McDonald, retired list, Highland Light Infantry, has been offered transfer to Tokio. Sir Claude's health has suffered considerably from the prolonged strain of Chinese affairs since 1896. Arrangements had been made in April last at his request for his transfer to Japan, which is a less exhausting appointment. The change was necessarily delayed by the siege of the Legations at Peking, but it is now held to be desirable, on medical grounds alone, that Sir Claude MacDonald should come away on leave, and Sir Ernest Satow has been instructed to undertake the care of the Peking Legation, if such shall still be the wish of Sir C. MacDonald.

Major H. S. Follett, Reserve of Officers, who has been serving in South Africa with the 7th Dragoon Guards, has been asked to contest the Northern Division of Norfolk in the Unionist cause.

Major E. St. C. Pemberton, R.E., has consented to contest the Cricklade Division of Wiltshire at the General Election in the Unionist interest.

Major the Hon. W. Lambton, 3rd Batn. Coldstream Guards, was asked, but declined, to put himself forward as Liberal candidate for the city of Durham at the forthcoming General Election.

Major R. Eccles, who is promoted this week to the command of the 2nd Batn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry, has got his step just in time, for on November 15 next he would have come under the terms of the age rule.

Major C. R. Oswald-Brown, retired list, late Manchester Regiment, who has been doing duty for some time with the Army Service Corps, has been appointed Governor of the Military Prison at Malta.

Major (Lieut.) A. S. Cobbe, I.S.C., and Major (Captain) A. J. Eden, Oxfordshire Light Infantry, have been doing useful work in command of columns sent out from Kumasi on the 13th inst. Both returned after a few days, having succeeded in quite restoring order.

Captain N. T. Borton, Royal Warwickshire Regiment, is officiating as Governor of the Province of Dongola, Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel A. de S. McKerrell, Cameron Highlanders, having just arrived home on leave.

Captain F. E. Bishop, 3rd Batn. Bedfordshire Regiment, and his companion Lieut. Ralph—the real heroes of the Kumasi siege—who were left behind to face what seemed to be almost certain death when Sir Frederick Hodgson and party took their departure, arrived at Plymouth on Saturday last, we are glad to say, in fairly good health. It would be impossible to speak too highly of these two officers, who deserve the fullest recognition for their splendid behaviour in circumstances of the greatest danger and anxiety.

Lieuts. W. H. Bingham, F. H. Bridges, 5th Gurkhas; H. E. Rudkin, 20th Bombay Infantry; and G. Hutchinson, 22nd Bombay Infantry, have been selected for service with the Hong Kong Regiment in China.

Army Foreign.

General Brugère, Chief of the French Army, entertained at luncheon at Chartres the various foreign officers who have been nominated by their respective Governments to follow the manoeuvres. General von Liarliarski, Commander of the 2nd Cavalry Corps, stationed at Warsaw, chief of the special Russian Mission, sat upon the right of the chairman. General Brugère, at the close of the repast, proposed the toast of the guests in these terms:—

"Gentlemen, I invite you to empty your glasses in honour of and to the health of the President of the French Republic, and also to the sovereigns and chiefs of States whose armies are here worthily represented. In raising my glass, my thought, as yours, certainly must turn towards the Far East, where the troops of the Great Powers have just fought side by side for the same cause—that of civilisation and humanity. They have given a further proof of the brotherhood of arms which unites the soldiers of different armies. Nothing brings men so closely together as dangers encountered in common. I, therefore, ask you to drink to the health of all our comrades who are in China, and who have so well borne on high the flags of our respective countries."

The toast was drunk with the greatest enthusiasm. General Liarliarski was called on to reply. He said, in the name of his colleagues and himself, he drank to the health of the President of the Republic, the Minister of War, the Chief of the French Army, the commanders of Army Corps, and the whole of the officers and men of the Army of France.

President Loubet was present at the grand review of the troops at Amilly on Thursday. He arrived at 9 a.m., accompanied by the Minister of War, and drove in a landau to the manoeuvre ground, where he was received by General Brugère. The admirable bearing of the troops called forth rounds of applause. At noon President Loubet drove to the Château of Mainvilliers, where he received a distinguished party at luncheon. Covers were laid for 234. The Minister of War thanked President Loubet for the great honour he had done to the Army and for the enlightenment and kindly interest which he extended to it. The Minister added:—"Our Army has rendered itself worthy of that interest by its sustained efforts, its zeal, its devotion, and its complete preparation for its glorious rôle." M. Loubet said:—

"I am glad to greet the foreign officers who have been present at our manoeuvres. I hope that they will take away with them a happy recollection of the reception accorded them, and that they will be able to inform their governments that they have found on the soil of France, like their comrades on the soil of China, the sympathetic and cordial sentiments of the French Army. It is with patriotic joy that I have come to-day to attend the review which terminates the manoeuvres of 1900, directed by Gen. Brugère, whose science, devotion and activity are known to the Army. They enable one to appreciate the progress accomplished during the last few years, and they have brought out the science of the chiefs and the admirable spirit of discipline and endurance of the troops of all arms. I am happy to raise my glass in honour of the French Army."

The toast was drunk with enthusiasm. General von Liarliarski, speaking on behalf of the foreign military representatives, said:—

"Allow me, in the name of my colleagues, to tell you how pleased we have been to be present at the brilliant manoeuvres of the French Army, and to be the recipients of the honour done to all of us, who are here as the representatives of foreign Powers, by our being admitted to applaud the progress of the French Army. I thank you, in the names of my colleagues, for the warm welcome, and all the attention bestowed on us. I propose the health of the President of the Republic. Vive la France! Vive l'Armée!"

All accounts agree as to the excellence of Thursday's performance. An officer who was present at the manoeuvres unofficially writes us:—"I shall carry away with me the pleasantest recollection. I have been treated by officers of all ranks with the utmost kindness and cordiality, and nowhere have I found any of that feeling against England which some would have us believe exists. As more than one officer has said to me, 'The gutters do not voice the feelings of France.' And I am convinced my friends were right."

The France Militaire is publishing a series of posthumous articles from the pen of the late General Tricoche. We find in one of them a remark that, upon whatever page of history the Frenchman casts his eyes, he encounters England, "tenacious and unsubdued in her jealous and cruel rivalry." The general remarked that this rivalry between a people of aristocratic merchants and one of chivalrous plebeians was one of the curiosities of the world. Many things had impressed him during his visits to England, and when he saw the Lord Mayor's Show, he wondered whether he should laugh or admire. But the general impression was that England was a happy nation—its heart impenetrable and its sporadic empire coveted but not attacked, its incomparable riches and its great patriotism giving it unparalleled strength and power. To enforce what he said, the general cited the futility of the Continental Blockade of Napoleon, whereby he sought to strike at our commercial vitality, but in the end was engrossed in Continental war and plunged into disastrous hostilities with Russia. General Tricoche was not, however, altogether an admirer of our race, for we find, in another article from his pen, the hope expressed that England will long continue to refuse to submit to the burden of obligatory service, since otherwise she would become a menace to her neighbours. Even this candid officer did not realise that any steps we take in that direction or any other would be purely defensive in their character.

The Progres Militaire states that the British War Office recently asked General Bassot, director of the Geographical Department at the French Ministry of War, if he could supply ten sets of the latest maps of China accessible in the Rue Saint Dominique. The general at once despatched sixty maps to London, and our French contemporary seems much gratified at the high value set upon French military cartography.

The thirtieth anniversary of Bredow's famous Todtenritt, on August 16, 1870, led to the publication of several interesting reminiscences of that famous day. The most interesting of these was found in an article in the Militär-Wochenblatt by Major Kolckreuth, who, as a lieutenant, was orderly staff officer to General von Buddenbrock, commanding the 6th Infantry Division, and who asserts that the order to charge was given by General von Rheinbaben. The critical situation of the left wing of the division occupying the Tronville copse, was apparent shortly after noon, and it was seen that the French were continually receiving reinforcements. An officer of General von Buddenbrock's staff was, therefore, sent to explain the danger to General von Alvensleben, who had no infantry available, but said he would set his cavalry in motion, and at half-past two General von Bredow trotted past at the head of the 7th Cuirassiers and the 16th Uhlans, skirting the wood on the east by the Mars-la-Tour and Vionville road. When Buddenbrock saw the cavalry, he thought that the situation had changed, and instructed Lieut. Kolckreuth to gallop after Bredow telling him the charge was unnecessary, but Bredow replied, "I have orders from General von Rheinbaben to charge, and I shall charge." Thus the famous "death ride" began, and Kolckreuth charged with the brigade. At the head of a party of Uhlans he captured a gun, but was compelled to abandon it by the approach of the French cavalry. His troopers to the number of twenty or thirty attempted to escape at the gallop, but his horse was shot under him, and, being himself wounded, he was captured and sent to Metz, where he was treated with great courtesy and kindness.

The Militär-Wochenblatt estimates that the united strength of the Allied forces in China in the middle of August was 40,500 men with 162 guns, to which the French would add 4,000 men and fourteen guns by the end of the month. The German expeditionary corps, under command of General von Lessel, consisting of eight battalions, three squadrons, and six batteries, constituting a force of 11,300 men with thirty-four guns, was to land in the middle of September, as well as the French brigade under General Voyron, being about 10,000 men with twenty guns, and the Russian 4th Brigade, comprising 8,700 men with twenty-four guns, whose embarkation began at Odessa on July 25. In all, by the end of September, our Berlin contemporary says, that about 78,000 men and 280 guns will be in Chihli, though it is not fully informed as to the movements of our troops. In regard to the situation in Manchuria the Wochenblatt says that Russia could concentrate troops from five points—Port Arthur, Vladivostok, Khabarovsk, Blagovestchensk, and Nertchinsk—and thus could dispose of 37,000 men with 104 guns at any point on the Mukden, Charbin, Tsitsikhar, and Chailar line. In addition, already in motion, are 16,000 men in the Ussuri district, 5,600 in Transbaikalia, 40,000 in the Siberian military district, 9,000 men in Semiratche, and 35,000 men four rifle brigades in European Russia, making in all 105,000 men with 138 guns. One of the last-named rifle brigades was despatched overland in July, and the others are being transported by sea. The grand total of forces in the field by the end of September, according to the Wochenblatt's estimate, will be 230,000 men with 500 guns.

Simultaneously with the introduction into the German Army of the rifle Model 1898 the military administration is causing experiments to be made with 6-millimetre bore rifles. Eight companies selected from the Guards, Jägers, and two line regiments are being armed with these small bore rifles, but it does not appear to be believed that the experiment will lead to satisfactory results.

Duke Albrecht, of Wurtemberg, who commanded the 4th Horse Guards for two years, left Potsdam on Saturday last for Stuttgart, to take over command of the 1st Wurtemberg Brigade.

While Prince Albert of Saxony was returning on Sunday from Pillnitz to the Army field quarters at Wolkan, he was thrown out of his carriage owing to the horses having bolted. His Royal Highness died in ten minutes. Prince Albert was the youngest son of Prince George of Saxony, brother of King Albert of Saxony, and was born on February 25, 1875. He was a captain in the 1st Regiment of Saxon Uhlans.

General Lazareff, of the Russian General Staff, recently published an article in the Russki Invalid upon the Chinese Army, which contains a number of interesting facts and deductions. He says that the seizures of Kiao-chau, Port Arthur, and Wei-hai-wei, together with the many railway and other concessions wrung from China by the European Powers, compelled the Chinese Government to consider the situation, with the result that the weakness of the Celestial forces was fully recognised. Orders were thereupon sent to the various Viceroyalties tending to military reform, but it was only in the province of Chihli that the materials for the creation of a real army existed. The work of organisation was undertaken by Yun-lu, the Imperial Chancellor, with the help of Lu-Chang, then directors of the military school of Tien-tsin, and the means of defending the gulf of Pechili, and of guarding against advances from Manchuria and Shantung were considered. With the exception of the Eight Flag Manchu troops (56,357 men), forming the Peking army, the provincial army and the armies of the three Manchu provinces, the whole of the troops in Chihli were grouped in a single army, under command of Yun-lu, with his headquarters at Peking. There were to be five divisions (each including troops of all arms), described as advance guard, rear-guard, right and left wings and centre, and two divisions under General Nieh, with his headquarters at Lutai. The total strength, excluding the Eight Flags, gave 39,822 rifles, 12,942 sabres, and 268 guns, or at the most 60,000 combatants.

Several soldiers have been arrested and imprisoned in Brussels for having, while in the Maison du Peuple, threatened to assassinate Prince Albert before his marriage. When questioned by the military judge they stated that they would certainly execute their threat when they came out of prison, as the removal of Prince Albert would make Belgium a Republic.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, Sept. 15.

Lord Roberts reported to-day that Gen. French occupied Barberton on the 13th inst. with his cavalry, which he took across the mountains. He met with slight opposition, but the enemy were completely surprised, 23 officers and 59 men, prisoners of war, were released; 43 locomotives and some rolling stock were captured. "The former," Lord Roberts remarked, "will relieve us of a great difficulty, as we have had to put up with a limited number of very rickety engines." Gen. French reported that there were sufficient supplies in Barberton for at least three weeks for his force, and about one week for his horses. Over 100 Boers were made prisoners, many Mausers, much ammunition, and 50 waggons being found in the town.

Gen. French intercepted large convoys, showing that Barberton had been used as a dépôt for the supply of the Boer troops south and south-east of that place. The bulk of French's force was 35 miles behind his cavalry, detained by the great difficulty experienced in getting the wagons over the pass leading into the valley in which Barberton is situated.

Lord Roberts telegraphed at 7.40 p.m. that Gen. French reported all quiet at Barberton. Among his prisoners were the Landrost of the place, and Commandant Vanderpost, late Chairman of the Free State Raad. Gen. Schoemak was found in gaol. He fought against us at Colesberg, surrendered to Gen. French when we occupied Pretoria, and was tried by court-martial and imprisoned by the Boers for high treason, his crime being that he refused to break his parole.

A party of Boers belonging to the commandos which surrounded Ladybrand, and endeavoured to move into the south east portion of the Orange River Colony, made their appearance near Brandfort, with a view to destroying the railway. Gen. Kelly-Kenny, Lord Roberts said, at once strengthened the several positions between Smaaldeel and Bloemfontein, and communicated with Gen. Macdonald, commanding the Highland Brigade of Sir A. Hunter's Division. He had shortly before arrived at Wynberg, in order to take part in the operations Gen. Hunter was about to carry on against roaming bands of Free Staters.

Gen. Macdonald, on the morning of the 13th, crossed to the south bank of the Vet River near Tafel Kop, and came in contact with the enemy some eight miles west of that place. He drove then northward across the Vet River, and pursued them north of the Wynburg-Smaaldeel Railway. The enemy retired in great confusion, the road being strewn with things thrown away in their hurried flight. Seven Boers were made prisoners, and 31 wagons, 270 trek oxen, eight cases of dynamite, a quantity of gun and rifle ammunition, groceries and other food supplies, blankets, clothing, &c., were captured. Our casualties were nil. Gen. Macdonald, the despatch went on to say, speaks in high terms of the manner in which Lovat's Scouts pushed the pursuit. His words are: "Their action was beyond all praise."

News arrived to-day that Major-Gen. Paget arrived at Hebron, north-west of Pretoria yesterday. He had driven off a party of Boers during his march from Pienaars River Station, and taken 10 prisoners and 1,000 head of cattle.

Monday, Sept. 17.

Lord Roberts telegraphed to-day at 3 p.m. that Lieut.-Gen. Pole-Carew, with the Guards Brigade of his division and Lieut.-Gen. Hamilton's column, was working towards the Kaapmuiden Station. The 18th Brigade was near Nelspruit, and firing was heard in that direction during the afternoon.

Telegraphing at 5.40 p.m., Lord Roberts said that "Gen. French's advanced cavalry, sent from Barberton to the Avoca railway station, found 50 more locomotives there, 'apparently in good order.' Lieut.-Gen. Hildyard had established a post at Utrecht, and was moving at the time the dispatch was penned to Vryheid, in co-operation with mounted troops from Dundee. Major-Gen. Clements yesterday located a party of Boers near Hexpoort. A skirmish ensued, and our casualties were:—Killed: Lieut. H. T. Stanley, 25th Company, Imperial Yeomanry. Wounded: One man. Missing: One man.

Tuesday, Sept. 18.

Lord Roberts, having moved his headquarters up the line to Nelspruit, telegraphed during the evening stating that Major-Gen. Stephenson's brigade occupied that place during the morning without opposition. Several ammunition waggon were burnt by the Boers before their flight, two of them belonging to our Field Artillery. When Lord Roberts's despatch was sent off Lieut.-Gen. Pole-Carew, with the Guards' Brigade, was four miles east of Avoca station. The mounted infantry seem to have been delayed for a time by a party of the enemy, who retreated in an easterly direction. An ammunition waggon and some prisoners had been captured.

Lord Roberts said he was in telegraphic communication with Sir Redvers Buller and could therefore send him supplies, as the way was much easier than from Machadodorp. Sir Redvers announced that some 30 of the enemy had surrendered to him at Spitzkop, mostly mercenaries.

Wednesday, Sept. 19.

From Nelspruit Lord Roberts telegraphed during the afternoon that out of the 3,000 of the enemy who retreated to Komati Poort as our forces advanced from Machadodorp, about 700 crossed into Portuguese territory, and others deserted in various directions. The balance seems to have crossed the Komati River, and to be occupying spurs of the Lebombo Mountain, south of the railway. A general tumult occurred when the enemy recognised the hopelessness of their cause. The Long Toms and several field guns, including those captured from us, are stated by Lord Roberts to have been destroyed. "There is nothing now left of the Boer Army," says Lord Roberts, "but a few marauding bands. One of these, which took up a position at Doornberg, north-east of Winburg, is being dealt with under Kelly-Kenny's direction. Rundle yesterday attacked from Bronkhorstfontein, and captured one gun and over thirty waggon. Knox came across some of the retreating Boers at Klompje Doorns."

Thursday, Sept. 20.

Lord Roberts sent to the War Office particulars of the Johannesburg plot, which was a very dastardly one, but fortunately was frustrated. The police and the Military Governor received information, it seems that on July 14, the anniversary of the taking of the Bastille, an attempt would be made to overpower the garrison and murder the British officers. A race meeting was to take place on that day, and it was assumed that a large proportion of officers would attend unarmed. Bolder spirits among plotters were to go to the races armed and murder officers, while an ostensibly French national gathering was to be the rallying point for the low class who were to murder all the police and then take possession of the Government offices, &c. A Boer commander at Zwart Kop, to the north of the town, was in direct communication with the plotters. By July 13 the police were in possession of sufficient evidence to justify numerous arrests, which were accordingly carried out during the night of 13th to 14th. At noon, July 14, the Consuls of Germany, France, Sweden, and America, of which nations some subjects had been arrested, met the Commissioner of Police, and discussed the question. Each Consul concerned was furnished with a statement of the facts of the case. The Consuls expressed entire concurrence with the action taken, and promised every assistance. Between 400 and 500 arrests were made, but of these 75 were subsequently released on being vouched for by their respective Consuls. Lord Roberts at once gave orders for the deportation of all such foreigners as had been arrested in connection with the plot, and for whose behaviour Consuls of their country would not vouch. The prompt measures taken have met with approval of people of all nationalities residing at Johannesburg, and this approval has been expressed openly, and in some cases officially.

Lord Roberts telegraphed from Nelspruit, during the evening, stating that Capt. Perkins, of the New South Wales Medical Corps, who was captured by the Boers near Hexpoort on the 10th inst., with three ambulances, and taken to Rustenburg, had been released and arrived at Commandos Nek. Five of the six men taken with Capt. Perkins and four prisoners of Ridley's Mounted Infantry were released at the same time. The Boers kept the ambulances. Capt. Perkins and men were placed in the Rustenburg prison, where they were visited by Delarey and Smuts. In the prison were 70 Boer prisoners, and in Delarey's laager 300 who had refused to break their oath and fight again. Of those who are fighting a few are stated to be irreconcilables, but "the greater part are doing so under compulsion."

Gen. C. Knox reports an engagement in the Kroonstad-Lindley road with the enemy yesterday. Hildyard reached Gegand, overlooking Vryheid, on the 18th. His advance guard met with slight opposition. He met Dartnell's column at Blood River.

Friday, Sept. 21.

A telegram from Cape Town received during the afternoon contradicts the statement that Lord

Roberts is to leave for England on the 29th inst. Nothing is said to be known on the subject. The statement that Lord Kitchener is to succeed to the chief command is stated to require confirmation.

A telegram received at the Militia Department at Ottawa announces that 500 of the Canadian infantry in South Africa, whose period of service terminates on Oct. 15, have elected to take their discharge and leave for home immediately.

The Mansion House War Fund now amounts to £1,007,500.

Total casualties since the beginning of the war up to the end of last week:—

	Officers.	N.C.O. & Men
Killed	285	2,718
Died of wounds ...	86	797
Missing and prisoners (excluding those who have been recovered or died in captivity)	12	809*
Prisoners died in captivity ...	3	86
Died of disease ...	149	5,582
Accidental deaths ...	3	107
Sent home as invalids ...	1,239	28,199†
	1,777	38,298

Total Losses (exclusive of sick and wounded men now in British Hospitals in South Africa) ... 40,075

* This total probably includes a large number of men reported "missing" who subsequently rejoined, but whose return was not notified.

PRISONERS OF WAR.—The Queen has approved an amendment of the regulations governing the issue of pay to soldiers who may be made prisoners of war. It is ordered that "a soldier shall not forfeit his right to pay during the period of his absence as a prisoner of war unless it shall have been proved before a court of inquiry, convened by order of the general officer commanding, that such soldier was taken prisoner through neglect or misconduct on his own part. In that case he shall forfeit any balance of pay unissued to him during the period of imprisonment." In respect to the Order the Secretary for State has given the following instruction:—"The issue of pay to a soldier while a prisoner of war must depend on circumstances. On rejoining no further issues will be made until it has been decided whether a court of inquiry shall be held. If such court is held and decides that the soldier was taken prisoner through his own neglect or misconduct, he will, as provided in the warrant, forfeit any balance of pay unissued at the date of rejoining. In all other cases the unissued balance will be paid to the men."

MILITIA GRATUITIES.—The following is ordered to be inserted after paragraph 20 of Army Order 203 (a) of 1899, as amended by Army Order 86 of 1900:—

"A Militiaman whose engagement terminates during embodiment, and who, being unable or unwilling to re-engage, is dismissed to his home, will be granted, on dismissal, furlough pay, &c., and the gratuity specified in paragraph 20, provided he has served for at least six calendar months. Any man who was permitted to join his unit during embodiment, notwithstanding that he had less than six months to serve will, on dismissal on termination of engagement, be granted the ordinary training bounty, and if he has served for upwards of 27 days will in addition be granted pay, &c., to the extent of seven days for each complete month, or portion of a month, served with the unit during its embodiment. Should any Militiaman, whose engagement has terminated as above during the period of embodiment, subsequently re-enlist into an embodied unit, he will, on disembodiment, be granted pay, &c., for a period of seven days for each month or portion of a month served since re-enlistment, together with any addition to the gratuity previously paid to which his total embodied service may entitle him."

A PARLIAMENTARY Paper just issued gives an approximate estimate of expenditure under the Barracks Act of 1890 and Military Works Act of 1897 and 1899 (in substitution of Command Paper 82 of 1900). The estimated expenditure for 1900-1901 under the Barracks Act is £76,500. The expenditure during 1900-1901 under the Military Works Act of 1897 and 1899 is now estimated at £1,420,000. The increase of £335,000, as compared with the amount shown in Command Paper 82 of 1900, is mainly on defence work and ranges, including accommodation for manœuvring and mobilisation, and arises in the case of the latter head from the policy partly of assisting Volunteer corps to obtain rifle ranges and partly of enlarging the accommodation for mobilisation stores to provide for increased reserves.

THE Government of India has been considering the subject of ordnance stores, and with a view to a complete overhaul and revision and re-arrangement of reserves has called for a general statement showing all classes of obsolete or doubtful stores in their arsenals, depôts, and factories, so that steps may be taken for their disposal.

Obituary.

ARMY.

Lieut.-Col. Reginald Cockayne Cockayne-Frith, Acting Commandant Cavalry Depot, Canterbury, and Major 15th Hussars, died at Canterbury on the 16th inst., from the effects of the accident he met with lately when thrown from his dog-cart. Born June 17, 1863, the son of Major C. Cockayne-Frith, of Dover, he joined the 15th Hussars as Lieut. May 10, 1882; was Adjutant Dec. 17, 1884, to Dec. 16, 1889; became Captain Aug. 24, 1888; Major Dec. 10, 1896; and was appointed to the Staff of the Cavalry Depot May 6, 1899. After passing the Staff College, he was Brigade-Major of Cavalry at Aldershot June, 1896, to May, 1899. The funeral took place at Canterbury on Thursday. Major-Gen. Hallum-Parr, Col. Kelly, and Lord Kensington were among the officers who attended. The troops present numbered nearly 1,000, of whom 300 formed the firing party. The first part of the service was conducted at the cathedral, Dean Farrar officiating. The instrumental music was performed by military bands, and the cathedral choir sang the vocal music. The route to the place of burial at St. Martin's Church was thronged, and the performance of the last rites was most impressive. The "Last Post" was sounded over the grave.

Lieut.-Col. Edward Waugh Rumsey, J.P., D.L., Major, retired list, late of the Gloucestershire Regiment, of Trelleck, Monmouthshire, died at Charlton Goodrich on the 12th inst., aged 61. He joined the Army Nov. 17, 1857; became Lieut. Aug. 30, 1859; Captain Oct. 16, 1866; Major Jan. 25, 1880; and retired with the hon. rank of Lieut.-Colonel Nov. 19, 1881.

Lieut.-Col. Michael Richard Ryan, Royal Army Medical Corps, died at Hong Kong on the 23rd ult. Born March 20, 1852, he joined the Army Feb. 4, 1877, and became Lieut.-Colonel Feb. 4, 1897. He served in the Afghan War, 1878-79, including the advance through the Khyber Pass and capture of Mi Musjid (medal), and in the Egyptian War 1882, including the battle of Tel-el-Kebir (medal with clasp and bronze star).

Major Oscar William de Satgé de Thoren, late of the 45th and 38th Regiments, of Brendon's Norton, Worcestershire, eldest son of the Baron de Thoren, died at 100, Grosvenor Road, S.W., on the 14th inst. He joined the Army Aug. 13, 1858, as Ensign, in the 45th Regiment; became Lieut. Jan. 30, 1863; Captain Feb. 12, 1873; and, having exchanged to the 43rd Light Infantry in 1880, retired in February, 1881, afterwards serving in the Militia, from which he retired with the rank of Major. He served in the Abyssinian Campaign, 1868, as D.A.Q.M.G. (mentioned in despatches, medal).

Major George Hilliard, C.M.G., Royal Army Medical Corps, died of wounds at the General Hospital, Newcastle, South Africa, on the 7th inst. Born Oct. 9, 1862, he joined the Army Feb. 5, 1887, and became Major Feb. 5, 1899. He served in the Ashanti Expedition under Sir Francis Scott, in 1895-96 (bronze star). He was made a C.M.G. Feb. 13, 1896.

Capt. William Smith Cox, Quartermaster Naval Ordnance Department, died at Ordnance House, Marchwood, on the 11th inst. He received his commission as Quartermaster, Army Ordnance Department March 27, 1878; became Captain July 18, 1883; and was transferred to the Naval Ordnance Department in May, 1891. He served in the Zulu War, 1879, in the operations against Sekukuni (medal with clasp, and hon. rank of Captain); in the Boer War, 1881; and in the Bechuanaland Expedition, 1884-85.

Capt. Hewlett Charles Perkins, late of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, died at Shirley, Southampton, on the 12th inst., aged 46. He joined the Army in 1876, and, obtaining his company in 1886, afterwards retired. He served with the 2nd Batn. Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry throughout the Egyptian War of 1882, and was present at the reconnaissance in force from Alexandria on Aug. 5, in the engagements at El Magfar and Tel-el-Mahuta, in the two actions at Kassasin, and at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir (medal with clasp and Khedive's star), and served with the same battalion in the Nile Expedition of 1884-85, taking part in the operations of the advance column under Major-Gen. Earle.

Lieut. Thomas Brassey Maddocks, 2nd Batn. Somersetshire Light Infantry, acting as signalling officer, was killed on the night of the 12th inst., whilst visiting signalling stations near Potchefstroom. Born Sept. 3, 1874, he joined the Somers-setshire Light Infantry, from the Militia, Dec. 7, 1895, and became Lieut. Oct. 20, 1898.

Lieut. Archibald Coke McKinnon Cockburn, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, employed with the Uganda Rifles, died at Ugowe, East Africa, on July 31. Born May 11, 1869, the third son of Col. G. Cockburn, late of the Black Watch, he obtained his commission in the Royal Welsh Fusiliers from sergeant, Royal Scots, May 8, 1895, and became Lieut. March 24, 1897. He accepted service in Uganda Jan. 9, 1898, and has rendered much useful service in that province.

Lieut. James Taylor Lowry, 1st Batn. Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, died in London on the 19th inst. after several months of great suffering from blood poisoning, contracted on active service on the Tugela in the operations before Ladysmith. Born Aug. 21, 1875, the son of Capt. E. L. B. Lowry, D.L., late 41st Regiment, of Rockdale, co. Tyrone. He joined the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers from the Militia Dec. 23rd, 1896, and became Lieut. June 1, 1898.

Lieut. Charles Gray Campbell, Indian Staff Corps (4th Rajputs), died at Shanghai on the 27th ult. Born July 15, 1868, and son of the late Col. J. M. Campbell, R.A., and Mrs. Campbell, of Eastbourne, he joined the Scottish Rifles from the Militia Feb. 4, 1891, and was transferred to the Staff Corps July 14, 1893.

Lieut. Henry T. Stanley, West Somerset Yeomanry, was killed in action near Hexpoort on the 16th inst. whilst serving with the 25th Company Imperial Yeomanry. Lieut. Stanley, who was the eldest son of Mr. E. J. Stanley, M.P., joined the West Somerset Yeomanry Cavalry in January, 1897; became Lieut. in June, 1898; and was commissioned in the Imperial Yeomanry last February, serving in the 7th Batn, which consists of the 25th (West Somerset), 26th (Dorsetshire), 27th (Devonshire), and 48th (North Somerset) Companies. He was well known in the cricket field, and did useful work for Somersetshire on more than one occasion. During the season of 1899 he scored 127 against Gloucestershire.

TERRITORIALISM AND CONFUSION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I do not want to be hard on the War Office, for I can quite understand that at the present moment it is sorely tried in many ways; but if that department does stand by a complicated and confusing system, it ought to take some pains to show it at least workable. Having many friends and three sons in South Africa, I have followed, or rather tried to follow, the casualty lists and lists of prisoners. Two of my sons have been made prisoners of war in the course of the campaign, and, strange as it may appear, they both have been stated to belong to different regiments to those in which they actually hold commissions. And it has been the case several times with others. The names of some corps are so confusing that this may be excusable, but it says little for the system. Only on Saturday last the name of a young fellow I know well was given in a list of released prisoners—Lieut. Davenport. The War Office referred to him in the official list as belonging to the Royal Irish Regiment, whereas the Army List, if it had been turned to, would have at once have made it clear that he really belongs to the Royal Irish Rifles. The constant mistakes which have been made in official documents from South Africa, due to the use of territorial titles, must convince the most obstinate supporter of the present organisation that some form of numbering is necessary for campaigning purposes. Friends in the field tell me the difficulties of staff and other officers are enormously increased by the territorial titles. I am an old soldier, and perhaps may be excused for having a feeling in favour of numbers, but, much as I liked the old system, I never expected to have such clear proof of the disadvantages of the present one, as the War Office has itself furnished in documents issued under its direct authority.

AN OLD C.O.

P.S.—I may say that I am a believer in territorialism, but am one of those who hold that the merits of the organisation should not be counteracted by false application, so far as regimental distinctions are concerned, a number being so much more suited to the purposes of an army than a long and frequently meaningless title on the shoulder strap.

ABERDEEN GRANITE MONUMENTS, &c.—ALEX. MACDONALD and Co., Limited (late A. Macdonald, Field and Co.), Workers in Polished Granites to the Queen, undertake the erection of their work in any part of the country. The largest stock of granite monuments in the country may be seen at their London premises. BOER AMMUNITION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I often see doubts expressed in home papers as to the use of soft-nosed bullets by the Boers. Having just been called upon to destroy some 40,000 rounds of ammunition captured from the enemy, I am able to speak with some authority. It may interest the writers at home to know that of the 40,000 rounds we found some 35,000 soft-nosed. I suppose seeing is believing, and, having seen with my own eyes, I may be permitted perhaps to profess to know. But this is not my point. The cases in which the ammunition was packed were all addressed to the Transvaal Government, Pretoria, and I grieve to say the ammunition was shipped by a well-known firm of English cartridge makers. Does not this constitute an illegal act? The firm is of such high standing (not Messrs Kynoch, I may remark) and long experience that it is difficult to understand how it can have been misled into supposing that the ammunition was required for any purpose but one. I do think that the Government might institute inquiries and consider how best those firms can be punished which have systematically provided the Boers with the means of killing our soldiers. There ought, in the opinion of all I meet here, to be some limit put on proceedings which, to say the least, are not very patriotic.

CAVALRY.

1st Life Guards.—Capt. H.S.H. Prince Adolphus of Teck will arrive home from South Africa early next month.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue).—Mr. C. D. Rose, father of the late Capt. Rose, who was killed in action at Winburg, has handed to the commanding officer the sum of £6,000 unreservedly, to be used by him as he thinks fit for the good of the regiment. Capt. Rose was an officer of great promise, for he had distinguished himself in the field before he went to South Africa, and his memory will ever be treasured by those who served with him.

5th Lancers.—Lieut.-Col. Fawcett, having entirely recovered from the effects of his wounds, is en route to South Africa in the Templemore to resume command.

9th Lancers.—Lieut. Smyth is reported to be progressing favourably at Johannesburg.

12th Lancers.—Capt. Egerton-Green, a prisoner of war, was released at Barberton, on Lieut.-Gen. French's occupation, on the 13th inst.

13th Hussars.—Major Smithson was severely wounded in both knees near Matthew's Farm on Aug. 22, while endeavouring to hold a hill with twelve men until reinforcements arrived. Another bullet struck his helmet, one man being killed at the same time and Pte. Cooke injured in the arm. A party of the regiment patrolling ten miles west of Utrecht, on Saturday last, were invited by some women to a farm over which a white flag was flying. The patrol was offered some milk and bread, and as they were leaving the house they were fired upon. The farm, which belonged to A. Ponter, Field Cornet of Utrecht, the leader of the late raids on the railway line, was destroyed.

15th Hussars.—An inquest was held at Canterbury Barracks, on Monday, on the body of Lieut.-Col. Cokayne-Frith, Commandant of the Cavalry Depot, who died on the previous day from congestion of the lungs following fracture of the neck. The evidence showed that the deceased was driving a trap on Aug. 2, his wife accompanying him, and when half a mile from the barracks the horse stumbled, and the deceased was pulled out of the trap on to his head, one of the wheels passing over his neck. On the 6th, an operation was performed by Mr. Victor Horsley, and deceased made good progress until Friday last, when congestion of the lungs supervened. The deceased officer leaves one child, an infant. The funeral took place at Canterbury on Thursday afternoon.

16th Lancers.—Lieut. Vander Byl was severely wounded in the arm in some fighting near Klornpje Doorns on Tuesday.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Lieut.-Col. C. N. Simpson, R.F.A., will remain in India on promotion.

By his will of Nov. 17, 1894, Major H. S. Le M. Guille, of Greenbank, Crown Hill, Plymouth, who died at Kimberley on May 9 last, aged 38 years, appointed as executor his brother, the Rev. Hubert G. de C. S. Guille, of Ewen, Cirencester, by whom the testator's estate has been valued at £5,361.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Major G. H. W. Stockdale has passed the tactical examination qualifying for promotion.

INFANTRY.

Coldstream Guards.—Lieut.-Col. Surtees, 1st Batn. will arrive home from South Africa as soon as he can be spared to assume command of the 3rd Batn. on promotion, vice Lieut.-Col. Dawson appointed to Irish Guards.

Irish Guards.—The establishment has been ordered to be raised from three to four companies as from the 1st inst.

Royal Scots (1st).—The 1st Batn. has sent home a round robin from Wepner, Orange River Colony, to this effect:—

"The officers, non-commissioned officers, and men take this opportunity of tendering their sincere thanks to those, who, by their kindness and generosity, have added so much to the comfort of all in this trying campaign. Though this is the only manner in which they can express their thanks, it is nevertheless sincere and heartfelt. They particularly wish that this may be sent to Mrs. Mitchell Thomson and Major Deane, whose practical kindness has been keenly appreciated." Capt. Molyneux-Seel, 1st Batn, was the officer who commanded the mounted infantry near Ventersberg Road Station in the affair alluded to by Lord Roberts in his despatch of the 11th inst.

Queen's (2nd).—Mrs. Terrett, of Slough, wife of the Colour-Sergt. Terrett, 2nd Batn., has received one of the four scarves made by the Queen for her soldiers in South Africa. The scarf was presented to Colour-Sergt. Terrett, as he was adjudged to be the best soldier in his battalion, and he has sent it home to his wife. The scarf, which was worked by Her Majesty's own hands, is composed of wool of khaki colour, the letters V.R.I. being worked in white silk. It is about three feet long and nine inches wide.

Royal Warwickshire Regiment (6th).—Capt. Delacombe, on promotion from the Connaught Rangers, has been ordered to join the 4th Batn. at Colchester.

Royal Fusiliers (7th).—Extract from the Regimental Orders, 1st Batn. Chinese Regiment, by Lieut.-Col. H. Bower, commanding:—"It is with the deepest regret that the commanding officer has to record the death of Capt. L. A. Ollivant, who was killed while taking ammunition under a heavy fire to the American troops who were hard pressed. The gallant way in which, after the soldier who was leading the mule and the mule were killed, he still endeavoured to carry out the duty with which he had been entrusted, has excited the admiration of the whole force. During the time that Capt. Ollivant has been in the regiment he succeeded in gaining the affection of all ranks, and all deplore his loss." Extract from Regimental Orders of the 1st Batn., by Major H. Lysons, V.C., commanding Nasirabad, dated Aug. 2, 1900:—"It is with the deepest regret that the commanding officer announces to the battalion the death of Capt. Ollivant, who was killed in action at Tien-tsin, on July 13, while gallantly attempting to carry ammunition to hard-pressed American troops. Officers will wear mourning till the 31st instant." Capt. Ollivant was only 28 when he died. He was at Charterhouse and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in honours in history, and for two years rowed in the 'Varsity boat against Oxford. One officer writing from Tien-tsin, says:—"More determined bravery I never heard or read of. What a fine fellow he was. He was immensely popular with all ranks, and I mourn for him more deeply than I would for any other man." Another officer says:—"He was a particularly fine fellow in every way and most popular. It was a fine fight, and in a noble way he died."

Lincolnshire Regiment (10th).—The memorial to the members of the 1st Batn. who fell in the campaign on the Nile in 1898, which has been erected in the south aisle of Lincoln Cathedral, is in the form of a bronze tablet, surmounted by a figure in a sitting position bearing a wreath in one hand. Col. Roberts, and Lieut. Lyall, 2nd Batn., prisoners of war were released at Barberton, by Lieut.-Gen. French, on the 13th inst. Lieut. Burrows, 1st Batn. has been appointed Assistant Instructor of Musketry, at the School of Musketry, Bellary.

Suffolk Regiment (12th).—A correspondent writes: "Lieut.-Gen. French, at Pan, on August 2, addressed the battalion on the subject of its work in South Africa. He said:—

"Major Cubitt, officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 1st Suffolk Regiment, I wish first to say that I am very glad to have the pleasure of seeing you all again, and I want to thank you for the good work you have done in various parts of South Africa since you last served with me. What you did at Colesberg is still fresh in my recollection, and that you were placed in a position of great responsibility, the duties of which you fulfilled well and thoroughly. But what I wish especially to recall is the sad event of the night of Jan. 5 and 6, and to express my sympathy with you on the loss of your gallant leader, Colonel Watson, who on that night showed splendid qualities as a noble and able officer. Now it has come to my knowledge that there has been spread about an idea that that event cast discredit of some sort upon this gallant regiment. I want you all to banish any such thoughts from your minds as utterly untrue. You took part—most of you I am speaking to—in a night operation of extreme difficulty on a pitch dark night, and did all in your power to make it a success. So do not let any false idea get into your minds. Think rather what took place brings honour to your regiment, and add this event to the long list of honours it has won in the past. I want you all to bear in mind about such night operations, that they can never be a certain success, and, because they sometimes fail, it does not therefore bring discredit on those who attempted to carry them out. You must remember that, if we always waited for an opportunity of certain success, we should do nothing at all, and that in war, fighting a brave enemy, it is absolutely impossible to be always sure of success. I thank you for all the good work you have done, and assure you that no slur of any kind attaches to your regiment."

West Yorkshire Regiment (14th).—Capt. Ingles is transferred from the 1st Batn. in India to the 2nd Batn. at the Cape, on promotion. Lieut. Gordon, 1st Batn., has left India for China, to join the 1st Batn. Chinese Regiment, for which he has been selected.

East Yorkshire Regiment (15th).—Lieut. Wood, 1st Batn., has been appointed extra A.D.C. to Lord Northcote, Governor of Bombay.

Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (27th).—In memory of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the regiment and the 6th (Inniskilling) Dragoons who have fallen in the war in South Africa, a suitable monument is to be raised in the territorial district of the regiments, Enniskillen. The Earl of Erne is the president of the Memorial Fund. Another monument will be erected in Omagh, county Tyrone, Depot.

Gloucestershire Regiment (28th).—Major Bishop is posted to this battalion on promotion.

Worcestershire Regiment (29th).—The recruiting march through Worcestershire has proved very successful, the inhabitants of all the towns visited having done their utmost to show their appreciation of the excellent conduct of the young soldiers who have more than maintained the character of their regiment. So popular has the march been, that at the last moment another halting place had to be added, the people of Redditch having expressed a desire that they might be visited. The popularity of the Worcestershires is not to be wondered at, for, apart from the splendid records of the old 29th and 36th, the Militia battalions have the reputation of being two of the smartest and best ordered in the kingdom. Certainly at Aldershot during their embodiment they have won the admiration of all by their soldierly bearing.

East Surrey Regiment (31st).—Capt. Hill, doing duty with 1st Batn. Chinese Regiment, has been seriously injured this week at Tang-chan by an explosion, being badly burnt over chest, arms, and legs. All his burns are said to be superficial, and all hopes of his recovery are entertained.

Hampshire Regiment (37th).—Capt. Wheeler is posted to the 2nd Batn. (67th) in South Africa on promotion.

South Staffordshire Regiment (38th).—The Leamington Corporation has decided to receive and officially welcome Brevet-Lieut.-Col. Hore on his arrival in the town on Saturday, the 6th prox., in recognition of his services at Mafeking and elsewhere. He will be met at the station by the civic authorities, and afterwards receive an address at the municipal buildings.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (43rd).—Major Everleigh attains the limit of age on Thursday next.

Sherwood Foresters (45th).—Lieut. Watson, a prisoner of war, was released at Winburg on the 11th inst.

Loyal North Lancashire Regiment (47th).—Lieut. Massy, 3rd (Militia) Batn. has been selected for service with the West African Regt.

Northamptonshire Regiment (48th).—Capt. Kent is transferred to the 2nd Batn. (58th) in South Africa on promotion.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (52nd).—Col. Plowden, on appointment to the temporary command of a second-class district in India, has been posted to Belgaum.

Essex Regiment (56th).—Lieut. Ruxton has left India for China, to join the 1st Batn. Chinese Regiment for which he has been selected.

North Staffordshire Regiment (64th).—Lieut. Col. Currie, C.B., has been granted an extension of command for twelve months from the 14th inst., and obtains the rank of brevet-colonel.

Royal Berkshire Regiment (66th).—Lord Wange, V.O., Lord Lieutenant of Berks, who for some 30 years commanded the 1st V.B., has received a letter from Capt. Ewen, who is in command of the Volunteer Company at the front. Capt. Ewen explains that the men under his command have been actively and successfully engaged against the enemy. They were highly complimented by Lieut.-Gen. Ian Hamilton, who reported to Lord Roberts that they had done excellent work. This statement is borne out by an officer of the battalion who writes to us that "it is a delight to be associated with these excellent soldiers who are in every way a credit to their battalion."

Welsh Regiment (69th).—Capt. Rhodes is transferred to the 1st Batn. (41st) in South Africa on promotion.

LORD DUNRAVEN ON NAVIGATION.

We have no hesitation in saying that the Earl of Dunraven's Self-instruction in the Practice and Theory of Navigation (Macmillan and Co.), is one of the best books on the subject ever produced. It differs in many ways from such epitomes as Norie's, Inman's, and Raper's, though it may be said to possess the merits of them all. Lord Dunraven recognises clearly the relation between theory and practice. It is one thing to work out abstract calculations from imaginary observations in the quiet of the study, and another to take those observations on a wet, slippery, and rolling deck, and then to work them out with little time in a dimly-lighted cabin full of confusion and noise. And, moreover, in many cases, it is absolutely impracticable for navigators to attain complete scientific knowledge, but Lord Dunraven's object has been to reduce formulae to the smallest possible dimensions for their benefit. He is at great pains to enable the student to understand the scientific basis of his work, which he always puts in a charmingly direct and simple fashion. The purpose has been to give conversationally, as it were, sufficient explanation of problems of navigation so as to throw light upon the meaning of the formulae used. Without a knowledge of this meaning, it is extremely difficult, as Lord Dunraven himself found—and he is an "extra-master"—to remember the formulae by heart. Thus, that part of the volume treating of the "day's work," the "sailings," and so on, includes a short treatise on plane, right-angled triangles, which, says Lord Dunraven, the student need not learn unless he likes, though to do so will enable him to remember ever so much better the formulae he employs, and he is strongly recommended to master the chapter on plane trigonometry. Just in the same way, the part of the work devoted to nautical astronomy embraces a sketch of the movements of the heavenly bodies and a chapter on spherical trigonometry. The book is divided, for convenience, into two volumes—the first devoted to logarithms, the sailings, a day's work, the use of the compass, some chart work, and the simpler problems of nautical astronomy, while the second deals with advanced problems and magnetism, as well as much other matter. Nothing could be better than the style of the book, which leads the student on, and thus enables him to grasp many things which he would learn with difficulty from dry rules.

SHORT NOTICES.

The Anglo-Saxon Guide to the Paris Exhibition (Lemercier, Paris; Boot and Son, London) is an excellent shilling manual, with plans and pictures, as well as an abundance of hints for visitors and a traveller's glossary. English people should buy the book before they leave for the Ville Lumière.

Over the Alps on a Bicycle, by Elizabeth Robins Pennell, illustrated by Joseph Pennell (Unwin) will interest and amuse all mountaineers. It is on the same line as "Canterbury Pilgrimage," of the same authors, though the illustrations are not quite so good. Those who wish to cross the Alps, whether on their cycles or in any other way than through the tunnel, must certainly buy the book.

The Married Miss Binks, by John Strange Winter (F. V. White and Co.), is a bright and interesting story, written in the author's customary style, and more attractive than some of her recent productions. It will repay perusal.

The Despatch Rider, by Ernest Glanville (Methuen and Co.) is very much up to date, having its incidents of love and romance bound up with the invasion of Natal. Mr. Glanville knows the country and the recent history, and has contrived to make an interesting story readable to the end.

Messrs. Clowes and Sons have just published a fifth edition of Lieut.-Col. E. Gunter's admirable Officer's Field Note and Sketch Book and Reconnaissance Aid. The book has been proved of the utmost practical use, and has found such favour that edition has succeeded edition, and imitations have sprung up. The new issue has been thoroughly brought up to date, diagrams of deep trenches have been added, and the part dealing with the group system of outposts has been re-written. The volume is really invaluable for field training and instruction, and for examinations.

We emphatically commend Major A. W. A. Pollock's Simple Lectures for Company Field Training, of which a second edition has just been called for. The author has lately been in South Africa as correspondent of the Times, and the chapters he has added on infantry in action and the lessons of the war are excellent and of great value. The successes of the Boers, he says, were due to common-sense use of ground more than to good marksmanship, and he roundly asserts that the average British officer has no eye for ground, and that tactical instruction of the right kind has never been properly given since the days of Sir John Moore. His opinion of Aldershot "attacks" is very poor. The "Lessons of the Boer War" must be read. They are the fruits of practised experience, and are particularly valuable in regard to the utilisation of positions and concealment. "False flanks and advanced positions have become much more reliable defences than formerly, and will consequently be utilised more generally." "Having regard both to the difficulties and uncertainties that beset his path, the assailant must in future commence his attack by entrenching a 'counter-position' as near that of his adversary as circumstances will admit. From this base progress will be made, and all ground gained will be instantly entrenched." "The 'use of ground' is the secret of success in war." These are a few of Major Pollock's maxims, and they are types of the rest. No soldier should fail to read and master this book.

Major Arthur Griffiths has written a very entertaining book for popular perusal on Famous British Regiments (Fisher Unwin). His subjects include the Royal Artillery, the Life Guards, the Horse Guards, Lancers and Hussars, Rifle and Fusilier Regiments, the Highlanders, and some regiments of the line.

Lieut.-Col. Sisson C. Pratt's well-tried and excellent Military Law Examiner has just appeared in a welcome fourth edition, published by Messrs. Gale and Polden.

The French-English Military Technical Dictionary, by Lieut. Cornelis De Witt Willcox, U.S.A., which has been published for the American War Department at the Government Printing Office, Washington, has been completed, the last part extending from the word palan to the end. We have already given very high praise to it, and we shall now only say that minute care has been devoted to it, that the equivalents for French military expressions are very full and detailed, and that we believe no professional glossary of French words and terms is so encyclopædic and exhaustive in character as this.

We would commend to all interested in external ballistics a "second supplement" which has been issued to A Revised Account of the Experiments made with the Bashforth Chronograph, by Francis Bashforth, B.D. (University Press, Cambridge). This chronograph is intended to find the resistance of the air to the motion of projectiles, with the application of the results to the calculation of trajectories.

Heroes of the United Service, by L. Valentine (F. Warne and Co.), is a large and handsome volume of sketches and biographies, which will be excellent for presentation. The style is popular and the illustrations are many. The conquest of Canada, the capture of Gibraltar, the events of the Peninsula, the reduction of the Punjab, and the events of the Crimea and the Mutiny are all well described in the heroism of individuals, and similar treatment is given to the Navy and its achievements. Literature of this kind has now a great vogue, and the volume deserves success, though there are parts in which it might have been improved.

Writ in Barracks, by Edgar Wallace (Methuen and Co.), is a volume of poetical effusions à propos of Tommy Atkins and the war. A good deal of true sympathy roughly expressed, with some poetic fervour and insight, will be found in these lines, and since the tongue of Whitechapel must needs voice our thoughts so there is enough of it and to spare in Mr. Wallace's volume. In the Waiting Time of War, by Aubrey N. Mildmay, M.A. (Swan, Sonnenschein, and Co.), is another booklet inspired by the muse, but we are not impressed with the result.

We have also received a ninth edition of a volume quite famous among lovers of the rod—the late David Foster's Scientific Angler (Bemrose, Derby), described as "compiled by his son," and so well known as to call for no description; Cricket, an addition to the Sports Library, by T. C. Collins, with contributions from many well-known cricketers (Fisher Unwin); A Spanish Grammar, by William A. Kessen, which seems excellent in matter and manner (Blackwood and Sons); and a new and revised edition of Health and Condition in the Active and Sedentary, by Nathaniel Edward Yorke-Davies, a well-known book (Sampson Low and Co.).

We cannot withhold high praise from the "Militantly British" Feilden's Magazine, that excellent monthly record of industrial progress. Each successive number seems better than the last, and the September issue, which has reached us late, is admirable in the prodigious body of information, its contents, and its choice illustrations. There are articles on "Fast Cruisers" (by Chas. E. Canning), "Pneumatic Tools," "The Central London Railway," &c.

Messrs. Harrison and Sons, of Pall Mall, have issued a signalling chart with the object of indicating the methods of signalling with semaphore flags. The chart is produced on cardboard, is very portable, and indicates clearly the position in which flags should be placed when signalling. The idea is an excellent one, and has been well carried out by the publishers.

Highland Light Infantry (71st).—Lieut. Murray, a prisoner of war, was released at Barberton on Lieut.-Gen. French's occupation on the 13th inst.

Seaforth Highlanders (72nd).—Lieut. Campion has been appointed an A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Murray, C.B., commanding the 2nd Infantry Brigade at Aldershot.

Black Watch (73rd).—Major the Hon. H. E. Maxwell has been appointed second in command, vice Major Willshire, killed in action.

Shropshire Light Infantry (85th).—Before the Southampton magistrates on the 14th inst., a lad named William Lloyd, the son of a postal employé at Shrewsbury, was brought up by the transport authorities. It was stated that when the battalion sailed for South Africa last year, Lloyd stowed himself away on board the steamer at the Royal Albert Docks. On the arrival of the regiment at the Cape the lad accompanied it to the front, and was wounded, in one of the engagements prior to the occupation of Bloemfontein. While in hospital Lord Roberts shook hands with him, and promised to do what he could for him. Lloyd, who is only 14 years of age, subsequently contracted dysentery, and was invalided home, arriving in the uniform of the Lancaster Regiment. Not until he reached England were the authorities aware that he was not a soldier. Lloyd, who is a smart and intelligent-looking little fellow, said he wanted to be a soldier. The police promised to look after the lad while further inquiries were being made to enable him to rejoin the ranks. [The Shropshire Light Infantry will, we feel certain, gladly receive the plucky young fellow into their ranks. Would that there were many more Lloyds about, and fewer of the noisy young ruffians who disgrace our streets.—ED. A. & N. G.]

Royal Irish Rifles (86th).—Lieuts. Spedding and Davenport, prisoners of war, were released last week.

Gordon Highlanders (92nd).—Capt. Marshall and Findlay are transferred, on promotion, to the 1st Batn. (75th).

King's Own Light Infantry (105th).—Capt. Hall is transferred to the 1st Batn. (51st) in South Africa, on promotion.

Leinster Regiment, Royal Canadians (109th).—Lieut. Maffett has been selected for service with the West African Regiment.

West India Regiment.—Lieuts. Wilford and Ellis, 1st Batn., have been selected for service with the West African Regiment.

LANCE V. BOER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I hear from home that "A Lancer" has written stating, in his opinion, that the lance should under the present circumstances, be left at the base, and our cavalry armed with a rifle instead of the carbine. In this view, so long as we are fighting in such a country and against our present enemy, I most cordially and entirely agree. I venture to say that most soldiers in regiments armed with the lance will endorse "A Lancer's" opinion. If a lancer has become convinced of this fact, touching, as it does, so intimately the temporary loss of a weapon to which he is naturally wedded by custom and sentiment, then surely the circumstances must be very forcible. It certainly occurred to many others that in such a country and class of fighting, as the Boer would by their natural tactics compel us to engage, the lance and carbine were hardly the weapons with which to oppose a long range rifle in an inaccessible country. How very seldom in all this war has there ever been a fair square charge, or opportunity of using the lance to real advantage, and when it has occurred the sword would surely have done the work sufficiently well. We are now opposed to an enemy armed with no arme blanche of any sort for either mounted or dismounted work. Nor are the conditions such as when fighting with natives who, by their ferocity, activity, and mode of warfare, render the lance the most effective weapon. Unfortunately, the Boers are armed with a rifle far surpassing our carbine in range and rapidity of fire, thereby placing our cavalry at a most discouraging and dangerous disadvantage, still enhancing the value of their own natural aptitude for, and knowledge of, fighting in this country, allowing them to retire in safety after inflicting serious damage at long ranges without suffering loss, unless by accident coming to closer ranges. The lance is a very grave consideration as to weight, especially where great wear and tear and horse sickness cause such serious loss in horseflesh. It is a most cumbersome hindrance to men's mobility and activity when dismounting, and the attachment of the lance to the saddle takes up valuable time when every second may be of vital importance.

SEA SPEED AND TRIAL SPEED.

IT is a frequent subject of comment both afloat and ashore that the nominal speed of a ship bears no definite relation to that which she can actually attain in a sea-way. The theory is that the ship should be able to maintain an adequate mean speed, and to be able when the necessity arises of keeping her highest rate for a short period of time. A writer in the Yacht, who has just been dealing with this question, maintains that experience continually contradicts this theory. He believes that in clutching at the shadow of a high speed the substantial gain is sometimes lost, and that, even if the nominal speed be actually reached, it is at too large a cost owing to the great trial which it imposes both upon the machinery and the engine-room personnel. The object of this writer is an attempt to show that Mr. Goschen in a recent utterance did not appear rightly to appreciate what is implied by the necessary compromise in the building of warships. He said that in building a ship of war the problem consists in combining certain conditions of armament, protection, coal supply, and other essentials with sufficient speed to enable the vessel to overhaul her opponent.

The French critic appears to us to read into this remark a misconstruction of the First Lord's real meaning. Mr. Goschen assuredly did not argue that an unarmoured cruiser should attack an armoured one, as the Yacht would seem to imply. It is certainly true that it is not an easy thing to overtake a cruiser which is running away. Suppose, for example, that two vessels are ten miles apart when they sight one another, and that one steams at twenty knots and the other at twenty-one, it would not require less than ten hours, giving a run of about 200 miles, to enable the pursuing boat to come up with the chase. This does not seem to us, however, to be any good reason for relinquishing the superior speed to which Mr. Goschen refers. It appears that in the French Naval School an immutable principle always taught is that no marked advantage can be gained in a ship without sacrificing some of the qualities originally called for. This teaching is not singular to the French Navy. It is a matter of common knowledge in our own, and presents the familiar problem to all ship designers. It may also be taken as a fact that the policy of ship-building must be in accordance with the naval policy of the country for which the ships are to be built; and it follows that what may be necessary in a British ship may not be indispensable in a French one, while, on the other hand, the French constructor may well have to provide for contingencies that do not concern us. Herein was the root of a recent controversy in the Times, in which one writer, estimating by tonnage, gave us a great superiority, which the other denied to us, on the ground—and the right ground—that our superiority of tonnage was devoted to a gaining of advantages which are essential to ships intended to fight in the enemy's waters, or at great distances from their own shore.

We cannot dissent from the French writer that the accepted speed of a ship should be a sea speed which can be maintained during a period of at least sixty hours, and that at the end of that time the ship should not be in any way fatigued, but should be in all material and personal respects able to continue the speed in fighting order. This condition, as the Frenchman admits, is in a measure recognised in our system of sea trials, although in practice the speed is not invariably equal to expectations. It is true that in December, 1898, the Diadem steamed from Gibraltar to Chatham at a speed of 19.6 knots. But, notwithstanding this, our French critic will not believe that the real speed of that cruiser is more than about eighteen knots, and he suggests that the higher speed was due to the machinery being new and in especially good condition, and that the stokers and artificers were picked men. It is undoubtedly correct to say that there is a distinct relation between the results obtained with the engines and the quality of the engine-room personnel. The writer in the Yacht remarks that the chief rôle of French cruisers must be to defend the national commerce and to attack that of the enemy, and that they must therefore have a good and sustained speed upon which they can depend. He would like to see them equal in this respect to the great liners, but thinks that the French and other cruisers are yet far from being able to accomplish such runs. In France, at least, there is very little information accessible as to the speed at which a warship can steam for 3,000 miles, for example, and what is known is not reassuring, for the machinery seems incapable of prolonged effort unless the speed be comparatively low. There are reasons, of course, for this, and no doubt can exist that the minds of naval constructors in all countries are at the present time very much engrossed with the problem suggested.

THE NAVAL ENGINEERS.

THE new scheme affecting the rank and pay of naval engineer officers has now been published. The Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy attains the relative rank of Rear-Admiral; the rank of staff engineer is to be abolished; and chief engineers are to be promoted to the rank of fleet engineer after eight years' service. An important new regulation provides that officers joining Keyham College after April 1 last will be advanced to the senior ranks under the old system of promotion by seniority tempered by Admiralty approval and the recommendation of the Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy. How this new arrangement will work in practice cannot yet be judged, but it is quite possible that it will prove to be unpopular with the naval engineers, who have been accustomed for so many years to the seniority system pure and simple. It is evident, however, that some modification of that system was desirable. Not quite so evident how the Engineer-in-Chief is to gain the requisite knowledge of the qualifications of all chief engineers in the Service. Officers now holding the condemned rank of staff engineer will continue to be so called pending promotion. The scale of pay now to be adopted shows a small increase in almost every grade except that of assistant engineer, and should therefore be welcomed by the department at large. The assistant engineer will continue to receive 7s. 6d. a day; the engineer's pay will vary, according to service, between 10s. and 12s. a day; whilst the pay of chief and fleet engineers begins at 16s. and increases to a maximum of 30s. a day.

The new regulations connected with charge pay appear to aim at a more uniform system of settling this vexed question. The minimum rate is to be 1s. a day, and the maximum rate 5s. That the Admiralty mean to increase the pay and allowances in every rank of the department is clearly indicated by the announcement that any officer who happens to be unfavourably affected by the new rules will continue to draw charge pay under the old system pending a fresh appointment. The old regulations governing half-pay remain unchanged, except that 14s. a day is to be the maximum rate for officers of the rank of fleet engineer. Officers of the rank of chief engineer who are not recommended for further promotion, will be retired compulsorily at fifty, or optionally at forty-five. As regards the strength of the lists, the new rules are as follows:—Engineer-in-chief, 1; chief inspectors of machinery, 7; inspectors, 20; fleet and chief engineers, 333; engineers and assistants, 624; and artificer engineers, 100. The establishment of engineer officers will thus be increased by about 170, and the abolition of the grade of staff engineer will not at all reduce the prospects of promotion of the junior officers, since the new establishment of fleet and chiefs exceed the old establishments of fleet, staff, and chief engineers by about forty. The addition of two chief inspectors of machinery to the establishment, and of eleven inspectors will necessarily improve the prospects of the entire department, and should afford a better flow of promotion from the list of fleet engineers. On the whole, the engineer officers of the Navy ought, we think, to welcome this revised scheme, which is clearly designed to render this branch of the Navy more attractive to the best class of men. That it will fully satisfy them is not likely.

OFFICERS of the Indian Medical Service at home on furlough have been recalled to India, in consequence of the dearth of doctors which the war in China has caused.

Navv Notes.

The most important announcements of the past week are the dissolution of Parliament—to be followed immediately by a General Election—and the Queen's intentions with regard to her representation at the opening of the first Federal Parliament of the Australian Colonies. The second is of greater importance and interest than the first; in the first place, because the result of the election is virtually a foregone conclusion, and secondly, because the Duke of York's mission is a twofold one. His Royal Highness is to go out during the coming spring in order to open the Parliament in the name of her Majesty, but he will also be charged with the expression of the Queen's appreciation of Australasian loyalty, as it has been displayed during the past twelve months. As the official announcement runs, the Queen "wishes to signify her sense of the loyalty and devotion which have prompted the spontaneous aid so liberally offered by all the Colonies in the South African War, and of the splendid gallantry of her Colonial troops." While her Majesty, as she tells us, naturally shrinks from parting with her grandson, she desires to give this "special proof" of her interest in all that concerns the welfare of her Australian subjects, and to mark her recognition of the greatness of the occasion which will bring the colonies of Australia into federal union. It is to be hoped that nothing will arise to prevent the Duke of York's visit, the prospect of which has afforded general gratification and evoked no ordinary enthusiasm among the Australasian colorists.

It is not stated in the official announcements how his Royal Highness will make the voyage to Australia and New Zealand. There has, however, been a general expression of opinion, both in this country and in the Colonies, that the capacity in which the Duke of York could best make his visit would be as an officer of the Royal Navy. It has been rumoured that the new Royal yacht will probably convey his Royal Highness, and that she will be escorted by a squadron of cruisers. The Times thinks he will go out as commodore of a squadron, while we have also heard it stated that the Duke will hoist his flag and that Captain W. H. May, of the Excellent, will be his flag-captain. Captain May, it will be remembered, was senior lieutenant of the Inconstant, the flagship during a portion of the cruise of the Royal Princes in the Bacchante in 1880-1. As, however, the Duchess of York is to accompany the Duke it would probably be more convenient if one of the fine merchant vessels on the Admiralty list were taken up for the purpose. In such a vessel the Duke of York could fly his flag or his broad pennant just as Sir Edward Seymour did when he commissioned the Orestes during the manœuvres of 1885. In any case the circumstance of his Royal Highness acting in a naval capacity as representative of her Majesty would be a further manifestation of the significance of our naval supremacy, and would stimulate and strengthen the Imperial bonds and the patriotic loyalty and devotion which it is the Duke of York's mission to reward.

It is not very clear at present how the General Election will affect the naval representation in the House. It can hardly, however, be very much worse than it is at the present time, and we may at least hope that if Captain Lambton is returned we shall have one naval speaker who will be listened to. Perhaps we may even anticipate a return of those auspicious occasions when Lord Charles Balfour used to hold the attention of a full House. The names of Admirals Alington and Nicholson have also been mentioned as possible candidates. About the latter no definite announcement has been made, but Admiral Alington, it is stated, has declined the invitation of the Unionists to contest the Louth Division of Lincolnshire. Admiral the Hon. T. S. Brand is standing as a Liberal for Eastbourne, but he declines to vote for Home Rule "on account of the attitude of the Irish members on the Boer War." This announcement, we cannot help thinking, will hardly improve his chance of election. On the other hand, in regard to Captain Bethell's seat for the Holderness Division of the East Riding of York, we are told that his "want of sympathy with the Transvaal policy of the Government" has led to his supersession as a candidate by some other gentleman. Admiral Field and Captain Phillpotts will not, we understand, offer themselves for re-election, but Captain Oliver Young, who sits as a Conservative for the Wokingham Division of Berkshire, will not be opposed. Sir John Colomb is likely to be again returned at Great Yarmouth, and will, so far as we can at present ascertain, remain the only representative of the Marines in the new House.

Among the various letters in the Press recognising the value of the services rendered by the Navy in the South African War none is perhaps more to the point than that of Sir Howard Vincent. He points out that there were no less than seven important British ports to be guarded, as well as the important dockyard of Simonstown. The ships were constantly employed for many months patrolling beyond the three-mile limit, and the approaches to Delagoa Bay, and sea communication had to be maintained with Rhodesia, via Beira. Then there were also the prisoners of war to be watched and safe convey given to the transports over many miles of ocean. Wearisome and anxious work he calls it, requiring captains not afraid of responsibility and constant vigilance on the part of officers and men in every vessel. Yet despite these heavy strains upon its strength the squadron responded to the call of Sir George White on October 25 by sending to Ladysmith, within a hundred hours, a brigade, with spare guns from the arsenal, in time to save the situation. Then Captain Prothero, with 400 men and four guns, went to the assistance of Lord Methuen in his advance on the Modder River. And in February, when Sir Redvers Buller asked for a 6in. gun on the Tugela, Captain Scott sent it from the Terrible within twenty-four hours. At one time the Navy had on shore working with the Army no less than 1,600 officers and men and 46 guns. "A noteworthy service considering the other duties for which the fleet had to be kept in constant readiness and of the nature thereof only the Admiralty and the Naval Commander-in-Chief had full cognisance."

In an interesting letter on the fleets in the Far East, which recently appeared in the papers, a "Naval Officer" asserted that it is not our fleet which rules the seas in China, but the German. He supports his contention by pointing out that whereas the Germans have four first-class battleships and a very formidable armoured cruiser in those waters, we have but three battleships and three old-fashioned belted cruisers. The point thus made has been accepted as accurately describing the condition of affairs by more than one paper. It is, however, open to question. If we regard the matter from a strategic standpoint it is by no means clear that Germany rules the seas in China because she happens at the moment to have a preponderance of naval strength there. Knowing, as we do, the relative naval power of Germany and Great Britain, it must be obvious that if the former Power has strengthened her force abroad she has weakened it at home. Tactically she may have gained some advantage, but strategically the position remains unaltered. It is not until other factors are considered that we see the full significance of the move, and this is rather political than strategical. We reckon the strength of our Navy as against that of the two strongest Powers, and therefore so long as those Powers do not transfer their battle strength from European waters it behoves us to follow their example, or to materially weaken our position with regard to them. Presumably the strength of our China squadron is also relative to that of the two Powers in those waters with which we make the comparison at home. The discovery that the movement of a certain number of ships of a third Power into Asiatic waters can constitute a menace for which we are unprepared should open the eyes of the country to the necessity for revising the formula by which we now estimate the required proportion of our naval strength.

According to a paragraph in a contemporary there is a proposal on foot not to hold the Royal Military Tournament at the Agricultural Hall next year, but to hold instead a naval and military exhibition on an extensive scale. The idea, it is said, has been submitted by the executive of the tournament for the consideration of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, but no further steps have been taken. We trust that no further steps in this direction will be taken. If we are to have naval and military exhibitions it is far better that they should be separately organised and held. War Office administration has not been so uniformly successful that seamen would willingly trust to its tender mercies any undertaking in which they might be interested. Nor has the treatment of the Navy and naval charities by the executive of the tournament been of such a nature as to make it desirable from a naval point of view that this body should have the organisation of a naval exhibition. It is well to remember that, whereas the naval show at Chelsea was highly successful, the result of the military one that preceded it was not so satisfactory. The Navy does not begrudge the Army any help that it can give it at Islington, but if it is to have an exhibition it will prefer that the undertaking should be managed by its own officers, and that it should have undivided control and distribution of the proceeds, should there be any, for its own charities. It may seem ungracious to state these facts, but it is as well that they should be known.

The machine gun for naval purposes which Mr. James Judge, of Newcastle, is reported to have invented, is indeed of a very novel character. It would appear to be in the nature of a huge sling and is thus described by the patentee:—The gun is a patent centrifugal quick-firing machine gun; it is 5ft. high, and weighs about 5cwt. It is intended for battleship, earthworks, and garrison purposes. The motive power is electricity, transmitted to a motor attached to the side of the gun. The motor causes a disc to revolve at a very high rate of speed. The bullets, which are introduced into the interior of the disc at the axle, travel along curves in the interior to the circumference, and are there impelled through a barrel. It is claimed that this disc will rotate at the rate of 12,000 revolutions a minute, and will eject shots from the muzzle of the gun with an initial velocity of 2,000ft. per second. One of the chief characteristics of the gun is that it will maintain a continuous fire, and at one of the tests 18,000 rounds of shot were fired at the rate of 3,000 per minute. The gun has not yet been tried with the electrical motor which it is proposed on board ship would give the velocity required; but it is stated that a steel target was penetrated at 400 yards when the disc of the gun was revolving at a speed of 2,500 revolutions a minute. It will be interesting to learn what results are obtained when the gun is worked as its inventor intends, but we doubt its success.

The ships of the Channel Squadron carried out prize-firing during the early part of this month, and some details of the results have been unofficially published. A correspondent in the squadron states that the shooting of the flagship Majestic was extremely accurate, and that good shooting was also made by the Magnificent, Hannibal, Prince George, and Mars. With her 12in. guns the Majestic fired 28 rounds and scored 12 hits. From one of these guns 8 rounds were fired in 5 min. 20 sec., and 7 hits were registered. This performance was so highly creditable that the admiral specially commended the captain of the gun. With her 6in. quick firers, again, the Majestic is stated to have scored as many as 54 hits in 108 rounds, or an average of exactly 50 per cent. of actual hits. A still higher proportion of hits was made by the gunners of the Prince George with the same guns. This vessel secured 52 hits in 97 rounds, but in prize firing the number of hits is regarded as more important than the percentage, so that the Majestic will be held to have beaten the Prince George. If the other ships of the squadron have displayed anything approaching to this accuracy and rapidity of fire, the Channel Squadron should figure high on the list for the year 1900. Whilst the squadron was at Berehaven, by the way, the ships were coaled from an American vessel which had been ordered to Bantry by the Admiralty. It is not stated that the coal was American coal, but why should foreign steamers have to be engaged for such work?

The returns of naval courts-martial for last year, which have just been issued, contain some interesting facts. It appears that 198 courts-martial were held during the year in the fleet at home and abroad, while 277 courts-martial were held at the headquarters and the depot of the Royal Marines. The worst offences dealt with and those which are the more numerous are classified under the following heads:—Striking and attempting to strike a superior officer, threatening language to superior officer, wilful disobedience, behaving with contempt to superior officer, violence to superior officer, and insubordination. The total number of offences in these categories was 348, of which 96 were committed by petty officers and men of the seamen class at home and abroad, 89 by the non-seamen class, 66 by Marines afloat, 96 by Marines in barracks. The total number of punishments inflicted by sentence of court-martial was—in the fleet at home and abroad, 204; in Marine barracks, 277. In the former case 10 persons were punished with penal servitude; 96 with imprisonment and dismissal, with or without disgrace; and 93 to hard labour. In the case of the Marines on shore, 233 persons were punished with imprisonment, with or without hard labour, and 35 were discharged with ignominy. These facts and figures do not make a very good showing for the Marines, and we hope they must not be held to indicate that discipline in the Marine barracks has not been maintained recently at the high standard for which they are justly celebrated. Some further figures taken from this abstract of offences, &c., for the last ten years are not so reassuring as they might be. From this part of the returns we learn that in 1889, when 52,165 seamen and Marines were borne on the books of the Fleet afloat, 163 courts-martial were held, and the total number of offences against superior authority were 197; whereas in 1899, when the numbers borne were 93,466, the courts-martial were 152, and the offences of a similar nature 252. In the Marine barracks in the same year the numbers were:—1889, 6,090 men borne, 168 courts-martial, 40 offences against superior authority; 1899, 7,375 men borne, 277 courts-martial, and 96 offences against superior authority.

NAVAL ENGINEERS.

The scheme for improving the pay and position of naval engineer officers, a forecast of which was contained in the First Lord's memorandum on the introduction of the Navy Estimates, was promulgated on Saturday. The rank of staff engineer is to be abolished, but all officers now bearing that designation are to retain it until promotion to fleet engineer. The rank of fleet engineer is to be granted to officers now serving upon the attainment of eight years' seniority as chief engineer or as staff and chief engineer combined, but in the case of officers entered after April 1, promotion to fleet engineer is to be contingent not alone upon qualification by seniority but upon the recommendation of the engineer-in-chief and upon Admiralty approval. Engineers are to rank with lieutenants of less than eight years' seniority. The active list of engineer officers is to consist of an engineer-in-chief, 20 inspectors and chief inspectors of machinery, 313 fleet and chief engineers, 624 engineers and assistant engineers, and 100 artificer engineers.

Inspectors and chief inspectors of machinery will continue to draw the same pay as at present, but a new scale has been fixed for chief and fleet engineers who will commence at 16s. and rise to 30s. a day after 14 years' service in the higher rank. Engineers will commence at 10s. and rise to 12s. a day after eight years' service in that rank.

The pay and status of assistant engineers remain as at present. In future a chief engineer of eight years' seniority who has been passed over for promotion to fleet engineer will not be allowed to receive full pay in excess of 22s. a day. The half-pay of such officers is not to exceed 14s. a day, and they are to be optionally retired at the age of 45 with compulsory retirement at 50. Charge pay will be allowed at rates varying at the discretion of the Admiralty from 1s. to 5s. a day.

Half-charge pay is abolished in the fleet and Dockyard Reserve, and a fixed allowance of 1s. a day substituted. In ships of upwards of 3,000 i.h.p. the senior engineer under the chief will receive an allowance varying from 1s. to 2s. 6d. a day. No officer is to be prejudicially affected while holding his present appointment by the new regulations.

Navy Personal.

Admiral of the Fleet the Earl of Clanwilliam had the honour of dining with Her Majesty at Balmoral on Friday in last week.

Admiral Sir Richard Tracey, President of the Royal Naval College, Greenwich; Vice-Admiral C. M. Buckle; Captains the Hon. Algernon Littleton, Cecil Johnson, and Edward Pusey; and Lieut. Gerald Maltby attended the service at Christ Church, Piccadilly, on Saturday last in memory of the late Captain Sir Alfred Jephson.

Admiral Sir Charles Hotham hoists his flag as Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth on the 4th prox.

Vice-Admiral Sir William Kennedy did not hoist his flag as Commander-in-Chief at the Nore until eight o'clock in the evening of Tuesday last. The usual interchange of salutes between the outgoing and incoming flag officers was therefore dispensed with. In the present state of the flag list Sir William will be promoted Admiral in January, 1902.

Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson, commanding the Channel Squadron, entertained Captains H. J. May, of the Mars, and Randolph Foote, of the Repulse, at a farewell dinner last week on board the Majestic, on the occasion of those officers withdrawing from his command to take up appointments, respectively, at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, and the Ordnance Department. The Rear-Admiral, Captains, and Senior Commanders serving under the Vice-Admiral were present.

Vice-Admiral Lord Walter Kerr, Senior Naval Lord, attains the age of sixty-one on Friday next, and Vice-Admiral Alfred Dale will be sixty on the previous Wednesday. On Monday next Rear-Admirals Burges Watson, Admiral Superintendent at Malta, and Sir Baldwin Walker, Bart., both attain the age of fifty-four.

Vice-Admiral Sir John Fisher, Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Squadron, very wisely calls the attention of executive officers, in the following order, to the necessity of a thorough knowledge of signalling.—"Responsibility cannot be transferred to signalmen for any errors, as officers are expected to be able to verify important signals for themselves, if necessary, before they are acted upon. If they have not made themselves properly acquainted with the use of signals they must take the consequences." Unfortunately even in these days, the custom of officers calling out "What's that, signalman?" when a signal is hoisted from the flagship, too frequently obtains. A thorough acquaintance with this important science is a necessity in steam tactics, and will be emphasised when the day of battle comes.

Vice-Admiral Sir Frederick Bedford, Commander-in-Chief of the North American and West Indian station, concluded his visit to the United States on Thursday in last week, and left Bar Harbour, Maine, in the Crescent, with other vessels of his squadron, accompanied by the North Atlantic division of the United States fleet. On parting company from the latter the usual international salutes were exchanged. Sir Frederick arrived at St. John's, New Brunswick, the following day, and has spent the greater part of this week at ports in the Bay of Fundy.

Vice-Admiral Sir Henry Stephenson represented the Prince of Wales, Grand Prior of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, at the memorial service on Saturday last, in Christ Church, Piccadilly, of the late Captain Sir Alfred Jephson, who was general secretary of that order.

Rear-Admiral Sir Robert Harris, Commander-in-Chief of the Cape of Good Hope and West African station, arrived at Delagoa Bay in the Doris on Friday in last week, in consequence of the recent development of South African affairs at Lorenzo Marques.

Captain R. S. Rolleston, of the Tribune, accompanied by the Indefatigable and Quail, arrived at Bermuda on Monday last from Bar Harbour, Maine, having parted company from the Commander-in-Chief outside that port on conclusion of the visit of the British Squadron to the United States.

Captain John Denison, who recently returned in the Melpomene from the East Indies, assumes command of the Niobe on the 2nd prox. in place of Captain A. L. Winsloe, who has served nearly two and a half years in that cruiser, but was retained beyond the usual period of Channel service in consequence of being detached to South Africa. Captain Winsloe is mentioned as Commodore Poë's successor in the Training Squadron.

Captain E. P. Jones, relieved in command of the Forte, at Sierra Leone, by Captain Robert Sparkes, arrived at Plymouth on Saturday last in the African steamship Fantee, and will commission the Gladiator at Portsmouth on the 2nd prox. for the Mediterranean Station. This gallant officer, whose distinguished services in command of the Naval Brigade in Northern Natal were highly commended by General Sir Redvers Buller, was accorded a most enthusiastic welcome on arriving at his home in Petersfield, Hants, on Monday last.

Captain C. H. Cochran, who recently paid off the Pegasus at Chatham, relieves Captain F. O. Pike in command of the Minerva on Tuesday next, when the latter officer completes two years' service in the Training Squadron.

Captain R. K. McAlpine, of the Hyacinth, will not be ready to leave Devonport until the 5th prox., when he proceeds to Portsmouth to place himself at the disposal of the Admiralty Committee on Ships' Boilers. During the various trials of this cruiser under steam a long series of experiments in wireless telegraphy will be carried out.

Captain A. A. C. Galloway, of the Scylla, left the Nore on Sunday last for the Cape of Good Hope, with officers and men to re-commission the Barracouta at Simon's Town, and will return home with the paid-off crew of the latter vessel.

Captain Montagu Burrows (retired), who has held the Chichele Professorship of Modern History in the University of Oxford since 1862, recently resigned that important position. Entering the Royal Navy in 1832 as Cadet, he became Sub-Lieut. 1839, and the following year was present at the bombardment of St. Jean d'Acre, for which he received the Syrian and Turkish medals. In 1843 he attained Lieutenant's rank, and became a gunnery officer. From 1847 to 1852 he was one of the gunnery staff of the Excellent, and obtained his commission in the latter year, after which his connection with the Navy ceased, and he commenced a University career. He progressively became M.A. of Oxford, Fellow of All Souls' College, and member of the Hebdomadal Council of that University, and was an honorary M.A. of Cambridge University. His literary works include the "Life of Admiral Lord Hawke," and as he served several years under the late Admiral Sir Henry Chads, while captain of the Excellent, he contributed a short history of that distinguished officer's services. Captain Burrows is now eighty-two years of age, and few, if any, naval officers have had such an exceptional career. After twenty years' naval experience he laid aside his sword for the scholar's robe, and ten years later secured one of the most coveted posts at the great university. Of his contemporaries in the Gunnery School, nearly half a century ago, there are still living Admirals Field, M.P., and T. Le H. Ward, Vice-Admiral C. M. Buckle, Rear-Admiral J. H. Bushnell, and Captains H. Rogers, W. Dawson, and Frederick Harvey, all of whom were under his instruction.

Captain Sir Richard Poore, Bart., of the Royal Naval Barracks, Devonport, is no longer embarrassed with the duties of flag-captain at that port, in addition to those of the General Depot, the Admiralty having attached Captain Gerald Langley, of the Nile, portguard-ship, to the staff of the Commander-in-Chief, the same as obtains at the Nore. This arrangement was suggested some time back, as it was manifestly out of place that an officer administering such a large naval establishment as that at Keyham should be required to oscillate daily between it and Mount Wise, as Chief-of-the-Staff to the Port Admiral. The only drawback to the new arrangement is that when the portguard-ship is away the Commander-in-Chief has no flag-captain. This has been met at Portsmouth by placing the latter officer in independent command of the Victory, and the same method should be applied to the Western command.

Lieut. E. La T. Leatham left Southampton in the Union Castle steamship Dunvegan Castle for the Cape of Good Hope to assume command of the Partridge.

Deputy-Inspector-General H. C. Woods, of the Victoria and Albert, obtains promotion shortly before compulsory retirement, the same as his predecessor, Inspector-General D. McEwan. The medical officer whom the latter relieved was the late Inspector-General J. M. Minter, who joined the Royal Yacht in 1855, and was promoted Deputy-Inspector-General 1859. In 1870, Her Majesty was desirous that Dr. Minter, then senior of his rank, should be promoted, but unfortunately the recently introduced Childers' scheme barred the way, as one of the conditions for promotion to the highest inspectorial grade was foreign service as a Deputy Inspector-General. This necessitated his appointment to a foreign hospital, and the following year he obtained advancement. The regulations have since then been adjusted to meet special cases. During the past forty-five years only three medical officers have served in the Royal yacht, viz., Dr. Minter, sixteen years; Dr. McEwan, a similar period; and the present holder, thirteen years.

Staff-Surgeon C. Marsh Beadnell, late of the Powerful, has added to the Museum at Haslar Hospital several interesting specimens of the effect of bullets on the human skull, during the American War, in the Philippines—where the medical officers of the Powerful most gallantly aided the wounded; also valuable contributions obtained during his recent important services with the Naval Brigade and troops in South Africa.

ROYAL MARINES.

Lieut.-Colonel Henry C. Eagles (Plymouth) is in command this week of a brigade of about 1,000 men of the Militia battalions and Reserves in the Western District, encamped at Yennadon Down, Dartmoor, for field manoeuvres. The force returns to garrison to-day.

Lieut.-Colonel George T. Onslow, on special service, South Africa, is about to return home.

Major John Bernard, Adjutant 4th Middlesex Volunteer Rifle Corps, and Major H. S. N. White, Staff Officer, have qualified in tactics for promotion.

The officers of the Chatham Division are about to place a memorial tablet in the Dockyard Chapel to their late commandant, Colonel F. V. G. Bird, who died at headquarters in December last. His grave is already decorated.

THE CHINA CRISIS.

Sunday, Sept. 16.

A punitive expedition left Peking for Pao-ting-fu last Friday. Another expedition has left Tien-tsin to disperse the Boxers in the district south-west of the city.

Monday, Sept. 17.

A despatch from Peking, dated Sept. 7, states that the foreign Ministers have held a meeting and decided that they had no power to treat with Prince Ching. The generals also are of opinion that they cannot treat with him. Sir Robert Hart has told the generals that they must be prepared for future hostilities, that Chinese troops are concentrating and moving on the line of communications between Peking and Tien-tsin, and that he thought further trouble may be looked for by November.

Capt. Hyer, with 60 men of the 9th U.S.A. Cavalry, was attacked about 20 miles from Peking by 500 Boxers, and routed them, killing 25 and capturing some rifles and treasure. There were no casualties on the American side. A squadron of the 6th U.S.A. Cavalry has been despatched to relieve a native Christian village which has been attacked by Boxers 46 miles to the south-east. There have been several attacks on small parties between Tung-Chau and Hsiang-ho-hsien where British and American troops are stationed, and many Boxers have been killed.

The Russians have received news of reverses sustained by their troops in Manchuria. Two hundred miles of railway have been destroyed and the stations burned. There has been much fighting and many Russians have been killed. Three regiments of Russian troops have left Peking to make the long overland march to Manchuria.

Fifteen hundred Germans, including a field battery, under Gen. von Hoepfner, have left Peking for the south. The object in view is to take Siang-hsang, on the Pao-ting-fu line, where there are supposed to be many Boxers.

The expedition to Ti-liu met with no opposition, and the city was occupied without a shot having been fired. Three columns converged on Ti-liu. After a two days' march they found the city had surrendered to one officer and eight men of the Bengal Lancers. Gen. Dorward ordered the town to be burned after it had been thoroughly looted. A village passed en route made a peace offering to the expedition. The majority of the villages were left undisturbed. The Boxers in the Ti-liu region have apparently been disbanded, and the whole country is quiet.

Brig.-Gen. Horne Campbell will command the British troops at Tien-tsin. Gen. Dorward is going to Peking.

The transport Landora, leaving Calcutta for Hong Kong, takes the headquarters and a wing of the Alwar Imperial Infantry and the 3rd Native general hospital, and the Ludiana, the right wing of the Alwar Infantry and C section Native field hospital.

The transport Sumatra takes the Staff of the Third Brigade and a wing of the 6th Jats, the 2nd Native field hospital, B section of the same, and a field audit office; the Nebuudda a wing of the 6th Jats, section of the Native field hospital, and postal establishment; the Pundia a wing of the 4th Punjabis, the 51st Native field hospital, and signalling units; the Lalpoora a wing of the 4th Punjabis and a section of the 51st Native field hospital. These troops are going to Wei-hai-wei, where the Nairung has proceeded with a wing of the 20th Punjabis and a section of the Native field hospital.

The transport Wardha, with Gen. Cummins and the staff of the 4th Brigade, the Bikanir Infantry, the 15th British field hospital, advance depot, and litho-printing section, has arrived at Hong Kong.

The hospital ship Maine and the transport Salamis, with the Australian Naval Brigade have arrived at Wei-hai-wei. The latter will proceed immediately to Taku. The force which guarded the Legations at Peking and all the marines who were sent from here have returned.

Gen. Voyron, the French Commander-in-Chief, has arrived at Shanghai on his way north, and inspected the French troops landed there. He proceeds to Nagasaki, where he will be met by a warship, which will convey him to Taku.

Tuesday, Sept. 18.

On Tuesday the generals had a conference at Peking, which lasted four hours, on the main topic of the day—how best to encourage the Chinese to return to work. It was agreed that looting should cease, that forage parties should be accompanied by an officer, and that receipts should be given for all forage.

The Secretary of State for India received yesterday the following telegram from the Officer Commanding the Lines of Communication, Taku:—

"Regret to report that serious accident has happened at Tung Chow to fatigue party destroying gunpowder.

"Royal Welsh Fusiliers: Dangerously wounded, four; severely wounded, six.

"7th Rajputs: Killed, one; dangerously wounded, one; slightly wounded, two.

"1st Sikhs: Dangerously wounded, nine; killed, one slightly wounded, one.

"Chinese Regiment of Infantry: Severely wounded, Captain Hill; dangerously wounded, 11 men.

"Repeated to Adjt.-Gen. in India—Campbell, Col., Officer Commanding Lines of Communication."

The following telegram has been received by the Secretary of State for India from Sir A. Gaselee, dated Peking (via Taku), Sept. 15, received in London Sept. 17, 7.10 p.m.:—

"Regret to report serious gunpowder accident at Tung Chow yesterday evening. Details as to how accident occurred not yet received, but believed to have taken place while destroying powder found in Chinese magazine. Casualties as follows:—

"Royal Welsh Fusiliers: Dangerously wounded, four; severely, six.

"7th Bengal Infantry: Dangerously wounded, two; slightly, two.

"1st Sikhs: Dangerously wounded, ten; slightly, one.

"Chinese Regiment: Captain Hill, severely wounded; eleven men dangerously wounded.

"Total: British officer, one; native officer, one; rank and file, thirty-six.

"Of this number following had died up to 5 a.m. this morning:—

"Royal Welsh Fusiliers: Two.

"7th Bengal Infantry: One.

"1st Sikhs: Nine.

"Chinese Regiment: Four.

"Total: Sixteen.

"Names of British will follow as soon as received.

"Captain Hill's condition hopeful this morning."

Sharp engagement is reported to have taken place between one company of the 14th U.S.A. Infantry and 2,000 Boxers at Mo-tao, on the Peking road. The Americans made a gallant stand, and a detachment of the Bengal Lancers, who happened to be in the vicinity, hearing the firing, came to the rescue and charged the Boxers in the rear. The enemy were routed, and left 200 dead on the field. There were no American casualties.

The Germans report an engagement with a heavy force of Boxers west of Peking on the 13th, in which they lost 20 men.

A British battery and 200 Australians have arrived at Tien-tsin, where Li Hung Chang is also reported to have arrived.

Wednesday, Sept. 19.

The following circular telegram has been issued to the German Embassies in London, Paris, St. Petersburg, Rome, Washington, and Vienna, and the Legation at Tokio:—

"The Government of the Emperor holds that as a preliminary to entering into diplomatic relations with the Chinese Government those persons must be delivered up who have been proved to be the original and real instigators of the outrages against international law which have occurred in Peking. The number of those who were merely instruments in carrying out the outrages is too great. Wholesale executions would be contrary to the civilised conscience. The circumstances are such that the group of leaders cannot be completely ascertained, but a few among them whose guilt is notorious should be delivered up and punished.

"The representatives of the Powers in Peking are in a position in this matter to give or bring forward convincing evidence. Less importance attaches to the number of the punished than to their character as chief instigators or leaders. The Government believes that it can count upon the unanimity of all the Cabinets in regard to this point, inasmuch as indifference to the idea of just atonement would be equivalent to a repetition of the crime.

"The Government proposes, therefore, that the Cabinets concerned should instruct their representatives in Peking to indicate those leading Chinese personages as to whose guilt in instigating or perpetrating the outrages all doubt is excluded.

(Signed)

"VON BUELOW."

A force of 300 American cavalry is reported to have left Peking on Friday on an expedition to the north-east, the immediate object of the expedition being to rescue Christians who are in danger at the hands of the Boxers, but the country will at the same time be thoroughly reconnoitred. It is expected that the force will be absent ten days. Other expeditions have been planned, but the general sentiment is opposed to these excursions, as they keep the country in a disturbed condition. Provost-marshal's courts have been opened by all the nations. The Germans have made robbery a capital offence.

The German steamer Sachsen, with Field-Marshal Count von Waldersee and staff, arrived at Hong Kong on Tuesday last. Count von Waldersee landed, and was received by a guard of honour of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers. The Field-Marshal paid official calls at Government House and Headquarters House. He left again for Shanghai and Taku on board the German cruiser Hertha.

The transport Sumatra, with the remainder of the 3rd Indian Brigade, has left Hong Kong for Wei-Hai-Wei.

The following despatch, dated Tien-tsin, Sept. 17, has been received at Berlin:—

"Gen. Lessel has arrived here, where three battalions of infantry, two squadrons of cavalry, two batteries of artillery, and a company of pioneers are temporarily assembled. The general received a cordial welcome from the Russian Commodore Domiziroff. A guard of honour was furnished by the second squadron of the Priansurski Dragoons."

Thursday, Sept. 20.

The following telegrams from Sir A. Gaselee have been received through the India Office:—

"Saturday.

"Casualties in Tung Chow explosion. Condition:—

"Latest report states that Capt. Hill, Chinese Regiment, is badly burnt over chest, arms, and legs, but hopes of his recovery. All his burns very superficial."

The German Consul at Hong Kong states that Field-Marshal Count von Waldersee, before leaving, expressed himself as much touched by the cordial reception which had been accorded to him by the Colonial Government, as well as by the population of Hong Kong. The British steamer Sicilian, one of the largest steamers that has ever visited Odessa, left that port on Wednesday for the Far East with 2,800 troops on board. The force consists of the composite battalions of the newly-formed Siberian Rifle Regiments.

Friday, Sept. 21.

We are informed by the Foreign Office that Sir Claude Macdonald's health having suffered from the prolonged strain incident to his duties as British Minister in Peking since 1896, arrangements were made in April last at Sir Claude's request for his transfer to Tokio, where the duties as Minister are of a less exhausting nature. The change was necessarily delayed by the siege of the Legations at Peking, but it is now held to be desirable, on medical grounds alone, that Sir Claude Macdonald should come away on leave, and Sir Ernest Satow has been instructed to undertake the care of the Peking Legation if Sir Claude Macdonald's wishes are unchanged.

The Allies attacked the Pei-tang forts at daybreak on Thursday. The forts command the entrance to the River Pei tang, which flows into the Gulf of Pechili, about eight miles north of the mouth of the Pei-ho. The forts, two in number, stand on either side of the river, and are rather conspicuous objects on the low, flat shore. They are five miles above the river bar, which has a least depth of 2ft.

Admiral Seymour, on the Alacrity, left Shanghai on Wednesday for Wei-hai-wei and Taku.

The Secretary of State for India has received the following telegram, dated Tien-tsin, Sept. 12:—

"Occupied (?) headquarters of Boxers at Tai-lin, 25 miles from Tien-tsin, on morning of Sept. 10, with following force:—1,500 (?) British, 400 Japanese, 200 Russians, 200 Americans, 1,000 Italians, without opposition; enemy having fled to Shengfang. Tai-liu destroyed; but large neighbouring city of Ching-hai spared on condition that Mr. Green, missionary, two ladies, and two children, known to be hiding in Hsinan-hai, be brought in safety to Tien-tsin. Mandarin accepted condition. Shengfang, 30 miles, is last Boxers' stronghold near Tien-tsin."

The German column, under Gen. von Hoepfner, was joined at Liu-kon-cha by a squadron of Bengal Lancers, and attacked the walled city of Lianghsiang at nine o'clock on the morning of Sept. 11. The town was full of Boxers and Chinese Imperial troops. After the German artillery had shelled the town, the gates were blown up with dynamite and the troops rushed in. Sharp fighting ensued in the streets. No quarter was given, and 500 Chinese were killed. The column returned to Peking after having burned the town. Only one casualty is reported.

Navy Foreign.

It is interesting to know that on receiving the report of Admiral Courrejolles concerning Sir Edward Seymour's march, the French Minister of Marine immediately telegraphed to the Admiral asking him to send a list of those deserving reward. Admiral Courrejolles thereupon cabled his suggestions, in relation both to the operations at Taku and to those of the column under Admiral Seymour. The promotions of officers have not, we believe, yet been gazetted, but are to be immediately forthcoming, while those of the men have already been announced. Two have been raised to the rank of chief warrant officer, and others to lower ratings, and it is proposed that several shall receive the témoignage de satisfaction. This promptitude on the part of M. de Lannessan has given great satisfaction.

We recently published extracts from the report made by Captain de Marolles, but some other details will be interesting. He says that on June 16 it was extremely difficult for Admiral Seymour to decide whether to attempt to reach Peking by the river or the railway. On the 19th the commanding officers of the Allied force were called to discuss future movements, for the situation had then grown so bad that it was no longer a question of the river or the railway, certain of the detachments, including the French, being short of provisions, while others had expended almost all their ammunition. The French had no wounded, so that their junk, during the retirement, was less encumbered than that of the other contingents, and they could convey all their equipment in it, while the gun was drawn up on the back of an ass. On June 21 all the commanding officers were summoned for the last time, after which Sir Edward Seymour took counsel only with the captains. It was on that day that the long line of Chinese horsemen appeared, and Captain de Marolles suggested to the Admiral that the village in front should be seized before they could occupy it. The French dashed forward, he says, and were before the Americans, who had halted. Admiral Seymour was at their head, but the distance was great. "Il est vite dépassé, et d'un seul bond, malgré une vive fusillade, nous entrons dans le village en criant 'Hourra!'" Captain de Marolles says that two other villages were captured in the same way, with the bayonet, the French seamen being in the first line with the Americans and some British. On the 22nd food was very much reduced, but it was important to capture the arsenal of Hsiku, and the report describes the operation. On the 24th the Admiral requested the French to make a reconnaissance, saying that they had proved "the fastest," and on the next day the rescue column appeared. We have already published the conclusion of Captain de Marolles' report containing his special allusions to the great services of Sir Edward Seymour.

It will be remembered that the German Emperor, after the assassination of his minister in Peking, offered a reward of 1,000 taels for every European then in Peking, who should be brought back safe and sound. The German papers have been making a calculation of the sum which the Emperor will have to pay from his private purse, if his promise is taken au pied de la lettre. Their estimates differ considerably, but the Völkische Zeitung calculates that the sum should be 5,400,000 marks, while the Berliner Tageblatt thinks that 3,000,000 should suffice. All the German papers agree that, if the money is paid, it should be reserved for the men of the German contingent.

Some further particulars have been published concerning the French Navy estimates for 1901, which have already, according to the custom, been laid upon the table of the Chamber. The total outlay intended is 329,286,699 francs, being an increase, as compared with the expenditure this year, of 16,510,367 francs. The larger proportion of the outlay will be devoted to naval construction, to the defences of the ports, and to the personnel. The constitution of the squadrons will not differ greatly from the present organisation. The battleships in the Mediterranean will be the same, but towards the end of the year the new armoured cruiser Jeanne d'Arc will replace the Chanzy. No sea-going torpedo boats will be attached to the squadron, it having been arranged henceforth to substitute destroyers of the Hallebarde type for boats of the class. The coast defence squadron will be unchanged, but will lose the torpedo transport Foudre. In the Channel the Amiral Baudin will be replaced by the new battleship Iéna. The number of cruisers will be the same, but the Guichen has already gone to China, and the D'Estrees to the Atlantic station. Here again the sea-going boats are to be replaced by destroyers. The Northern squadron will remain in full commission only for six months, as in 1900. There are some changes contemplated on foreign stations, but numerically the divisions will remain the same. In the Indian Ocean, however, the changing of ships will give a distinct increase of strength, the old wooden D'Estaing and Nielly being replaced by the new second and third-class cruisers Oatinat and Infernet. A considerable number of vessels will be under trial during the year, the principal of them being the Henri Quatre and Suffren, the armoured cruisers Jeanne d'Arc, Dupetit-Thouars, Gueydon, and Montcalm, and the first-class cruiser Jurien de la Gravière.

The inhabitants of Connecticut have found a cause for discontent. As is well known, the new American ships bear the names of various states of the Union, such as Alabama, Georgia, Maine, New Jersey, and Ohio. The people of Connecticut are not pleased that the name of their state should be given merely to a coast defence ship of 3,000 tons, and they have taken action to represent their grievance to the Naval Department. They appear to have won their way, and it is said that the Connecticut, which is building at the Bath Ironworks, received the number "8" pending the decision as to the new name to be given to her. Arkansas and Florida might well feel the same grievance, for ships of the same class have been named after them.

The influence of Germany is very great with the Sublime Porte, and the gun contract for the re-organisation of the fleet has been gained by the Krupp works, although some of the ships are to be rebuilt at Messrs. Ansaldo's yard. The total number of guns ordered (quickfiring) is 208 distributed as follows:—Four of 8.2in.; fifty-two of 5.9in.; fifty-six of 2.9in.; eighty of 2.2in.; and sixteen of 1.8in. All are to be of the best nickel steel, each gun with a nickel shield, hydraulic loading gear in the case of the larger guns, and all the latest appliances and fittings of the Krupp system. Ammunition is also to be supplied, to the extent of 100 rounds each for the large guns and 300 rounds for the smaller guns, all with smokeless powder. The guns are to be delivered within twenty-two months from the date of the contract, and the cost, including expenses for trial, and expenses of transport from Essen to Genoa, or any other port to be decided upon, will be £T648,000. It appears that the two torpedo boats, not destroyers, which are being bought from Messrs. Ansaldo, were built for the Italian Government and not taken over for some reason not explained. They are to steam at 26 knots, and the price is £T83,600.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The 7th Bombay Infantry is being converted into a Pioneer regiment, and will in future be linked with the 28th Bombay Pioneers.

COLONIALS AND THE WAR.—Lord Roberts lately issued an order from Pretoria to this effect:—

"The Secretary of State for War has communicated to me Her Majesty's wish that before returning to their respective colonies, representative contingents of each colony should visit the Mother country, probably to be reviewed personally by her, and receive a banner to be presented to each contingent, to be held in future by the corps to which it belongs. Contingents from South Africa are naturally included in this invitation. Please communicate this to all officers commanding the colonial contingents within your command, and telegraph me as soon as possible the number of men who would wish to avail themselves of this offer, naming regiments. Will probably be necessary to limit the number, but I cannot decide on that until I know the number likely to accept."

SUGGESTED SOLDIERS' HOTEL.—Writing from Busbridge Hall, Godalming, Lady Hope makes an earnest appeal for the establishment of a Soldiers' Hotel or Central Home in London. Now that the wounded and invalided men are returning from South Africa in large numbers the want of such an institution is being acutely felt. A very large proportion of those sent home partially recover on the voyage, and do not require or do not enter the distant convalescent homes. To quote Lady Hope:—

"Good food is absolutely essential to the present and future health of these men, while the greatest danger they can have is the continual offer of drink, which is the general hospitality shown them in our streets. Surely, when the whole country is ringing with their deeds of bravery and every heart is beating with gratitude to our soldiers, we might be permitted to offer them something better than this. It is said that 20,000 men have already returned on furlough, and many more will probably arrive during the next few months. Long before this war commenced an urgent need was felt for a Soldiers' Hotel in London, for at all times of the year men are passing through the metropolis. Now the want of such a place is more urgently felt than ever before. It is not a denominational home that is required, but a place for lodging, meals, and reception at the lowest possible cost, and worked on the best lines. If your readers would help me to supply this most pressing need I would immediately take a house and fit it up, so that they need not be turned away to find a shelter as best they can in the ever-ready public-house or in the worst haunts, where they are fleeced of the little money they have."

THE War Office has decided to experiment with homing pigeons as a means of communication, and has given orders for a properly-equipped loft to be erected in Aldershot. This will be under the charge of an officer who has taken some interest in the matter.

A PASTEUR Institute has been opened in India, under Government control, and all officers and soldiers bitten by rabid dogs will accordingly be sent for treatment to Kussowlee in future. The regulations authorising the despatch of officers and men to Paris has therefore been cancelled.

PICKERING'S

"KHAKI-BLANCO"

For cleaning and renovating "Khaki" Accoutrements, Helmets, Shoes, etc.

Everybody knows the merits of Pickering's Blanco for whitening all articles of Buckskin Leather, or White Canvas, and now Pickering's have met the want of the day by introducing "Khaki-Blanco," a similar preparation to Blanco, but of a "Khaki" colour; it is prepared in a most careful manner to ensure an Evenness of Colour, and contains nothing at all injurious to any "Khaki" article to which it may be applied. "Khaki" cleaned regularly with this article keeps a good colour and always looks like new.

White belts and other military equipment, buckskin and canvas shoes, etc., can be made khaki colour by the application of "Khaki-Blanco," and this will in no wise interfere with their being re-whitened with Blanco at any future time.

Regimental and Presentation Plate.
 "Messrs. E. & E. Emanuel, 3, The Hard, Portsea, repaired the whole of the plate of the 2nd. Bn. the Wiltshire Regiment on return from India. The work was done in a most satisfactory and artistic manner. The cost compared favourably with the estimates received from other firms.—P. M. C. 2nd Wilt's Regiment. August, 1896."

Watch and Clock Makers.
 Report.
 "I cannot speak too highly of the gold watch. No 17,179 of your make, and which I purchased from you in January, 1875. It was my constant companion during the winter 1875-76 in the Arctic and accompanied me sledging. It was about the best, if not the very best, in the Discovery and since my return home continues to perform equally satisfactorily."—M.D., D.L.H., R.N.

THE PROSPECTS OF PEACE.

WHEN Lieut.-General Pole-Carew, at the head of the Guards' Brigade, occupied Komati Poort unopposed on Monday morning last the curtain fell on the South African War. A scene of destruction, wanton burning, and desolation awaited him, but there was found no longer any enemy to fight. The shattered remnants of the army recently led by Louis Botha, and which had never successfully rallied after the signal defeat inflicted by Lord Roberts at Dalmanutha on the 26th and 27th ult., had passed into Portuguese territory to the number of nearly 3,000 men, and surrendered. These were for the most part the foreign mercenaries who had formed the infantry portion of the Transvaal forces, and who will now be returned to their respective countries through the friendly assistance of the Portuguese authorities at Lorenzo Marques. The thought of restored peace in South Africa, after well-nigh twelve months of unceasing warfare, is now uppermost in men's minds. An official declaration that the state of war has passed, and that a condition of peace has supervened, and must be respected, may shortly be looked for, to be followed by the gradual home-coming of a portion of the splendid and seasoned force now in the field. We do not, however, lose sight of the fact that there are still marauding bands to be pursued and effectually crushed ere the country can regain the sense of actual peace and of real security, and until the subjugation of all parts of the new colonies has been assured no considerable reduction should be made in the regular forces now in occupation. Recent operations, both those culminating in the clearing and occupying of the entire railway line from Pretoria to Komati Poort, as well as the minor operations elsewhere, have, despite the absence of heavy fighting, maintained the interest felt in the waning campaign. This is mainly due to the speed and dash of the movements. As a result, enormous quantities of cattle, sheep, waggons and stores, locomotives and rolling stock, with many prisoners and rifles, and much ammunition, have fallen into our hands. Probably the most important of the captures were the locomotives and rolling stock of the Transvaal railways. Of the latter sufficient to cover eight miles of the line were found on the Selati branch railway alone. Lord Roberts, in a despatch from Pretoria on Tuesday, enumerated in detail certain Boer ordnance—field-pieces and machine guns—found by General Ian Hamilton in the Crocodile River near Hectorspruit, most of which had been destroyed. Among them were two 12prs. lost by Q Battery, Royal Horse Artillery, and one 7pr. mountain gun, probably captured at Nicholson's Nek. Pole-Carew was reported on Monday to have found one "Long Tom" (98pr.), and one Creusot gun—both destroyed—at Komati Poort. We are still, however, far from knowing what has become of the bulk of the enemy's powerful ordnance.

On the 20th inst. Lord Roberts was at Nelspruit, whence he reported that in Delarey's camp 300 burghers were detained as prisoners for refusing to break their oath and take up arms again. We record this fact with satisfaction. On the same day he moved his headquarters to Waterval Boven, and reported the advance eastwards of Pole-Carew's and Ian Hamilton's columns over a roadless and waterless district, covered with thick bush, through which the troops had to cut their way for nineteen miles. On the 21st he was again at Pretoria, and reported that Lord Methuen, on the 19th, when marching towards Schweizer Reneke, invested by the enemy, near the western border, captured a Boer convoy with immense droves of cattle and sheep, and, amongst other spoil, found a 15pr. gun lost by the ill-fated 14th Field Battery at Colenso. A Reuter's despatch from Vryburg states that General Settle, with 7,000 men, has defeated the Boers at Schweizer Reneke with heavy loss, and relieved the garrison.

Sir Redvers Buller remained until Sunday in camp at Spitz Kop, replenishing his supplies. Small parties of burghers had surrendered to him there, as well as at Devil's Knuckles and Lydenburg. On Sunday he moved towards Sabi Drift, whither Dundonald's cavalry had preceded him, as Viljoen with a force was in position on the north bank of the river. This force, consisted in part of the mounted burghers who declined to cross the frontier at Komati Poort with the mercenaries, and who worked northward following the Selati Railway. Buller has since arrived at Macmac River and the eastern side of the Burgher's Pass, the enemy's guns having been easily silenced by the Royal Horse Artillery under Major Paget. General Paget and Colonel Plumer scored a brilliant success on Saturday at Eland's River Station, which was attacked by Com-mandants Erasmus and Grobler. The little garrison, consisting of two companies of the 1st Batn. Connaught Rangers and about 150 infantry and cavalry details, repulsed the enemy unaided. While the burghers were engaged in the attack on the post General Paget, who had moved from Hebron, west of Pretoria, on the 20th, and was joined by Plumer en route, made a forced march of twenty-six miles by night, surprising their laager, and capturing it, with twelve prisoners, rifles, and ammunition, besides numerous flocks and herds. The affair was both brilliant in execution and complete in itself. General Paget has since granted Erasmus an armistice for five days to satisfy himself of the collapse of the Boer army under Botha. If satisfied of the truth he will surrender. At the time of the assault on Eland's River post a party attacked Bronkhorst Spruit Station, twelve miles to the east, but was also repulsed by its garrison. A centre of disturbance still exists in the neighbourhood of Lindley, in the Orange River Colony, where De Wet, with such parties of irreconcilable or commandeered burghers as he has been able to keep around him, moves restlessly about. He was reported on Wednesday to be south-west of Koppies Station, nearly forty miles north of Kroonstad. The capture of De Wet is essential to the peace of the new colony, and a strong-mounted, lightly-equipped force, under Colonels De Lisle and Dalgety, is closely pursuing him. Each man has two horses, the gun teams are doubled, and the transport consists of Cape carts. We may surely hope that an arrangement so excellent will be crowned with success; but unless De Wet can be taken by surprise his capture is unlikely, as there are too many chances still in favour of his escape. General Baden-Powell has been summoned by Lord Roberts from Cape Town to Pretoria, with reference, probably, to the formation of the new police force to be raised and commanded by him. General Knox, who is still vigilant near Kroonstad, reported an engagement on the 19th on the road from that place to Lindley. General Hunter was at Senekal on Sunday, in communication with General Campbell at Bethlehem, and with General MacDonald. General Rundle was also at Senekal. General Brabant, with his Colonial Division, was, on Saturday, moving between Heilbron and Lindley. These various commanders occupy positions tending strategically to envelop any Boer force concentrated in the neighbourhood of Lindley. General Hart continues to keep the Boers who are cattle-lifting along the Gats Rand, near Potchefstroom, on the run.

The close of this arduous campaign falls most opportunely. The Mother country, now facing the ordeal of a General Election, demands that for a time the best energies of her sons should be devoted at home to the important issues at stake affecting the settlement of South Africa. The Transvaal has been swept from west to east. Komati Poort is held by Generals Pole-Carew and Ian Hamilton, with 9,000 men, who now draw their supplies from Lorenzo Marques. Lord

Roberts has all but closed the brilliant chapter in British military history in which he will be known for all time as the chief actor, and the South African ports will soon be astir with the bustle of departing troops. Already the movement from the front has begun, and before November 5 arrives the City Imperial Volunteers will receive in London the admiring recognition due to excellent service and brilliant performances in the field. Canada, too, will shortly greet her returning sons whose achievements in the war have been second to none. Major Pelletier, with sixteen officers and 319 men of the Royal Canadian Regiment, left the front for Cape Town on Wednesday to embark for their northern home. These troops will carry with them the good wishes of the entire army with which they have so gallantly served. It is entirely fitting that the Volunteers and Colonials, who so nobly responded to the call to arms at much personal inconvenience, should be freed from their engagement at the earliest possible moment, for there is nothing to be gained by keeping them longer under arms now that the most serious phases of the war are a record of the past.

THE FRENCH MANŒUVRES.

THE Times published, on the 21st inst., a telegram from its correspondent at the French Manœuvres, stating that the "stamina of her troops will avail France little as long as her military training is based on theories which, in face of modern armaments, are obsolete." This somewhat sweeping generalisation was unfortunately copied by nearly every evening and provincial paper in the country. It has to be remembered that the question of French tactical theories, which, to the great surprise of all French officers, this correspondent so confidently condemns, are identical in principle with those of the Germans, the Russians, the Austrians, and, in fact, of every civilised nation in the world, including, of course, the Japanese. All these nations in turn have adopted these fundamental propositions, which, in the opinion of their most experienced leaders will be found to hold good in war. The Times correspondent objects to attacks conducted on the lines laid down by the officers of the armies we name because, in his opinion, based on Omdurman and the Boer war, in face of the fire power of the present such advances would lead to unprecedented slaughter. This is a very common mistake for superficial observers to make. They think that because the new weapons fire, say ten times as fast and kill ten times as far, therefore in the same time they will kill one hundred times as many. They forget that rapid aiming is not conducive to good shooting, and as the range increases the chances of missing also increase in an enormous ratio. Actually all experience has shown that where the armaments are approximately equal, the more technically perfect the weapon, the longer the time required to inflict a given percentage of slaughter, and that up to the moment of dispersal and rout, losses are only conditioned by the quality of the troops, i.e., the better the troops the more punishment they will endure without passing out of the control of their officers.

That the Dervish attack failed at Omdurman is not to the point. Our troops on that occasion had not been subjected to an overpowering fire from French quick-firers. Had that been the case the result might perhaps have been different. That day our infantry made not less than 10 per cent. of hits to rounds fired. In South Africa the enemy's fire brought down our practice to about one hit in 3,000 rounds, but the worst fire we encountered out there, say at Spion Kop, with its seven shells a minute, was not one tenth of what French gunners count on delivering as the prelude to a great attack. To prove that French theories are obsolete it would be necessary to show that attacks executed in accordance with French views in their entirety have failed in South Africa or elsewhere, and we fancy we should find it difficult to produce such evidence. We have heard of artillery preparation made overnight, and the attack delivered next morning; of isolated battalions attacking unsupported by others; and of lines of infantry extended at ten paces left lying in the open for hours without receiving the necessary impulse to advance; and we have learnt without surprise that such efforts resulted in failure. Yet attacks have succeeded, and a careful examination of each instance shows, as might have been expected, that their success has been always in exact proportion to the closeness with which the leaders have been able, in the special circumstances of the case, to adhere to these despised foreign theories. The French might very reasonably retort on us, "We have heard that your tactics have broken down, and from the casualty returns we are not surprised, but when have you ever heard of our lines, trained on our system, refusing to advance against 2 per cent. of loss—an amount which appears frequently to have paralysed your action." Naturally the French army resents the criticism of the Times correspondent. It may, however, be of interest to our friends across the water to know that among English officers surprise exists at the appearance of these letters.

Army Notes.

Seventy thousand men, drawn from the armies of Europe, British India, the United States of America, and Japan, hold Peking. The situation in China is therefore peculiar, and becomes more complicated as time goes on. No well-defined policy seems to guide the Powers with reference to the punishment due to the Chinese for their recent enormities. On the contrary, the bond that has held the Powers together hitherto appears to have become weakened since the appointment of Count Von Waldersee to the supreme command. The break-up of the Concert; the division of the Powers into two parties with opposing policies would be a great misfortune. There are elements in the situation that may justly give rise to uneasiness as regards the future. The want of cohesion existing in the occupying forces may possibly be neutralised by the tact and ability of Count Von Waldersee, who has now arrived on the scene and assumed the duties of his important command. His task is no light one. Peking must be held and defended, but the strength of the force available for that purpose must remain uncertain while several of the Powers retain a halting state of mind on the one great point of policy. To some extent the Chinese question is now passing through a period of drift. Sir Robert Hart, whose sources of reliable information are second to none, has warned the allied generals that further hostilities may be expected about November, as Chinese troops are concentrating and moving on the line of communications between Peking and Tien-tsin. Should the prognostication of this high authority be realised, the existence of an acute and common danger would perhaps, for the time at least, brace together the contingents of the Powers to repel the attacks; but, the immediate danger averted, it is possible that the cleavage already threatening may widen, with the ultimate result that the brunt of the operations necessary to wring from the Chinese Government the reparation due to the united Powers may have to be carried through by a portion of them only; or, that China may escape through the want of unity among the Powers, from all immediate penalties, only to fall into the greater peril of dismemberment and extinction as an independent empire, which is, perhaps, what some of the powers concerned in the present difficulty foresee and desire.

Count von Waldersee will certainly occupy no bed of roses. The whole situation both political and military is complicated in the extreme. Some interest is being taken in the question of the extent of the military power conferred upon Count Von Waldersee, and as to how far any combined operations he may decide on carrying out may be affected by the actual withdrawal of Russian, Japanese, American, and other troops, either wholly or in part, from Peking. The Paris Liberté has had the boldness to assert that the French contingent will in no sense be under the orders of the German Commander-in-Chief, whose powers as regards French troops will be limited to presiding over the Council of generals, and causing its decisions to be carried out. We can hardly accept that as a correct statement of the position to be held by this distinguished soldier, but the fact of such statements having appeared in Paris when Count von Waldersee was on the eve of taking up his high command, augurs ill for the smoothness or completeness of future military operations. Meanwhile reinforcements continue to arrive at Taku, chiefly from British-India, Germany, Russia, and France. Punitive expeditions from Peking against Boxer strongholds, within two or three days' march of the capital, fill up the interval of waiting for the Field-Marshal's ultimate decision. A further distinct act of war against China has been committed in the bombardment and capture of the Pei-tang forts, which lie a few miles to the north of Taku, and which were held to be a menace to the allies in possession of the recently-captured forts there. The allies are thus widening and securing their sea base, and for the protection of its approaches Lu-Tai, about twelve miles north of Pei-tang and a station on the railway, has been seized by a Russian force. The troops of the same Power had previously taken possession of Chin-wang-tao, a very important strategic point, and an ice-free port on the Gulf of Liao-tung, situated nearly 150 miles by sea north-east of Taku. It adjoins the coast railway connecting Newchang, in Manchuria, with Peking at the point where the Great Wall of China reaches the waters of the Gulf.

There has been constant military activity around Peking, while the contingents of the Allied Powers have been searching the encircling districts in various directions. Sir A. Gaselee has reported that a joint Anglo-American force, 1,500 strong, with four guns, moved out twelve miles westward of the capital on the 16th, and then by a rapid night-march, got in rear of the Boxer head-quarters at Pa-ta-Chu (the eight temples), routing the Boxers, who were taken by surprise, and suffered a loss of fifty men. A squadron of the Bengal Lancers and some Sappers advanced to San-hai-tien and destroyed the arsenal there, meeting with no opposition. The force, with the exception of 200 men, remaining as a guard with Sir Claude MacDonald at Pa-ta-Chu, returned to Peking on the 18th. The most important recent military event, however, has been the capture of the Pei-tang forts on the 20th inst. We gather from the telegrams received that a combined land force under the orders of the Russian Admiral Alexieff consisting of 4,000 Russians with six 6 in. mortars, 3,000 Germans with eight 6 in. guns, and 1,000 French, with a party of Austrian Marines, attacked the forts at day-light, and apparently silenced their fire at about 10 a.m. The forts, three in number, were then entered, and found to be deserted, the Chinese, 3,000 strong, having escaped in boats, much to the chagrin of the Allies. The fire of the Russian ordnance is said to have told severely on the forts. Detachments of British and Italians intended to participate in the attack arrived on the scene too late. So much for the doings of the Allied Forces. If the news from Shanghai be correct the crisis has become still more acute, and we are told that the Emperor and Dowager Empress have refused to denounce Prince Tuan, and the other Boxer sympathisers, or to consider any proposals involving their punishment. Prince Tuan has apparently regained his ascendancy at Court, where his influence again dominates the situation, and he is said to be preparing for further fighting. This is an appropriate corollary to the imperial edict announcing the arrival of the Emperor and Dowager Empress at Tai-yuen-fu some 250 miles south-west of Peking, where they are apparently en route to Si-ngnan-fu, a walled city of a million inhabitants, situated at the junction of the King-ho and Wei-ho Rivers, known as the ancient capital of China under the name of Si-king, and now again adopted as the chief city and the residence of the Imperial Court, being separated by 700 miles from the coast, and apparently secure from approach and attack by the hated Western foreigners.

Lord Lansdowne writes to the Times to point out that a statement made by Lord Rosebery, that the present Government "ignored the Hartington Commission," shows a complete misconception of the facts, and that a scheme of War Office reorganisation, prepared by Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, and based on the report of the Hartington Commission, was adopted by the Government in 1895. To quote Lord Lansdowne's words: "On assuming office the present Ministry found in existence a scheme of War Office reorganisation which the outgoing Secretary of State for War, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, certainly intended to bring forward, I presume with the concurrence of his chief. That scheme was examined by the newly-formed Government, of which the Duke of Devonshire was a member, and with comparatively slight alteration was embodied in the Order in Council of 1895 and the rules by which the procedure of this office is now governed." But any scheme which relegates the Commander-in-Chief of the Army to a condition of cypherdom cannot possibly be productive of good either for the Army or the Empire. The officer filling the position of Commander-in-Chief is one presumably who is well aware what is necessary to promote the efficiency of the Army. As matters stand, we fail to see what chance there is of the public knowing the views of the professional chief of the Army, every care being taken to guard against an expression of opinion on his part. He is not even allowed to present a report to the Cabinet, setting forth the wants of the Army. There are politicians, doubtless, professing to be statesmen, who would defend such a "system" as this. But there are politicians considering themselves statesmen who would defend anything, it has to be remembered, which would bring to the party with which they are associated a few hundred votes of ignorant electors, and thus place them in office. There clearly is some doubt as to who is actually responsible for the present anomaly by which the Commander-in-Chief is little better than an irresponsible figure-head at the War Office. Between the two parties the British taxpayer finds himself in the position of being asked to decide whether the party that is in or the party that is out is to blame for existing absurdities. The time is fast approaching, we hope, when the taxpayer will put his foot down firmly and protest against the continuing of such nursery-like proceedings. Until that time arrives it is quite impossible to hope for either an efficient Army or properly administered War Office.

Mr. Wyndham, addressing his supporters at Dover, on Tuesday evening, had much to say on the subject of War Office administration, though, in the pressure of the moment, most of the leading papers seem to have been unable to find room for his remarks. This is to be regretted, for Mr. Wyndham is able to speak with direct authority, and the matters dwelt upon by the Under Secretary for War are of first importance at a moment when the War Office is being so vigorously attacked. Mr. Wyndham admits that the War Office made one great mistake with regard to the war. It was responsible for the opinion that a force of 75,000 was adequate to prosecute the war. That was "a grave error," and he did not attempt to argue it away. The honesty of the statement, and the acceptance of blame is most creditable. The War Office, however, it was held, had been placed in a most difficult position, owing to the want of appreciation of former Governments of the needs of the Army. But Lord Lansdowne has done all in his power to remedy some of our most pressing needs. He has succeeded in obtaining votes to the extent of £13,000,000 beyond the normal estimates in order to repair some of the mischief done during periods of inaction, and has added, in face of the great difficulties, 29,783 men to the home establishment. The events of the last twelve months, it is maintained, and with good reason, have fully justified his lordship in considering that this additional expenditure and increase of establishments was necessary, in order to prepare the nation for the strain of war. But it is clearly indicated that those are absolutely right who demand further efforts in the direction of improvement. "Unless," said Mr. Wyndham, "we are ready to give up our Empire, to give up India, and to give up Egypt, we must have an Army of 128,000 men abroad, and maintain an almost equal number of men at home ready to take the field at any moment. Does the present system give the number and the training necessary?" Mr. Wyndham is convinced that it does not. There have been statements as to obsolete guns in the fortifications of Dover. It is not denied that there is room for serious apprehension. Not only at Dover, but at other places round the coast, party Government—the desire of politicians to snatch votes by means of a popular cry for economy—has seriously jeopardised our national safety. This is a condition of things which must be remedied. "The coast defences," it is satisfactory to learn, "are receiving the more serious consideration of the Government, and it is recognised that modern guns must be provided." The further cost is set down at £5,897,000. Two years would be required to complete the order, but the work requires to be done before any Government can say honestly that it is doing its duty. Mr. Wyndham is all for reform of our military system, but the nation, he says, will have to make sacrifices, and to assist the Government in power to do the work demanded of it. It will be allowed, we think by all soldiers that there is a healthy tone pervading the utterances of the Under Secretary of State for War. He has proved since he was called to the War Office that he appreciates the importance of the questions with which he has had to deal, and at Dover, on Tuesday, he gave further evidence of his capacity in marshalling facts and representing clearly and concisely what our wants are under the head of land defence. At length, all parties seem to be agreed as to the dangers of unpreparedness, and we can only hope, whatever the result of the Elections may be, those whose interests are most affected—the commercial classes—will not be satisfied to allow in future the fetish of party to over-ride their better judgment, when they know what supreme efforts other nations have been making to prepare themselves for all possible contingencies of war.

An uneasy feeling is manifesting itself among officers in and from South Africa that when the war is over and the troops return to England, endeavours will be made on the part of some on the retired list, who have come back to active employment to fill staff appointments, to retain them for more or less lengthened periods to the exclusion, may be, of others who have borne the burden of service in the field. We are assured that so far as can be guaranteed at present every effort will be made to resist pressure from whatever quarter it may come, to set aside the rules and regulations on the subject. The present staff at headquarters would certainly not tolerate such proceedings, for it is recognised how great the injury to the Army at large would be if precedents were established. There may, of course, be certain cases in which it may be found desirable to extend the period of employment of temporary staff officers for brief periods—three months or so, but it may be taken as certain that the close of the war will be marked by a general rearrangement of staff duties, when officers on the retired list who have had the good fortune to fill appointments on the staff, will give place to those from the front who are held to possess special claims. Indeed, any other course would be so injurious to the Army that we cannot understand how any doubt can exist as to the action of the War Office. The officers recalled to duty to discharge staff duties, are deserving of the fullest acknowledgement, but we cannot bring ourselves to believe that any of them are so insensible of the usual routine of the service as to suppose that applications for their retention could be entertained, from whatever source those applications might emanate. All we can say is that it would speak badly for the new régime if they were to be favourably considered, and it would naturally result in Parliament's interference, which would be a contingency much to be regretted. The close of a big war would be a most inopportune time for anyone to think of bringing pressure to bear in favour of any officer on the retired list, and we cannot bring ourselves to believe that so serious a mistake would be committed by a general in active command, from whom alone a recommendation would carry weight. Our correspondents, therefore, who have addressed us on the matter may be assured that the fullest justice will be done.

As our readers are, of course, aware, a committee of experts has been for some time engaged in ascertaining what improvements can be effected in the magazine rifle now in use in the Army. While the barrel has stood the severe tests of the South African war without becoming overheated or in any other way showing defects, the sighting has in many cases proved unsatisfactory, and it is to remedy this defect and to see whether any other improvements can be made that the committee was appointed. Hitherto the action of the Mauser rifle, the weapon generally used by the Boers, has not been favoured in this country, but it is thought that the committee will ultimately graft on to the present weapon the Mauser magazine attachment, or something similar. The committee is experimenting with every known rifle. Of "straight-pull" bolt action rifles it has had before it the Lee, which is used in the United States Navy, and the Schmidt-Lubin; but the principle of the "tumbler" bolt is regarded as the safer, least liable to get out of order, and sufficiently rapid in its action for all possible contingencies. The present war, however, has taught us that our rifles must be more accurately sighted than they are, especially for long distances. The disc sight on the side of the rifle is to all intents and purposes condemned. In these days, when it is sometimes necessary to open fire on an enemy at a distance of upwards of two miles the importance of sighting is great, and to this matter special attention is being directed. Beyond these facts nothing can at present be said with any degree of certainty, as this, like other questions, will require to stand over pending the return of Lord Roberts and other officers to England. It is no secret that Lieut.-General Ian Hamilton will have much to say before a final settlement is arrived at, he being recognised not only as a high authority on musketry, but an officer who has had varied experience lately in the field.

Lord Roberts is undoubtedly acting wisely in arranging to relieve the City Imperial Volunteers now that the war seems to be fast nearing its end. The corps has done its work well, and so long as there was any hard fighting officers and men would not have desired to be relieved. Now they have other things to think about. In many cases places are being kept open for the men; in others fresh openings in civil life have to be found. It must not be forgotten what a service the "C.I.V.'s" have rendered in proving how excellent the spirit is which pervades the Volunteer Force. There would be nothing gained, however, by extending their period of foreign service, and, we trust, to learn shortly that a similar course is to be pursued with regard to the Imperial Yeomanry, many of whom have gone to the front at great personal sacrifice, and should, therefore, be given the choice of either remaining out or returning to England as may best suit their convenience. We trust the mistake will not be made of causing the gallant "C.I.V.'s," after all their brilliant achievements, to be buffoon in a Lord Mayor's Show. It would be a lasting disgrace to the City of London were any such ridiculous proposal to be seriously entertained.

Attention has lately been directed to the subject of maps for military purposes. A widespread feeling exists that in this matter we are not as progressive as we ought to be. In all the circumstances, the report of Colonel D. A. Johnston, R.E., Director-General, Ordnance Survey, much needed sheds light on the matter. The blue book before us tells its own tale of the work done by the Survey for the twelve months ending on March 31 last. It appears that during the year 1899-1900 good progress was made. But for certain disturbing causes the result would have been even better than it was. The principal of these causes was, of course, the war in South Africa. This affected the Survey in two ways—in the first place it entailed a considerable drain on the personnel, limited in extent, as it unfortunately is, at the best of times. There was concurrently a large influx of work, due also, in a large measure, to the exigencies of the war. In all seven officers, Royal Engineers, were ordered to embark for South Africa, of whom only one could be replaced. This entailed a net loss of six out of a small establishment of twenty-four. A number of non-commissioned officers and men were also sent on service, besides which Reservists were called upon to rejoin the colours, and being sent to companies were not available for Survey duty at home. As regards additional work, the number of maps of South Africa printed for the War Office was very large, and every soldier proceeding to South Africa was provided with a copy. The total number of maps printed for the War Office was 374,538, entailing 766,818 printings. The largest number printed in any previous year was 64,850, entailing 102,850 printings. The Ordnance Survey was also asked to undertake on very short notice, some heavy work for the London Government Act Commission. This was completed within the time required but not without great difficulty. The causes above-mentioned have combined to reduce somewhat the out-turn of the regular work of the Survey. A special survey, on a very large scale, of barrack sites on Salisbury Plain, has been carried out for the War Office. A special revision on the 1-500th scale of Admiralty property at Chatham has been conducted for the Admiralty. For the last two or three years the Survey has made special surveys for the Congested Districts Board in Ireland on repayment. The amount for the year under review was unusually large. The staff which has been spared from Great Britain has been transferred to Ireland with a view to accelerating the re-survey of that country. Arrangements had also been made for the formation of a new division for Ireland, but it was necessary to suspend these owing to the number of officers withdrawn for service in South Africa. The revision of the 1 in. map of Great Britain is complete, and the whole of that map is now published in uniform style.

Some interesting details are given of the personnel of the Survey. Since its commencement it has been organised upon a military basis, and carried out under military superintendence. The chief supervision, from the Director-General downwards, has been vested in officers selected from the corps of Royal Engineers. The 13th, 14th, and 16th Companies Royal Engineers were raised for the Ordnance Survey in 1824 and 1825; and the 19th Company was added in 1848. These companies have been continuously employed on the Survey to the present time. A certain number of officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the Royal Engineers are held in readiness for service with an army in the field, to carry out such surveys as may be considered necessary during the progress of a campaign. Two complete Survey sections, each commanded by an officer, have been despatched to South Africa, and a third section has been got ready for despatch if required. The party of two officers and six non-commissioned officers and men despatched to Wei-hai-wei have completed the survey of that place, and the non-commissioned officers and men have recently rejoined the Ordnance Survey. The non-commissioned officer and sapper who were employed on special duty in the Gambia have also returned. Three non-commissioned officers of the Ordnance Survey are still employed in the survey of Bermuda for the War Office. This is nearly completed. A party of one non-commissioned officer and four men has been sent out to Gibraltar to carry out a revision of the survey of that place for the War Office, and three non-commissioned officers and men have been provided for service with boundary commissions on the Niger and Gold Coast. Colonel Johnston only took over the duties of Director-General last year. He did so, however, with the highest reputation for zeal and ability. He is a thoroughly practical survey officer, and we feel convinced that if his advice is taken, as it should be, he will lead the way in the direction of many necessary reforms in a department, the value of which it has hitherto been customary to deprecate, until the South African war came to show how powerless the best generals and bravest troops are when brought face to face with an enemy unless provided with reliable and up-to-date maps of the theatre of war.

The Military Society of Ireland, an institution which has been doing admirable work for some time past, has felt lately the pinch of the war, if we may judge by the eighth annual report which has just been issued. It appears that at present there is only one regiment on the list of subscribers as compared with thirteen a year ago and sixty-five individual members when there were 117 at the end of 1899. However, the society has a balance of £96 6s. 9d. in the hands of its bankers, and with 2,030 volumes on the shelves of its library, against 1,950 last year, if it is not forging ahead, it is at least holding its own. When the war is over this and kindred institutions are certain to receive a much-needed fillip, for there is no doubt that British officers in the future will require to devote much more time to professional study than they have done hitherto. When this comes to be recognised it will be of immense importance to have these Military Society spread about the kingdom, to which students will be able to turn for works of reference. There are some districts unfortunately where military societies have not yet been established. This is a want which time will doubtless remedy. Meantime, so far as Ireland is concerned, the local society there is, we are pleased to learn, not only thoroughly solvent, but looks to commencing operations again when the war is over with a big lump sum at its disposal.

It is no longer a secret that in one case at least Lord Roberts has not been satisfied with the action of a senior officer who was released as a prisoner of war on the occupation of Pretoria. There was the fullest investigation of all circumstances, and it was ruled that the officer had failed to display that discretion and professional ability that he ought to have done, having regard to his rank and experience. In most instances it was found that there were extenuating circumstances when surrenders took place. A correspondent, who is well entitled to be heard, writing to us from South Africa, expresses the opinion that "greater publicity might, with advantage, have been given with respect to the details of inquiry, as there is a feeling of doubt as to the full justice of the decision arrived at." Our correspondent is admittedly in sympathy with the officer who has been summarily dealt with, though he has not, he says, the pleasure of his acquaintance. The officer in question, was a cavalry lieutenant-colonel. The capture for which he is blamed was made after the first engagement with the Boers, when their slowness was not a recognised factor in the operations of the campaign. We are disposed, therefore, to agree with our correspondent that some allowance might have been made for an officer who failed in doing what was a cavalryman's duty, viz., to follow up a retreating enemy. It is difficult to reconcile this decision with one arrived at in another case, which has attracted some attention. After the battle of Talana Hill the cavalry were pushed forward in the hope of routing the enemy, and losing their way in the dark fell an easy prey. On another occasion the cavalry was ordered, after a long day's work, to do the same thing. The commanding officer remonstrated. His horses, he said, were used up, and the operation under these conditions was dangerous, the country being unknown and night fast approaching. Both officers have been dealt with in the same way. Naturally cavalry officers are anxious, for, as they say, there are times when their service may be placed at a very serious disadvantage, as it is not every infantry general who is able to appreciate the difficulties and responsibilities of a mounted officer when he finds himself called upon to execute a movement which his knowledge of the capacity of the troop horse causes him to feel is dangerous if not impossible. If the officer in command of the regiment or squadron is to be censured for executing orders and failing to perform the task assigned to him, and censured also for not doing as he is told, because he recognises what the inevitable fate of himself and his command would be if he did, there will naturally arise a feeling of doubt in the minds of officers as to whether having in view the extra expenses involved soldiering in the cavalry is a game worth the candle. It does appear somewhat unaccountable that the only officers who have been removed hitherto from their commands for failure in the field in South Africa have belonged to the mounted arm. And yet the surrenders have been principally associated with the infantry. The correspondent who writes to us from Pretoria is an infantry officer, and yet he states that among those of his own arm "there is a good deal of sympathy felt for the cavalry, a service which has done its work very well on occasions, and is not understood sometimes as it ought to be by those to whom the handling of it is entrusted."

It was only recently that complaint was made that our Corps of Royal Engineers was over officered, and a suggestion was put forward that steps ought to be taken to reduce its establishment. We pointed out at the time how easy it was to tamper with such a valuable organisation and how difficult to repair mischief once it was done. What do we find now? There is a war in progress in South Africa which has necessarily made great demands on the corps. The list of duty officers has, as a consequence, been so reduced that the War Office has been compelled to recall all officers employed as Adjutants of Volunteer Engineers. From this it is clear that the Minister for War would have been most unwise had he listened to the arguments of those who sought to make out that of Royal Engineer officers we had enough and to spare. For peace purposes, perhaps, we have. There may here and there have been a solitary individual whose services could be dispensed with, but it has always to be borne in mind that armies are not maintained for purposes of show, but the more serious requirements of war. A trained officer of Royal Engineers is not a man to be provided all in moment, and he would be a very poor sort of Secretary of State for War who would allow himself to be influenced in favour of a reduction of the officers' list of the scientific corps on the plea that they were too numerous for the needs of the nation in a period of profound peace.

It would save a lot of worry if a uniform method of what formerly was called the "goose step" were assimilated into the drill-book. At present the recruit goes in the morning to the gymnasium, where he is taught to stamp his foot before taking the first pace. He comes on parade an hour afterwards, and, on the commanding officer's word "March," involuntarily stamps again, instead of, as per drill-book, taking the full pace forward; and then that recruit gets alanged accordingly. One system must give way to the other, preferably the latter, as, in the experience of troops moving, men never step out the full pace on the word "March."

In the list issued by the War Office on September 27 there appears several deaths reported for the first time which date back so far as last December. Here are a few of the worst:—Sergeant Ellis, 2nd Royal West Surrey Regiment, died of wounds at Chieveley, December 15; five deaths from wounds in the 2nd Cameronian, Spion Kop, January 24; and one in the same regiment on February 7. Altogether there are in this one list one death reported in December, six in January, five in February, two in March, six in April, and four in May.

Lord Wolseley, accompanied by Sir Evelyn Wood, will visit Lichfield to-day to inspect the 3rd (Militia) Batn. South Staffordshire Regiment, under command of Colonel M. A. W. Broun. It is deserving of note that Lord Wolseley wore the uniform of the present 2nd Batn. South Staffordshire Regiment, the old 80th, from April 13, 1852, to January 27, 1854, and it was as a subaltern of that regiment he received his baptism of fire and a severe wound in Burma, 1852-53, when his distinguished gallantry brought him under notice as leader of a storming party at the capture of a breastwork at Donabew.

With reference to the reported appointment of Lord Roberts to the chief command of the Army, we understand that for the present no official announcement can be made. There is every possibility of Lord Roberts succeeding Lord Wolseley at the War Office when he returns to England, but as yet it is uncertain when the field-marshal will reach England, and in the present political situation it is not thought desirable, having regard to past experience, to make any definite announcement.

The Lord Mayor received this telegram from Lord Roberts on Wednesday, dated Pretoria, Sept. 25: "The City Imperial Battalion and Mounted Infantry will reach London before November 5, and the battery too, if possible. I fear I cannot return so soon.—ROBERTS." The "C.I.V.'s" mounted infantry, artillery, and infantry leave Pretoria on Monday for Cape Town to embark.

At a meeting held at Portsmouth on the 20th inst., it was decided that the townspeople should present a sword of honour to Lord Roberts on his return from South Africa. Lord Roberts is a freeman of the borough, his name coming first, the only other recipient of the honour up to the present time having been Lord Macnaghten. The Mayor of Portsmouth (Mr. Harold Pink) has received a letter from Lord Roberts, in which he says:—"I most gladly accept the great honour proposed to be conferred upon me. I am very proud of being an honorary freeman of the Borough of Portsmouth, a feeling which will be considerably enhanced by the presentation of the sword of honour." A handsome casket of Windsor Forest oak, ornamented with the carving of the Guildhall and a representation of the hoisting of the British flag at Pretoria, is being prepared for the reception of the document conferring on his lordship the freedom of Windsor.

The colonelcy of the 2nd Life Guards is vacant by the death of Lord Howe, who has held it since January, 1890. The appointment will go, of course, to a peer. The senior on the list of general officers is Lord Chelmsford, who served with the late Gold Stick in the Grenadier Guards from November 28, 1845, when he joined from the Rifle Brigade, until April 30, 1858, when he exchanged to the 95th Regiment as lieutenant-colonel. At the War Office yesterday we were informed that Lord Roberts's claims would, in all probability, be considered, but that nothing would be settled for the present.

General Sir William Olpherts, V.C., R.A., presided on Tuesday at the annual Lucknow dinner at the Whitehall Rooms, as he has done every year since the death of Lord Napier of Magdala. Among those present were Generals Sir George Barker, Chamier, May, McLeod Innes, V.C., Ruggles, Russell, and Stewart; Surgeon-General Sir A. Home, V.C.; Colonels Battine, Blake, Brown, V.C., Cleland, and Thomas; Captains Knight and Robertson; and Messrs. Alexander Dashwood, Arthur Dashwood, and H. D. Willcock. The loyal toasts were proposed by the cock. General Olpherts then gave "Our Departed Comrades," mentioning among them the names of Havelock, Outram, Neill, Lord Napier of Magdala, Macpherson, Palliser, Dodgson, Crommelin, Oldfield, Campbell of the 90th, Goldsworthy, and Lynch. The toast was drunk in solemn silence. Sir G. Barker then gave "The Health of Absent Comrades." General Olpherts proposed the toast of the evening, "The Illustrious Garrison of Lucknow," coupled with the name of General McLeod Innes. The toast was drunk amid loud cheers. General Innes returned thanks, and gave "The Relieving Force," for which the chairman responded. "The Health of the Chairman" was proposed by Colonel Brown, and drunk amid loud and continued cheering. General Olpherts briefly responded, and proposed the health of three of the soldiers who were present at the siege—viz., Sergeant Macdonald, Bugler Horwell, and Sergeant Comber. Sergeant Macdonald responded, and the proceedings terminated.

The only enforced retirement next month from the establishment of general officers under the terms of the Royal Warrant will be that of General Sir George D. Barker, Governor of Bermuda, who attains the age limit on October 9.

General Sir R. C. Stewart, Madras Cavalry, will be placed on the retired list to-morrow, under the five years' non-employment rule. Lieut.-General Sir R. C. Low, Bengal Cavalry, will become a general, and Major-General R. M. Jennings, C.B., Bengal Cavalry, a lieutenant-general in succession.

Lady Audrey Buller has vacated Government House, Aldershot, to make room for the occupation of Lieut.-General Sir William and Lady Butler, and has arrived at Downes Crediton, where she will reside until Sir Redvers Buller returns from South Africa. As now arranged, Sir William Butler will return to Devonport early next year to resume command of the Western District. Sir William held his first parade of the infantry arm on Tuesday. Six brigades were engaged in the operations, the object of which was to effect the passage of the Basingstoke Canal by its various bridges preparatory to an attack on an enemy at Yateley Common.

Major-General Lord Congleton, whose period of command of the Infantry Brigade at Malta should expire on October 25, has been granted an extension until the end of the year.

Major-General R. S. S. Baden-Powell returned to Pretoria on Tuesday from Cape Town. The Hornsey District Council passed a vote of congratulation to General Baden-Powell upon the defence of Mafeking. In thanking the council when the resolution reached him, the general wrote:—

"It is naturally a source of satisfaction to us to feel that our efforts to do our duty were successful in the end, but any trials and privations which we have undergone during the siege are amply compensated for by the knowledge—as expressed in your flattering address—that our efforts have been so fully appreciated by our fellow countrymen at home and in the colonies."

The astounding statement was made lately by M.A.P., that Major-General Luke O'Connor, V.C., has the distinction of being the only officer of the British Army who has risen from the rank of private to that of major-general. The gallant General O'Connor is not a substantive general officer, but Lieut.-General W. Clarke, formerly of the 14th Hussars, and Major-General E. Seager, formerly of the 8th Hussars, lived to be generals on the establishment. Far from it having been a rare occurrence for a colonel in the old days to retire with the hon. rank of major-general, many did so. Among these we may mention:—Major-Generals W. McBean, V.C., J. McKay, R. Wadeson, V.C., J. Campbell, R.A., T. Talbot, E. Conran. We should be the last to wish to detract from the merits of so good and popular a soldier as General O'Connor, but it is due to the memory of the officers we name that it should be remembered that they also lived to wear a general's lace.

Major-General Sir R. Slatin Pasha, who has lately returned to Vienna from England, was received on Monday by the Emperor Francis Joseph in audience, when he informed his Majesty of his acceptance of the post of Inspector-General in the Soudan.

Major-General F. W. Hemming, C.B., is to be congratulated on the success of the cavalry manoeuvres carried out last week in the neighbourhood of Aldershot. A correspondent writes to us:—

"From first to last the instruction was practical, no attempt being made to sacrifice field training for show movements. The staff worked well together; all that it was possible to do was done to render the week's operations interesting, and we all returned to quarters feeling that we had learnt much more than we should have done had manoeuvres been on a larger scale and hurried through as they usually are in such circumstances. Gen. Hemming knew exactly what he wanted done, and imparted his wishes to the leaders acting under him with excellent results. There was no hurrying and confusion, and, what is perhaps of equal importance, no unnecessary bullying and row. As one who took part in the week's operations, I readily pronounce them a success, for the reasons I have assigned."

Major-General Hemming, in an after-order in reference to the operations, calls attention to the fact that the power of imagination is a great help in training troops for war during peace time. He says:—

"The more a leader or instructor is able to thoroughly imagine the conditions he would be acting under, had he a real enemy opposed to him, and the more he can induce those under his command to exercise their own powers of imagination in that respect, even down to the smallest detail, the more valuable will that instruction be, and we shall have fewer instances of the absurd mistakes, impossible under service conditions, which we sometimes see at field-days. This is especially the case with cavalry, who get separated in small bodies; and if each individual will only imagine what he would or would not do were it real war, we shall not only have the war game better played, but it will actually be the means of preventing loss of life when on active service for the first time."

The major-general states that he noted with much satisfaction the general good conduct of the men, and that the welcome and hospitality of the people of the villages and towns through which they passed was not in any way abused.

"Late C.G." writes under date the 15th inst.:

"It is very gratifying reading in your issue of this date Major-Gen. Raper's farewell to the Army Service Corps, and from all I have heard, his services in connection with the corps have been deservedly appreciated. But surely, sir, the time has come when the personnel of this important corps should no longer be administered by an outsider, however highly qualified, but by one of themselves. The corps has now a large and increasing establishment, and many in the higher ranks are officers of acknowledged ability and great experience. It is due to them that their interests should be watched over by one who is not only thoroughly acquainted with their duties and service, but who also is personally interested in the position and prospects of the corps. There can be no difficulty in selecting an officer who would be acceptable to the whole corps, and the present occasion seems to be the opportunity."

We quite agree with the view taken by our correspondent.

Major-General Sir Thomas Fraser, R.E., commanding the Thames District, has been appointed Hon. Colonel of the 2nd Cheshire (Railway) Volunteers, R.E.; headquarters, Crewe.

Major-General W. T. Goldsworthy has been obliged, after all, to retire from the representation of Hammersmith, which he has represented for upwards of twenty years. He will be much missed at St. Stephen's, as he was always in attendance during the sittings of the House and Brigadier-General J. H. Barnard, C.B., late Royal Munster Fusiliers, from command at Mandalay, had arrived at Bangalore when the mail left, and assumed command of the district, vice Major-General D. J. S. McLeod, C.B., term expired.

Brigadier-General H. L. Dundas, who has been in temporary command of the Infantry Brigade at Gibraltar since October last, will vacate, on relief by Major-General Sir Henry Colville on Monday next.

Brigadier-General A. G. Creagh, C.B., R.A., has been confirmed in his appointment in command of the 2nd Class District at Umballa, vice Major-General Hector Macdonald, C.B., on active service in South Africa.

Three colonels on the active list will be retired next month, viz., Colonel A. F. Fletcher, R.A., and G. Poignand, half-pay, late A.A.G., Devonport, on October 8, both for age; and the Duke of Wellington on October 28, for non-employment.

Colonel J. A. Stewart-Mackenzie, half-pay, late 9th Lancers, was asked to contest Ross and Cromartie in the Unionist interest, but he expressed his regret that he did not see his way to do so.

Colonel F. M. Wardrop, C.B., late 12th Lancers, Military Attaché at Vienna, has arrived home on leave.

Colonel J. Leach, R.A., Commandant of the camp at Okehampton, has been placed under orders for India to succeed Brigadier-General H. Pipon, C.B., as Colonel on the Staff commanding R.A. Bengal, with the rank of Brigadier-General.

Colonel J. Stacpole, Embarkation Staff Officer, is now graded as Colonel on the Staff, Commandant of the Convalescent and Discharge Depot, Southampton. The depot has been formed in order to meet the exceptional circumstances arising out of large drafts of men being sent home by almost every returning transport from South Africa. Time-expired men, medically fit, who desire to take their discharge direct from their regimental depot will be sent from Southampton to their depot headquarters, where they will receive their plain clothes and discharge, and only men who ask for furlough prior to discharge will, on the expiration of their leave, be required to finally report themselves at the Discharge Depot at Gosport. This arrangement will not only facilitate the rapid return of the men to civil life, but it will obviate an overcrowding of the forts at Portsmouth by men awaiting discharge.

Colonel W. E. R. Kelly is to remain in command of the 3rd Regimental District at Canterbury until December 31, instead of vacating on November 1.

The Queen has granted to Colonel the Earl of Kintore, 3rd Batn. Gordon Highlanders, authority to accept to wear the Grand Cordon of the Crown of Italy, conferred upon him by his Majesty the King of Italy on the occasion of the funeral of the late King Humbert.

Colonel F. Brodigan, half pay, late 28th Regimental District, has been selected for a Distinguished Service Reward of £60 a year. Joining the Army June 6, 1854, Colonel Brodigan obtained his present rank September 22, 1884. He served in the Crimea with the 28th Regiment, including the siege of Sebastopol and affair in the Cemetery; severely wounded while assisting to rescue a wounded soldier who lay exposed to a heavy fire of musketry (medal with two clasps and Turkish medal). Served with the Okamundel Field Force in 1859, and was present at the storming and capture of Beyt (wounded) and the siege and occupation of Dwarka.

Colonel T. A. St. Quintin, retired list, late 8th Hussars, on the Remount Staff Imperial Yeomanry, is on passage home from Cape Town in the Kildonan Castle, due next week. With him are a number of other officers of the Imperial Yeomanry, viz.: Colonel A. M. Brookfield, Lieut.-Colonel G. J. Younghusband, I.S.C., Majors Poynder and Simpson, and Lieuts. Lord Kesteven, Lord Milton, Mitchell, Hilliard, Selby, and Lowndes.

Only one colonel of the Indian Staff Corps will be placed on the unemployed supernumerary list next month for age disqualification, viz., Colonel A. L. McNair, on October 12.

Colonel A. de V. Alexander, 16th Bengal Lancers, has been granted an extension of command, until December 8, 1901, when he will have completed thirty-two years' service.

Lieut.-Colonel F. A. Bowles, R.G.A. has been appointed Chief Instructor, School of Gunnery, vice Colonel H. Barrow, joined the Thames District as Colonel on the staff to command R.A.

Lieut.-Colonel F. C. Farmer, R.G.A., at Halifax, N.S., succeeds Colonel F. O. Barrington-Foot in command of the Royal Artillery Regimental District, Woolwich, and is under orders to return to England to take up the duties.

Lieut.-Colonel (Captain) A. H. Lee, R.A., our Military Attaché at Washington, is contesting the Fareham Division of Hants in the Unionist interest, in succession to Lieut.-General Sir Frederick Fitzwygram, retired.

The late Lieut.-Colonel Stracey-Clitherow, who had joined the Scots Guards in 1836 with a commission signed by King William IV., was the senior Crimean representative of the regiment, and his place is now taken by General Sir Henry de Batho, Bart., who was gazetted as ensign and lieutenant from the Royal Household in 1839. The remaining Crimean survivors of the Scots Guards in order of seniority are:—General Sir Frederick Stephenson, C.C.B.; Lieut.-Colonels F. Haygarth and the Earl of Roden; Lieut.-General A. Meyrick; Lieut.-Colonels Sir Robert Kingscote, E. Neville, the Hon. W. W. Coke; Colonel W. E. G. Lytton Bulwer; General Sir Reginald Gipps; Lieut.-General Sir Seymour John Blane, Bart.; Lieut.-Colonel W. G. Knollys, Colonel Lord Wantage, V.C., and G. Gordon, the Earl of Listowel; Captain the Hon. A. G. Gregory; Lieut.-Colonels the Earl of Annesley and F. W. Lambton; Colonel C. G. Tottenham; Lieut.-Colonels Lord Blythwood, the Hon. C. R. Hay; General G. H. Moncrieff; Major-General E. M. Beresford, and Captain R. F. Shaw-Stewart; Doctors F. Robinson and A. G. Elkington; Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. R. Mostyn. Captain H. D. Erskine and Dr. Francis Baker joined in the Crimea after the fall of Sebastopol.

The Buffs, who have just lost two old members in Colonel John Lewes and Lieut.-Colonel Sidebottom-Vernier—the last named, in addition to his recorded services, was some time adjutant before Sebastopol, until sent into Greece as brigade-major—have, as far as we can ascertain, only eight Crimean survivors:—General Sir Mark Walker; Lieut.-Colonel F. W. Gore; Majors P. J. Dunbar, H. G. C. B. Easton, J. Cox, and A. B. Letts; Deputy Surgeon-General T. Teevan, and Mr. Thomas Blissett, late quartermaster. The last named is also one of the last of the survivors of Panniar. He resigned his commission in 1860, and can consequently be no longer traced officially, but resides in good health at Bowes Park. Lord Congleton, who was gazetted to the Buffs in May, 1855, joined in the Crimea after Sebastopol had fallen. Both Sir Mark Walker and Lieut.-Colonel Gore were gazetted into the regiment during the war, the former as a promotion to captain for services as adjutant of the 30th Regiment, and the latter by exchange from the 6th, with which he had served in the Kaffir War. He sold out upwards of thirty years ago.

Lieut.-Colonel H. Plummer, Governor of Parkhurst Prison, Isle of Wight, is about to retire on the ground of age.

Lieut.-Colonel M. W. Saunders, who has been officiating for some time past as A.A.G. for Royal Artillery in India, has been confirmed in the appointment.

Lieut.-Colonel W. A. Yule, half-pay, late of the Royal Scots Fusiliers, succeeds Colonel E. C. Browne in command of the 21st Regimental District, Ayr, with the rank of colonel.

Lieut.-Colonel (Captain) H. E. J. Brake, R.A., Commandant 2nd Batn. Central Africa Regiment; Captains C. H. Levenson, 18th Hussars; G. Loch, North Lancashire Regiment; H. O. J. Biss, 5th Batn. Middlesex Regiment; and J. H. Stewart, West India Regiment, have been invalided home from the Kumasi Expedition, in which they have been serving.

Some rather disturbed versions have been published of a somewhat strange coincidence in the introduction of steam on the Zambesi river. Livingstone, we may point out, placed the first steamer on the Lower Zambesi, and navigated that river as far as Kebrabasa Rapids, a few miles above Tetu. He failed to get beyond that bar, which is stated to be absolutely unnavigable. He reached there November 9, 1858. Major Gibbons' steamer, the Constance, was the first steamer to navigate the Middle Zambesi—that is, the section between the Kebrabasa Rapids and the Victoria Falls. It certainly is a coincidence worth noting that the intrepid Major Gibbons, whose lot it has been to proceed in the matter where Livingstone left off on November 9, 1858, should have reached the spot where he stopped short, after a long and perilous journey through unknown lands, also on November 9. Major Gibbons may certainly claim to stand out as the most successful of recent military explorers, and the effect of his expedition on the future of Central Africa promises to be far-reaching. He is an officer of whom the Militia Service should feel proud.

Major K. R. Balfour, late of the Royal Dragoons, who has been rendering valuable service with the Imperial Yeomanry in South Africa, has accepted the duty of contesting Christchurch in the Unionist interest.

Major F. C. Trollope, R.A., Reserve of Officers, has been stated in several papers to have been selected to succeed Lieut.-Colonel Temple, 7th Batn. King's Royal Rifles, as Superintendent of the Balloon Factory at Aldershot as a permanent arrangement. We are authorised to say that this announcement is due to a misapprehension, and that nothing has transpired to give it justification.

Major the Hon. E. J. Stuart-Wortley, 4th Batn. King's Royal Rifles, who has left Cape Town for England, is a new Unionist candidate for Parliament. He has been chosen to contest the Holmfirth Division of Yorkshire.

Major A. G. Balfour, Highland Light Infantry, who has been acting as District Inspector of Musketry, Home District, has been confirmed in his appointment for three years, with effect from February 3 last.

Majors (Lieut.-Colonels) H. S. Cobbe, I.S.C., 1st Batn. Central Africa Regiment, and C. S. Melliss, I.S.C., and Captains J. Johnston-Stewart, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, and C. Godfrey, I.S.C., have been brought specially to notice by Sir James Willcocks in connection with recent operations in Ashanti under Major A. P. Montanaro, R.A., and W. T. M. WHOLESALE FROM—

MESSRS. TEOFANI & CO., 18 BURY ST., ST. AXE, LONDON, E.C.

Colonial Office on Sunday last Colonel Willcocks said :—

"During the last fortnight flying column of 400 men, under the command of Major Reeve, passed through entire country to the east of Kumasi as far as Bompata, returning to Kumasi via Agogo and Juabin. Severe punishment given to the rebels who fought with Benson's levies at Bohankra; all other chiefs and villages submitted without resistance. Country to the east and to the south of Kumasi-Mampon road entirely free from rebels, who are most anxious for terms.

"Flying column, 500 men, under Capt. Holford, 7th Hussars, sent to Kintampo. Several chiefs surrendered on the way, now under escort en route for Kumasi.

"Column of 900 men, under the command of Major Montanaro, R.A., reached Ofesu, on the road from Kumasi to-day. Place attacked by a large number of Ashantis under Chief Kofia. Enemy tried new tactics. Apparently has enough of fighting behind stockade. Attempted to surround flying column in thick bush. After forty minutes' fighting, in which our troops dislodged enemy from successive positions, Major Montanaro gave orders for general bayonet charge. Enemy fled at once with native troops in pursuit for half a mile. Enemy's loss, large number of killed in action. Native troops behaved well."

The death of Major W. Hart-McHarg, retired list Essex Regiment, this week at Bruges, leaves a Distinguished Service Reward for a quartermaster vacant.

Major W. Evans Gordon, retired list, I.S.C., is to the fore again as a Unionist candidate, having been selected to contest Stepney.

Majors E. T. Gastrell, 19th Punjab Infantry, and G. P. Ranken, 24th Punjab Infantry, have been selected to raise and command the two new native infantry regiments in India, which will be designated the 41st Dogras and 46th Punjab Infantry. The 41st is to be raised at Jullundur, and will be linked with the 37th and 38th Dogras. The 46th will come into existence at Sialkote, and will be linked with the 33rd and 40th Pathans. There will, it is said, be no difficulty whatever in getting plenty of good recruits.

Captains F. C. Quicke, King's Dragoon Guards, and J. Stevenson-Hamilton, Inniskilling Dragoons, who left England in May, 1898, with the Cape to Cairo Expedition, under Major A. St. H. Gibbons, 3rd Batn. East Yorkshire Regiment, are spoken of in most eulogistic terms for the work they have done. The former is specially commended. Major Gibbons says: "The loyalty and energy of Captains Quicke and Hamilton enabled the Expedition to greatly increase the scope of its work. Captain Quicke performed what I regard as one of the finest African journeys ever made. He not only crossed the continent from east to west, but in doing so travelled at least twice as far as was necessary for the crossing, in order that he might increase our knowledge for the benefit of future generations. Captains Quicke and Hamilton, on reaching their respective coast ports, heard of the war in South Africa, and both reported themselves at the Cape in order to take part in the relief of Mafeking." These are services worthy of being recorded in the annals of the distinguished regiments to which the officers belong. There will, we hope, be some official recognition of the officers' work, for the importance of it cannot be over-estimated.

Details reach us of the heroism of Captain L. A. E. Ollivant, Royal Fusiliers, who lost his life in action at Tien-tsin on July 13, whilst serving with the Chinese Regiment of Wei-Hai-Wei. The young officer more than upheld the honour of the Royal Fusiliers. A correspondent writes :—

"The Allies made an attack upon the native city of Tien-tsin on July 13. The defence was stubborn and protracted, and success was not gained until three o'clock on the following day. When the fighting was at its height the firing line of the American contingent began to run short of ammunition. Capt. Ollivant, accompanied by a soldier of the Chinese Regiment and a mule laden with ammunition, pushed forward over the fire-swept plain to help the American infantry. When close to them the soldier was killed. Capt. Ollivant then took charge of the mule himself, and pressed on. The mule, however, was shot down, and the deceased officer then endeavoured to detach the boxes to carry them on. Whilst so doing he was shot through the head, the injuries proving fatal."

Army Foreign.

President Loubet has addressed a letter to General André, Minister of War, in which he expresses his satisfaction with the efficiency and discipline of the French troops which took part in the recent manoeuvres and at the devotion to duty and the endurance displayed by the men. The foreign officers who attended the manoeuvres were entertained by the Municipality of Paris on the evening of the 21st ult., speeches were made by the Mayor and General Vouliarski. Great cordiality characterised the proceedings.

A French officer, who witnessed the army manoeuvres and "whose opinion is entitled to weight," writes to the Paris correspondent of the Times, summing up the results thus :—

"The manoeuvres were very successful, but the Army Corps remained for the three days almost on the same ground, losing and recovering villages. The umpires were very long in deciding, and each side wished for approval. Doubtless it is difficult to judge the result of manoeuvres with a frontage of 8 to 10 miles. You will have noticed how little has been said of the artillery, which must have seemed to you the more surprising, as this is where the French efforts of 30 years have led to such admirable results in guns, carriages, precision of aim, and manoeuvring. The explanation is that artillery has no great significance when there is no real firing. I have frequently seen whole brigades on a flank march less than two kilometres from us. It was useless to fire, for the infantry went on marching, not even, perhaps, suspecting that they were being fired at. The result had evidently no significance. Nevertheless the manoeuvres, from what I have seen, are useful and even essential both for privates and generals, especially for the latter, who have seldom an opportunity of handling large masses. There are, moreover, numerous departments and functions which are only called into activity by the manoeuvres, and which but for these sham fights would, in case of mobilisation, be an unknown quantity."

A correspondent of the Daily Graphic, who has been attending the manoeuvres, has some remarks on the French soldiers, which are so complimentary and so true that we feel they will be read with great pleasure by our readers :—

"One of the points in regard to which I was anxious to convince myself de visu, was in regard to the entrain and the marching powers of the troops. This always comes as a surprise to anyone who has only seen the French pioupiou slouching about a garrison town in France, his hands deep in the pockets of his badly-fitting trousers, or in the back pockets of his dingy, equally badly-fitting overcoat. In order to realise what he can do, one must see him, in heavy marching order, doing his 40 kilometres under a blazing sun, covering the ground with that curious broken step of the French infantry as if he never could tire. One also sees then, in spite of the apparent looseness of the formations, that all the movements end by his getting where he ought to be, and that suppleness and adaptability take the place of the clockwork precision of his German rival. The cheerfulness with which he bears hardships is admirable. At the end of a long and tiring day, when almost any other army would have sunk into the morose silence born of fatigue, the French pioupiou salutes to the white-capped enemy marching along as prisoners with a stream of witticisms. Another point in which the French soldier is admirable is his resourcefulness when on campaign. As soon as the bugles sound the "cease fire," the arms are piled, the soldier bearing the little bundle of firewood, sets it on the ground, and has it alight in a few seconds, the one carrying the coffee pan unstraps it, the third with the collapsible canvas bucket is off to fetch water, and in ten minutes' time hot coffee is served round to the whole company."

As for French officers, they are courteous gentlemen always. A fact to which more than one correspondent has borne testimony in our columns during the last fortnight.

"A Cavalry F.O." writes to us :—

"I can fully endorse what your correspondent stated last week as to the French Army. Having been on a visit to a friend in Paris, I decided to prolong my stay in order to see something of the French Army during the manoeuvres. I had no influence at headquarters, so I made up my mind to take my chance, and I did. I have carried away with me the most agreeable recollections. Wherever I went I was received with the greatest courtesy. From generals downwards, I found myself treated most handsomely; it was quite enough, apparently, that I was an English officer. I almost feared from what I had read in some of the French papers that I might be considered an intruder, but I soon found that such was not the case; and I think it only right that it should be known how chivalrous and high-minded the French officers are. There is among them no wish to treat English officers as anything but brothers-in-arms, in the best and most soldier-experience."

Marshal Martinez Campos died at the village of Zaranz, near Madrid, on the morning of the 23rd inst. The deceased marshal was the son of a brigadier-general of the Spanish Army, and was born in 1834. Entering the Army as soon as he left school, he took part in a campaign in Morocco, and at the age of twenty-five was promoted to the rank of major. He was a colonel at thirty, and served in that rank for six years in Cuba. In 1870 he was engaged, as a brigadier-general, in suppressing the Carlist rebellion. When the Republic was established he refused for a time to serve under it, and in 1873 he was confined in a fortress as a conspirator. In April, 1874, however, having obtained his release, he was sent as a divisional commander to fight against the Carlists. He took part in several engagements, was raised to the rank of general, brilliantly cut his way through the main body of Carlists at Zurugay, and organised the retreat on Tafalla. Soon afterwards, in conjunction with General Jovellar, he issued the military pro-nunciamento of Sagunto, by which Alfonso XII. secured the Throne. Under the new Government he became commander-in-chief in Catalonia, and in a few weeks dispersed the Carlist bands and pacified the country. In March, 1876, he inflicted a severe defeat on Don Carlos at Pena de Vlada, and thus put an end to the civil war. For the great services to the throne, on which he thus set the seal, he found himself at the age of forty-two in possession of the dignity of captain-general of the Army, which is equivalent to that of a French marshal. In 1877, he became commander-in-chief of the Army in Cuba, where his victories, coupled with the recognition of the political rights of the Cubans, led to the suppression of the insurrection, which had been in progress for seven years. Returning to Spain, he became Minister of War and President of the Council, but resigned in December, 1879, in consequence of the refusal of the Cortes to support his demand for the fulfilment of the promises made to the Cubans. In 1881, on the defeat of Senor Canovas del Castillo, a coalition government under Senor Sagasta and Marshal Campos was formed, and remained in office till October, 1883. In December, 1885, Marshal Campos was elected president of the Senate, and in 1888 he became captain-general of New Castille. The refusal of the Spanish authorities to grant reforms having led to a fresh insurrection in Cuba, Marshal Campos was again sent to that island in April, 1895, and defeated the rebels in several engagements. A petition in favour of Cuban home rule, which he forwarded to Madrid, was not received with favour, and he was supplanted in his command by General Weyler. On his return to Spain he was appointed Governor of Madrid, and it is stated that during the somewhat troublous times which succeeded the defeat of the Spaniards in the war with the United States, the Queen Regent relied largely on the prudent advice which his knowledge of affairs enabled him to place at her disposal.

General Alfred von Rauch, of the Cavalry, who was aide-de-camp to the Emperor William I., and a well-known figure in the entourage of that sovereign, died on Monday in Berlin. General von Rauch, who received many honours at the hands of the Emperors Frederick and William II., as well as from the first Emperor, finally retired from the Army in 1894. He was in his seventy-seventh year.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, Sept. 22.

A telegram from Lord Roberts sent off from Pretoria last night was issued from the War Office during the morning, announcing a successful operation by Lord Methuen on the 19th inst. When marching from Jaagkraal towards Schweizer Renecke (Mamusa) on Harts River, his Lordship heard of a Boer convoy moving in a north-easterly direction. He at once pursued and completely routed the party, capturing a 15pr. gun lost by the 14th Field Battery at Colenso, 26 waggons, some carts, 8,000 cattle, 4,000 sheep, some rifles, and about 20,000 rounds of small arm ammunition. He also took 28 prisoners, eight of whom belonged to the Staats Artillery, whilst three were Cape rebels.

Lieut.-General Hildyard occupied Vryheid on the 19th. The enemy under C. Botha had taken up a strong position, which was turned by Cols. Gough's and Bethune's Mounted Infantry.

Lieut.-Gen. Clery had reported that a patrol of Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry under Capt. Shea surprised a body of the enemy, said to be Theron's Scouts, this (Saturday) morning near Vaal Station. One of the scouts was killed, one wounded, and one taken prisoner. A bag of dynamite was also captured. A prisoner confirmed Theron's death.

Lord Roberts telegraphed at 9.20 p.m. that Sir Redvers Buller had reported the surrender to him of 58 burghers at Spitzkop, 20 at Devil's Knuckles, and several more at Lydenburg. Some Imperial Light Horse returning from French Bob captured 20 prisoners and 200 rifles, and burnt some waggons and ammunition. Major-Gen. W. Knox reported from Kroonstad that the detachment at Roodevaal Spruit under Lieut. Best opened fire at midnight on some Boers crossing the line, and this morning they found two abandoned waggons, one full of dynamite. Dynamite had been laid under the line in several places, but the Boers' hasty flight prevented any damage being done. The Colonial Division, which was moving about between Heilbron and Lindley, yesterday captured four waggons, 2,000 sheep, and 120 cattle.

Early this morning a party belonging to Erasmus commando attacked the Elands River railway station. Their shells damaged some of the buildings, and one of our men was wounded, but the little garrison drove off the enemy without being reinforced. The Boers must afterwards have regretted having left their camp, for during their absence it was captured by Major-Gen. Paget. He made a forced march of 26 miles during the night with the 1st Batn. West Riding Regiment, two companies of the 2nd Batn. Wiltshire Regiment, two companies of 1st Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers, the C.I.V. Battery, and two 5in. guns, captured Erasmus' camp, 2,500 cattle, 6,000 sheep, 50 horses, 12 prisoners, 20 rifles, and some ammunition. Whilst Gen. Paget was operating against the camp, Col. Plumer's Bushmen engaged the force itself, capturing 11 prisoners, 750 cattle, and 1,600 sheep.

Sunday, Sept. 23.

Lord Roberts telegraphed during the evening, announcing that Lord Methuen moved on the 20th inst. to Rietpan, 45 miles east of the Vryburg railway station, and drove a party of Boers before him, capturing 634 cattle, 3,000 sheep, 29 horses, and 24 donkeys. The telegram wound up thus:—

"The few men now left under Cozzie and Pienaars, the two Boer commanders in the most eastern part of the Transvaal, are completely out of hand. They are nearly all Boers, the foreign mercenaries having taken their departure for Lorenzo Marques owing to the Portuguese authorities having promised to maintain them while there, and give them passages to their respective countries."

The Boers evacuated all their positions on the Portuguese frontiers during the morning. At 11 o'clock they destroyed their "Long Toms." Loud explosions were heard, and great columns of smoke were visible from Ressano Garcia. They then crossed the border and surrendered with their arms, ammunition, and horses to the Portuguese, who sent the whole force of 3,000 men, including General Pienaar and his staff, under escort to Delagoa Bay, where they were all lodged at the barracks.

A Reuter's telegram says:—

"The Boers who surrendered to the Portuguese were in a desperate condition. They are ragged, unkempt, and gaunt, and glad that the war, so far as they are concerned, is over. They were evidently kept in ignorance of the real progress of the war and the recent British advances, and were informed that foreign intervention was assured. Their condemnation of Mr. Kruger and his associates, knows no bounds."

Sir Redvers Buller, at Spitz Kop, moved to-day five miles along the road leading to Sabi Drift, Gen. Viljoen, according to reports, was awaiting battle. He was encamped on the other side of the Sabi, where our scouts have been watching his camp daily.

Monday, Sept. 24.

The Guards Brigade, under Pole-Carew, occupied Komati Poort at 8 a.m. this morning. A few rifle shots only were fired. The bridge is intact, but had been prepared for destruction. A very large amount of rolling-stock and locomotives were captured, also some truckloads of "Long Tom" ammunition.

Lieut.-Gen. Pole-Carew reported that he found at Komati Poort one "Long Tom" 98-pr. gun, and one Creusot gun destroyed; 300 rifles were also found, as well as 30 boxes small-arm ammunition, 40 "Long Tom" shells, and 130 boxes of other shells. One cog-wheel engine was also captured.

Lord Kitchener reported from Malelane Station that the Selati branch was blocked with rolling stock, and that as the bridge over the Crocodile River on this line was intact, there would be little difficulty in getting it away.

During a short march which Major-Gen. Barton made from Krugersdorp he took 9 prisoners of war, 720 trek oxen, 950 cattle, 1,000 sheep, 34 ponies, and 17 good waggons.

A mounted force "splendidly equipped," under Lieut.-Col. De Lisle, Durham Light Infantry, left Pretoria in pursuit of De Wet. Each man had two horses, the gun teams were doubled, and the transport was carried on Cape carts.

Major-Gen. Settle, R.E., with a force of 7,000 men, relieved the garrison of Schweizer Renecke, after an engagement in which the Boers suffered heavy loss. The Boer commandant was captured. Schweizer Renecke—36 miles south-east of Vryburg, on the Harts River—was held by a tiny British garrison, which was surrounded by the Boers early this month. On Sept. 17 Lord Roberts reported that the defenders had strongly entrenched themselves, and having sufficient food were in no danger of surrender so long as the provisions lasted. A relieving force was, however, being organised, comprising Paget's Horse, Cape Mounted Rifles, and Diamond Fields Horse and Scouts under Gen. Settle.

Tuesday, Sept. 25.

Lord Roberts sent information to the War Office during the afternoon that Lieut.-Gen. Ian Hamilton had found in the Crocodile River near Hector Spruit several guns, most of them destroyed. These included two 12-prs., which belong to Q. Battery, R.H.A., two 75mm. Creusot guns, two 3in. Krupp 1895 pattern, one 75mm. Vickers-Maxim q.f. mounted gun, No. D 4541, two pom-poms, one 7-pr. R.M.L. mountain gun, three muzzle-loading mountain guns (hexagonal bore). There was besides a good deal of debris of carriages, and probably of more guns.

Lieut.-Gen. Pole-Carew had reported that there was an enormous amount of rolling stock on the main and Selati lines in good order. On the Selati line alone the vehicles extended for eight miles, and there was besides a great deal which has been damaged by the fire. There is evidence of quantities of supplies having been burned. He stated that Komati Poort was in an indescribably filthy condition, and that he was in telegraphic communication with Lorenzo Marques.

Wednesday, Sept. 26.

Lord Roberts telegraphs from Pretoria at 4.15 p.m., stating that Lieut.-Gen. Ian Hamilton's column reached Komati Poort during the morning. Lieut.-Gen. Pole-Carew was getting ample supplies from our Consul-General at Lorenzo Marques, and the Portuguese officials were most civil and obliging.

Seventeen officers and 319 men of the Royal Canadian Regiment (Volunteers) left Pretoria to-day en route to Canada. Lord Roberts, in bidding them good-bye, said he could not let them go back to their homes without saying a word of thanks to them. He wanted to tell them how much he appreciated the excellent work which they had done in February, March, and April, especially on Feb. 27, at Paardeberg. The moment he heard how they had behaved on that day, he telegraphed to the Governor-General of Canada, letting him and their friends know how well the regiment had behaved. He was quite sure the people of Canada were delighted to hear how gallantly and splendidly everyone had behaved in action. He was sorry that they had suffered pretty heavily. The figures were 160 killed and wounded, but, as they knew, they could not go to war without suffering losses. In conclusion, the field-marshal declared, amidst hearty cheers, that, if ever it should be his good fortune to visit Canada, he hoped that he would again meet the Royal Canadian Regiment.

Sir Redvers Buller occupied MacMac River and eastern side of Burghers' Pass to-day. The enemy's guns were easily silenced by C Battery R.H.A. under Major Paget, and the Pass was turned by a half battalion of the Devonshire Regiment well led by Capt. Jacson. Our casualties were four men wounded.

A party of Boers opened fire on the 3rd Cavalry

Brigade, with Major-Gen. C. Knox, to-day with a long-range gun, and wounded two men before they could mount. In the pursuit two waggons and some loose horses were captured.

Thursday, Sept. 27.

Telegraphing at 8 p.m., Lord Roberts stated that the portion of Paget's force at Pienaars River Station, under command of Col. Lionel Chapman, was attacked on two sides during the morning, the enemy being able to come close up under cover of thick bush. They were beaten off after three hours' fighting, and followed up by the Bushmen. Our loss was one Bushman killed and one wounded, and three Royal Munster Fusiliers taken prisoners. The three Fusiliers returned later in the day, and stated that they fired away all their ammunition before they were captured. They saw seven wounded Boers, and were placed in charge of two, one of whom afterwards died, and the other was dangerously wounded. Col. Chapman sent out an ambulance to bring in the wounded Boers.

News came of the capture of Vryheid by Lieut.-Gen. Hildyard. His force was engaged fighting night and day up to the time of the occupation of Vryheid. Gen. Hildyard was opposed by C. Botha's commando, 2,000 strong, and they contested every kopje and ravine before Hildyard's advance. Hildyard's force has now gone ten miles in the direction of Piet Retief.

Heilbron, Reitz, and Lindley stated by Lord Roberts to have been re-occupied.

The natives in the Zoutpansberg and Pietersburg districts stated to be preparing to resist the further advance of the Boers into their territory.

Total casualties since the beginning of the war up to the end of last week:—

	Officers.	N.C.O. & Men
Killed in action	287	2,738
Died of wounds	86	813
Prisoners who have died
in captivity	3	88
Died of disease	149	5,653
Accidental deaths	3	108

Total deaths in S. Africa	528	9,400
Missing and prisoners (excluding those who have been recovered or died in captivity)	9	799*
Sent home as invalids	1,279	29,957†

Total, S.A. Field Force 1,816 41,972‡

Total reduction of the Military Forces through war in South Africa:—

Deaths in South Africa	528	9,400
Missing and prisoners	9	799
Invalids sent home who have died	4	183
Invalids sent home who have left the Service as unfit	—	814
	541	11,196

* This total probably includes a large number of men reported "missing" who subsequently rejoined, but whose return was not notified.

† Of these 183 have died, 814 have been discharged from the Service as unfit, and 810 are in hospital.

‡ The difference between these two numbers is due to the fact that the great majority of the men invalided home have recovered and rejoined for duty (see note *).

"TEN Little Boer Boys" is a new and amusing version of old tale, pictured by A. S. Forrest (Dean and Son). The "ten little, slim little, trim little, grim little Boer boys" disappear one by one, through various catastrophes, until there is not one of them left. It is a capital book for boys, who will be vastly amused at these very clever drawings, in which the decorative spirit of caricature is very strong. The best of all the pictures is of the little Boer boy bewildered by the broad and fascinating smile of a little Kaffir girl, thus leaving behind him his two companions, one weeping with jealousy, the other looking on in disgust. The book is produced in the excellent style for which Messrs. Dean are famous.

NAVY.

Commander (retired) John James Frushard Bell died at Acton on the 19th inst., aged 57. He became Naval Cadet, 1857; Sub-Lieut. 1864; Lieut. 1866; and retired with the rank of Commander 1888. Was with the Abyssinian Expedition, 1857-58 (medal); commanded the schooner Sandfly in Australia, 1875-79; and was Inspecting Officer of Coastguard at Whitstable, 1882-88. In 1890 he was awarded a Naval pension.

Commander (retired) Herbert George Paris died at Bergen on the 19th inst., aged 46, from the effects of sunstroke, while on service in South Africa. He joined as Naval Cadet, 1870; became Sub-Lieut. 1876; Lieut. 1881; and retired with rank of Commander 1899. He was wrecked in the Niebo off Miqueton, Newfoundland, 1874; served as Lieut. of Euryalus in the Egyptian Expedition, 1882 (medal), and during the operations in the Eastern Soudan, 1884 (Suakin clasp); accompanied Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., on a mission to the King of Abyssinia; and was subsequently employed in the suppression of the East African slave trade.

Capt. Herbert St. L. Curtees, R.M.L.I., commanding the Royal Marine detachment at Bermuda, died on the 19th inst., from heat apoplexy, with which he was stricken while playing cricket a few days prior to his death, and did not regain consciousness.

ARMY.

Gen. Richard William Penn Curzon, third Earl Howe, G.C.V.O., C.B., Colonel of the 2nd Life Guards, died at Cowspall on the 25th inst. Born in 1822, he joined the Grenadier Guards as Ensign and Lieut., July 4, 1833; became Lieut. and Captain, April 5, 1844; Brevet-Major, May 28, 1853; Captain and Lieut.-Colonel, June 20, 1854; Colonel, Nov. 17, 1857. Commanded the 3rd Bn. Grenadier Guards, 1861-64; became Major-General, March 6, 1868; Lieut.-General, Oct. 1, 1877; Colonel 17th Regiment, June 25, 1879; General, March 16, 1880; and Colonel, 2nd Life Guards, Jan. 5, 1890. He served as A.D.C. to Sir George Cathcart in the Kaffir War of 1852-53 (medal and Brevet of Major). Served also in the Indian Mutiny, including the siege of Delhi, as Acting Q.M.G., Queen's troops (medal with clasp, C.B. and Brevet of Colonel). Viscount Curzon, Treasurer of the Queen's Household, succeeds his father in the title. He was born in 1861, and has just retired from the Parliamentary representation of High Wycombe. The funeral of Lord Howe will take place at Penn Street Church, Buckinghamshire, to-day (Saturday) at 1.30 p.m.

Lieut.-Gen. Cecil D'Urban La Touche, retired list, Indian Staff Corps, died at Harrogate on the 19th inst., aged 66. He joined the Army July 19, 1850; became Captain July 19, 1862; Major-General Sept. 20, 1894; and Lieut.-General Oct. 29, 1895. He served with the Persian Expedition in 1856-57, including the attack on Reshire, capture of Bushire, destruction of the enemy's magazines at Chakota, and battle of Khooshab (medal with clasp). Served with the Satpooa Field Force in the action fought with the insurgent chiefs and rebels in the Satpooa Hills on April 11, 1858. Served in the Afghan War in 1880, and took part in the defence of Kandahar (mentioned in despatches). Commanded a sortie of all arms on Khairabad, and was present at the sortie of Deh Khojah (mentioned in despatches) and battle of Kandahar (medal with clasp).

Major-Gen. William Henry Binny, Colonel, retired list, Indian Staff Corps, of Crespiigny, Aldeburgh, died at Uffculme, Devonshire, on the 19th inst., aged 74. He joined the Army, June 10, 1843; became Captain June 10, 1858; Major June 10, 1863; Lieut.-Colonel June 10, 1869; Colonel June 10, 1874, and retired with the hon. rank of Major-General, Feb. 19, 1879. He served in the operations against the hill tribes in the Peshawur District in 1855 (medal with clasp) commanded the Banda Military Police Battalion at the relief of Kirwee in December, 1858, and subsequent operations against the rebels in the Banda District and adjoining Native States (medal).

Col. Edward John Stracey-Clitherow, late of the Scots Guards, of Hotham Hall, Yorkshire, and Boston House, New Brentford, Middlesex, died on the 20th inst., at his Yorkshire seat, in his 81st year. Col. Stracey-Clitherow served with his regiment in the operations in the Crimea, including the battle of Alma and the siege of Sebastopol. He was well known in the hunting field, as a four-in-hand whip, and as having started, with the late Mr. Chandos-Pole, the original Brighton coach. He was high sheriff of Middlesex in 1889, and at the time of his death was on the Commission of the Peace for that county, the East Riding of Yorkshire, Norfolk, and Gloucestershire.

Col. Walter Chidcock Nangle, retired list, Royal Artillery and Ordnance Store Departments, died suddenly at Cowslips, Mickleham, Surrey, on the 22nd inst., aged 70. He was last surviving son of the late Mr. G. Nangle, of Kildalkey and Clonbaron, co. Meath, and he served in the Crimean campaign with the Royal Artillery from September to October, 1855, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol. He had passed through the Staff College, and in 1870 joined the old Control Department as Assistant Controller, from which he went to the Ordnance Store Department as Deputy Commissary-General of Ordnance on the re-organisation of January, 1880.

Major William Hart-McHarg, Quartermaster, retired list, late of the Essex Regiment, died at the English Bank, Bruges, Belgium, on the 25th inst., aged 81. He obtained his commission as Quartermaster in the old 44th Regiment, Jan. 25, 1856; and became hon. Major Oct. 1, 1881. He served with the 44th throughout the Eastern Campaign 1854-55, including the battles of Alma and Inkerman, siege and fall of Sebastopol, attack and occupation of the cemetery on June 10 (medal with three clasps, medal for distinguished conduct in the field, Turkish medal). Served also in the campaign in North China in 1860, including the action of Sinho and assault and capture of North Taku Forts (medal with clasp).

Brevet-Major Lionel James Trafford, retired list, Royal Sussex Regiment, died at Tree Hill Court, Ross, Herefordshire, on the 20th inst. The third son of the late Mr. C. G. Trafford, of Michael Church Court, he joined the Army Nov. 20, 1875; became Captain Nov. 7, 1883; and Brevet-Major June 15, 1885; and retired on retired pay. He served in the Egyptian Expedition, 1882, including the operations at Ramleh (medal and bronze star) and also with Soudan Expedition, 1884-85, on the Nile, including the action of Abu Klea and El Gubat with the expedition in steamers for the relief of Khartoum (mentioned in despatches, two clasps and Brevet of Major).

Capt. Arthur Joseph Hill, East Surrey Regiment, died last week at Tung-chau from the effects of an explosion there, in which he was seriously injured. Born July 22, 1863, he joined the East Surrey Regiment from the Militia May 14, 1884; became Captain July 12, 1892; and was appointed to the 1st Bn. Chinese Regiment at Wei-hai-wei April 20, 1899.

Capt. Walter Winton Campbell Stevenson, Manchester Regiment, was killed in action whilst serving with a force under command of Major Montanaro, R.A., south of Ojesu, Ashanti, on Saturday last. Born Aug. 21, 1874, he joined the Manchester Regiment as 2nd Lieut. Feb. 20, 1895; became Lieut. Dec. 19, 1896; and Captain, Dec. 27, 1899. He has been employed with the West African Frontier Force since March, 11, 1899. He served in the operations on the West Coast of Africa in 1897-8 as Transport Officer, Mohmand Field Force and Tirah Expedition (medal with two clasps).

THE continued activity in Woolwich Arsenal has necessitated the suspension for Imperial purposes of the Factory Act. The pressure in the manufacture and shipment of war material is unabated. Workmen are wanted in almost every department, more especially ironworkers and scaffolders, for the erection of two new workshops at the South Boring Mills, and at the new danger buildings on Plumstead Marshes. Coopers are also wanted for powder barrel work, and navvies for the extension of the arsenal narrow-gauge railway, labourers for general work, and lads for cartridge making.

ABERDEEN GRANITE MONUMENTS, &c.—ALEX. MACDONALD and Co., Limited (late A. Macdonald, Field and Co.), Workers in Polished Granites to the Queen, undertake the erection of their work in any part of the country. The largest stock of granite monuments in the country may be seen at their London premises. THE MILITIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—When will our rulers and counsellors in military matters pull themselves together and wake up from the Rip Van Winkle-like sleep into which they have fallen? The Militia has been out in a state of embodiment for six months or more, and it has suddenly occurred to the clever people who manage the conglomerate of Reservists and Militiamen—who now at home constitute our national defence force—that Militiamen are not romping into the ranks of the regular Army as they should do. Having had a taste of military life under peace conditions, with poor accommodation, plenty of walking about in the sun and rain, much unintelligent hustling, and much abuse because their clothes and figures are not all that is desirable, they are supposed to hanker inordinately for a soldier's life; and the question is now being asked why they don't come forward and join the Army. The War Office must have forgotten that, in a moment of unheard-of generosity, they offered such terms to Militiamen in the way of bounty on disembodiment that those who mean eventually to join the ranks will certainly wait till they are dismissed to their homes, spend their Militia bounty, and then take the new bounty for the regular Army. The Militiaman is not quite so stupid as he is imagined to be. The regulations as to pay and bounty, put up as they often are on boards in the canteens by many thoughtful Militia commanding officers, have been discussed over the beer time after time, and notwithstanding the crooked wording of the terms, are fully understood, and "Tommy" of the Militia sees that if he sits tight, free from war's alarms in camp or quarters at home, he can eventually, if hard up when Militia pay ceases and Militia bounties are done with, go into the Army on very advantageous terms. Why should he go now, and, as he thinks, forfeit part of the Militia advantages in the way of pay, extra clothing, bounty, &c., which on calculation he considers worth ten pounds to him, for a paltry extra sovereign? When the rush takes place—a very small rush, after all—into the ranks on the disembodiment of the Militia, very little Militia will be left. Recruiting will die out, it has not been very flourishing all through the war for the Militia, and there will be nothing for it but the ballot for Militia, recommended so highly by Lord Lansdowne in 1899 and so boldly disapproved of by him in 1900. Lord Newtown's article, called "A Case of Paternal Desertion," in one of the smart monthlies, should be read carefully by all who know nothing whatever about our Militia; and their name is legion. The representatives of the Militia on the staff of the Army hardly seem in such close touch as they should be with the force whose interest they are supposed to look after. Do they know anything about it?

A MILITIAMAN.

THE recent orders regarding the training of infantry in regimental transport duties is also to apply to units of embodied Militia.

THE EMBODIED MILITIA.—In expectation of the complete cessation of hostilities in South Africa, the War Office is taking steps for the early disembodiment of a portion of the Militia now under arms. The battalions called up in December last will be amongst the first units to be relieved from duty, and orders for their dismissal will probably be issued shortly. Many of the battalions are in South Africa, and these will be brought home on the earliest possible opportunity.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Brilliant weather has favoured the Prince of Wales' Own Norfolk Artillery during its fortnight's route march through the county of Norfolk, and the regiment has everywhere been received with enthusiasm. A start was made from headquarters at Great Yarmouth on the morning of the 17th inst., when, embarking on two steamers at Gorleston Ferry, the regiment was conveyed up the river Yare as far as Buckenham Ferry, whence the column, 400 strong, under Col. Lord Coke, proceeded to Langley Park, the seat of Sir Reginald Proctor-Beauchamp. It has since visited every place of importance in the county, and has been received everywhere with the greatest enthusiasm. To-day it returns to headquarters, having left behind it wherever it has gone a splendid character for smartness and good discipline.

Lieut.-Col. R. M. Brady, R.G.A., acts temporary in command of the R.A. District Staff, Woolwich, vice Col. F. O. Barrington Foote, and pending the arrival of Lieut.-Col. F. C. Farmer. He will on relief proceed to Gosport to replace Lieut.-Col. H. G. Weir, R.G.A.

Lieut.-Col. Burton, and Lieuts. Peck and Gray, R.H.A., Capt. Ward, R.F.A., and Capt. Webb, R.G.A., sailed from Cape Town on the 11th inst. in the Avoca for England. Lieut. Oldershaw, R.F.A., sailed in the Armenian on the 15th inst.

Major H. B. Gundry has passed the tactical examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

Majors Lindsay and Goff and 2nd Lieut. Turner R.F.A., and 2nd Lieut. Wyld, R.G.A., left Cape Town on the 15th inst. in the Kildonan Castle.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Col. C. Wilkinson completes his five years in the rank of Lieut.-Colonel on Monday next.

Majors H. E. Tyler, H. B. N. Adair, and E. Druitt have passed the tactical examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

Lieut. S. G. Faber has been appointed instructor in estimating, &c., at the School of Military Engineering. He has been on active service in South Africa, and is ordered to take up his new duties at an early date.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—An additional detachment of 100 men, 1st Batn., will be moved to London on Monday from Windsor, to join the detachment now at Chelsea Barracks.

Coldstream Guards.—A company of the 3rd Batn. will be moved on Monday from Chelsea to St. George's Barracks.

Irish Guards.—2nd Lieut. Lord Kingston is on passage home from Cape Town in the Kildonan Castle, which sailed on the 15th inst.

Royal Scots (1st).—Lieut.-Col. Morgan-Payler, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town for England in the Kildonan Castle on the 15th inst.

Queen's (2nd).—Capt. Croften, 3rd (Militia Batn.), sailed from Cape Town on the 11th inst. in the Avoca, invalided.

Bufs (3rd).—Major Holme, 1st Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months on medical certificate.

King's Own Regiment (4th).—Majors Duffin and Somerville, 1st Batn., have passed the tactical examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—Major and Brevet Col. Henry has been selected for the appointment of second in command of the 3rd Batn. at York. Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Sitwell arrived home from South Africa on Monday last, to join the 4th Batn. on appointment as second in command. Major Fletcher is transferred on promotion from the 2nd to the 1st Batn. Capt. Lethbridge is ordered to join the 3rd Batn., and Capt. Hall the 4th Batn., on promotion. Capt. Lynch Stanton, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from the Cape in the Kildonan Castle, which sailed on the 15th inst.

Royal Fusiliers (7th).—Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Townshend, C.B., is on passage home from the Cape in the Kildonan Castle, to join the 4th Batn. on promotion from the Indian Staff Corps.

King's Regiment (8th).—Capt. Parmiter, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from the Cape in the Kildonan Castle, which sailed on the 15th inst.

Norfolk Regiment (9th).—Capt. Carroll is transferred, on promotion, from the 2nd Batn., in South Africa, to the 1st Batn., in India.

Suffolk Regiment (12th).—2nd Lieut. Sinnett, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town in the Kildonan Castle on the 15th inst., invalided.

Bedfordshire Regiment (16th).—Capt. Nicholl, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town in the Kildonan Castle on the 15th inst., invalided; Lieut. Allason, 2nd Batn., left in the Avoca on the 11th inst., also invalided.

Royal Irish Regiment (18th).—Major Shuldham-Lye, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months on private affairs. Lieut. FitzHugh, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town in the Kildonan Castle on the 15th inst., invalided.

Yorkshire Regiment (19th).—Lieut. Raymond is on passage home from the Cape in the Kildonan Castle, having sailed on the 15th.

Lancashire Fusiliers (20th).—Capt. de Pentheny O'Kelly, 6th (Militia) Batn., is on passage home from the Cape in the Kildonan Castle, which sailed on the 15th inst.

Cheshire Regiment (22nd).—Major Cooke, Adj't. 3rd Batn., has passed the tactical examination, qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—2nd Lieuts. Dickinson and Gross and a mounted infantry patrol of the 2nd Batn., is stated in a telegram from Lord Roberts, dated the 26th inst., to have surprised and captured six Frenchmen that day six miles east of Grootvlei railway station. This smart bit of business reflects much credit on the young officers and those under them.

King's Own Scottish Borderers (25th).—2nd Lieut. Cobden, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town in the Avoca on the 11th inst., invalided.

East Lancashire Regiment (30th).—2nd Lieut. Toller, 3rd (Militia) Batn., is on passage home from the Cape, invalided, in the Kildonan Castle.

Duke of Wellington's Regiment (33rd).—Major Humphrys has passed the tactical examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

Manchester Regiment (63rd).—Capt. Sawray, 3rd Batn., and 2nd Lieut. Vanrenen, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the Avoca on the 11th inst., invalided.

North Staffordshire Regiment (64th).—Capt. Johnston is transferred on promotion to the 2nd Batn. (98th) in South Africa.

Highland Light Infantry (71st).—Lieut.-Col. Conway-Gordon presided at a meeting of members of the Highland Light Infantry Association, held in Glasgow, when Capt. Swinton explained the reasons of the proposed changes in connection with the dress of the regiment. He stated that the proposal originated entirely through the regiment. Tracing the history of both battalions, he pointed out that they were raised as kilted battalions, and continued so up to 1809. The 71st were then put in trews, and in 1847 the 74th were put into the same dress. In the "fifties" the officer commanding the 74th was very anxious to have the kilt restored. In 1881 the battalions were linked, and they were left practically with the same dress. There were other changes which were not looked for. The officer commanding the 71st had a chance in 1875 and again in 1877 of having the kilt restored, but they preferred to retain the trews, as they had the distinction of being the only trews regiment among the Highland regiments. But as four other regiments were put into trews the distinction vanished. There was a feeling that they had done wrong by refusing the kilt in the "seventies." Had they asked for it between 1881 and now they might have been refused. This brought them down to the campaign in South Africa, in the course of which the Highland Light Infantry were removed from the Highland Brigade because they did not wear kilts. Telegrams were sent to Lord Roberts and Major-Gen. Macdonald protesting against the step. Lieut.-Col. Kelham protested personally to Lord Roberts, and was informed that it was considered advisable that the Highland Brigade should consist of kilted regiments. A telegram was also sent to Lord Roberts by past and present officers of the regiment at home, and whether it was that telegram, or whether his lordship had been thinking over the matter, he did not know, but Lord Roberts telegraphed that the Highland Light Infantry were to rejoin the Highland Brigade, although they did not do so for two months afterwards. In consequence of what had taken place it was proposed that the Secretary for War be asked to restore the kilt to the two battalions, and that their connection with Glasgow should be revived by naming the regiment the Highland Light Infantry (City of Glasgow) Regiment. The co-operation of the Corporation of Glasgow had been obtained, and the Lord Provost had written to Lord Lansdowne to that effect, and had received a reply that his lordship would consider the matter. It depended how far Glasgow exerted itself in the matter whether the scheme was successful. The courses open to them was to try to get the depot back to the North, which was not likely to be successful, or, as suggested, to take the kilt if they could get it, and recruit from the kilt-loving population of Glasgow, or to say good-bye to their Highland traditions and become a lowland regiment. Capt. Wolfe-Murray, who had just returned from South Africa, explained that the 1st Batn. was in favour of the proposed change. Col. Kelham had said to Lord Roberts that the cause of the removal of the Highland Light Infantry from the Highland Brigade

Reviews.

LITERATURE OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

There seems still to be no diminution in the outpouring of literature concerning South Africa, and, no doubt, there is a great deal that is interesting yet to say. Messrs. Methuen have published two somewhat noteworthy volumes. The first of these is With the Boer Forces, by Howard C. Hillegas, who was correspondent of the New York World with the enemy. The sympathies of this gentleman were with the Boers, but he assures us that he has shown no prejudice in their favour. It is very clearly to be seen, however, that he does not know the British side of the question, though he certainly has written a most interesting book which no one should fail to read. It is full of the fruit of actual observation, and is a most valuable contribution to the history of the campaign. One of the most interesting chapters is that which describes the Sanna's Post fight. The Boers had planned their ambush with great skill, and they retained their fire until the report of Christian de Wet's rifle was heard. Mr. Hillegas asserts that when De Wet challenged the British officer, he received from him a distinct assurance that he would order our men to surrender. The officer rode back, and, according to this story, his troops were then seen to wheel about, whereupon De Wet, who was watching, raised his carbine and shot the officer in question. We cannot, however, follow the details of this account. Incidentally, Mr. Hillegas pays an unconscious tribute to the fine qualities displayed by our troops in the concluding scenes of the war. He is describing the country between Komati Poort and Machadodorp, which he speaks of as consisting of narrow defiles stretching away in all directions, with huge cacti and thick tropical vegetation lining the banks of the river, the railway trains creeping along narrow ledges of the mountain sides, and then dashing down declines into the basin-like hollows of that "impregnable region." This is the country in which our troops have just secured their final success. To Mr. Hillegas a very pathetic feature of Pretoria was the Boers' expression of faith in foreign intervention. What we learn from his book is that the Boers had made up their minds that war was inevitable, and had made every preparation for it. "The horse is a part of the Boer hunter, and he might as well have gone to the frontier without a rifle as in the capacity of a foot soldier. The Boer is a modern Centaur, and therein is found an explanation for part of his success. When once the Boer left his home he became an army unto himself. He needed no one to care for himself and his horse, nor were the leaders of the army obliged to issue myriads of orders for his guidance." We also discover in these pages how really imperfect was the Boer system. They had no discipline and no organisation, and all depended upon the goodwill of individuals. Not the least interesting chapter in the book is that devoted to the Boer generals. To Joubert great credit is given, but he is criticised for having attempted to wage war without the shedding of blood. Cronje is spoken of as absolutely fearless, and as having been convinced that he could fight his way out of the river bed at Paardeberg. Botha is represented as the man for the crisis, deserving of every step of promotion he won, and possessing great personal magnetism and command. He became the idol of the Boers in the Transvaal, while De Wet is the ablest and most fearless leader developed in the late country of Mr. Steyn. Before the war it appears that his chief notoriety lay in the fact that he attempted to effect a "corner" in potatoes on the Johannesburg market, but he soon took a higher line. There is a chapter upon Boer women in war, which is extremely interesting also. We have said enough to show that this book is of unusual character.

The other book published by Messrs. Methuen is The Siege of Mafeking, by J. Angus Hamilton, of which part of the contents have been reprinted from the Times and from Black and White. We have not space to deal at any length with the book, and must be content to say that it is one of the very best volumes that have appeared upon the defence of Mafeking. It contains a vast amount of information, and gives a complete picture of the events. The illustrations are very good.

Why Kruger made War, by John A. Buttery (Heinemann), is another remarkable book, embodying a vigorous attack upon the Boer administration, showing how the war was prepared for, and how the ultimatum was not altogether the outcome of "the passing aberration of national vanity" or personal conceit, but "rather the logical conclusion of a long course of intrigue and deadly preparations pursued under the cloak of friendship." The book is certainly not unprejudiced, but it is full of lively interest, and the author knows his subject well.

Grim as was the siege of Ladysmith from most points of view, there was a great deal of amusement in it for those, like the staff of the Ladysmith Lyre, who knew how to enjoy the unusual circumstances. Among these was Capt. C. M. Dixon, 16th Lancers, who was A.D.C. to Sir George White, and whose lively spirits were quite unquenched by the hardships of the time. He possesses a clever pencil, and killed what he describes as idle hours by making sketches which have just been published in a picture album, entitled, The Leaguer of Ladysmith (Eyre and Spottiswoode). They are reproduced in colours, and are quite captivating in their humorous character, irradiated by a vein of genial satire. Here we have the brave defenders flying in panic at the first shell, and carelessly watching the explosion of the last; a foraging party of Major Altham's Guides bringing in poultry from the pro-Boer farm of Mr. Bester, between Caesar's Camp and the Boer lines; a picnic of the enemy disturbed by a shell; a party of our men bathing, also disturbed by a shell, discharged with hydrophobic zeal on Sunday morning; a picture of the "troglydytic conchologists"—concerning whom the Ladysmith Lyre explained that these were men who lived in caves and sallied forth to find shells; a picture of the flooded-out war artist; another of the Chevril factory, and various pictures of other places and scenes of the times. It certainly is a most attractive volume of very clever drawings, and will make an excellent memorial of the siege.

The Electors of Great Britain and the Defence of the Empire, by Capt. S. L. Murray, Gordon Highlanders (London: Gale and Polden, Limited). This work appears most opportunely on the eve of a General Election. Its author is already well and favourably known as a thoughtful writer, who not only can wield the pen, but uses it with freedom and effect. Capt. Murray is not satisfied that our state of defence is one that our wealth and position as a nation justifies us in regarding with complacency. He is of opinion, as he says, that "this danger of invasion is a real danger." He calls attention to three facts which he holds ought to be considered in connection with the great problem of defence: (1) The commercial and financial interests of the country, (2) the vast increase of the steam mercantile marines of foreign nations, and (3) the changed industrial condition of to-day. In 64 pages the author brings the whole subject of land defence before his readers in a way which cannot fail to interest all who desire to obtain knowledge before recording votes at the hustings. We have no hesitation in recommending the work strongly, for a perusal of it cannot fail to do good in enlightening those who are in search of information on the burning subject of the day.

might be that he was annoyed at something the regiment had done. The reply was in the negative. "On the contrary," he added, "all the reports I have had of the regiment have been most excellent, but I think that the Highland Brigade should consist of four kilted battalions." Therefore it was shoved out of the Highland Brigade because it wore trews. He believed the adoption of the kilt would be a benefit to the regiment. On a vote only two supported the retention of the trews.

Seaforth Highlanders (72nd).—The action of Colour-Sergt. Mackenzie, 1st West African Frontier Force, in the fighting at Dompoussi, under Lieut. Col. Carter, O.M.G., for which he has been recommended for the Victoria Cross, is spoken of as one of the pluckiest things of the war. Last year this same non-commissioned officer received the Distinguished Service Medal for conspicuous gallantry on the Niger. On this occasion he volunteered to lead a charge on the stockade to recover a 7pr. which was out of action, all the gunners having been killed or wounded. With a half company of the West African Frontier Force, Sergt. Mackenzie, at the head of his men, charged the stockade in face of a terrible fire, captured the position, and covered the withdrawal of the gun. Two of his men were killed, and he was himself slightly wounded.

Black Watch (73rd).—Lieut. Innes sailed from Cape Town in the Kildonan Castle on the 15th inst., invalided.

Highland Light Infantry (74th).—"Assaye" writes:—"I hope you will allow me a small space in your columns to give you a rather unique history of one of our old 74th soldiers—namely, Sergt. Samson. This worthy old non-commissioned officer is School Board officer for the parish of Rutherglen, Glasgow. He served 21 years in the Army, has been 21 years out of the Army, 21 years School Board officer, has attended same church for 21 years, has been 21 years married, and has been 21 years resident in the same house. Of the 21 years in the Army, he had 16 years and eight months foreign service. He wears a medal for long service and good conduct. He is hale and hearty, and respected by all who know him."

Gordon Highlanders (75th).—Major Staunton, Adjutant, 5th Volunteer Batn., has passed the tactical examination qualifying for the rank of Lieut.-Colonel.

Royal Irish Rifles (86th).—Capt. McCammond, 4th (Militia) Batn., is on passage home from the Cape in the Briton, which sailed on the 19th inst.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY.

THE announcement that Mr. Goschen has decided to retire from the House of Commons and to give up his office at the Admiralty has evoked a general expression of unfeigned regret and sympathetic interest. His long, varied, and distinguished services to the State are known to all, and no one will dispute his claim to the gratitude of the nation and to his elevation to the peerage, if he wishes for that honour. It is particularly with his services at the Admiralty that we desire to express our acknowledgments, for it is certain that we have never had in the last half-century a more competent, a more energetic, or a more successful "Ruler of the Queen's Navee." It was, we believe, at his own request that he came a second time to the post, and undertook what he rightly calls "the heavy strain of administrative work during the anxious years through which we have passed." In accepting the post of First Lord of the Admiralty Mr. Goschen may be said to have made a new precedent, for until then, at least for many years, it had not been the custom to deem the office worthy of a man holding first rank in the Cabinet. Both by his action in going there and by his action since he has helped to raise the Navy from a state of neglect, to maintain its efficiency as a fighting force, and, as he said in his farewell address to his constituents, to keep it "entirely apart from party politics." It is not alone for his public virtues that the Navy esteems Mr. Goschen, but it cherishes a very personal affection for him as one who has in a singularly whole-souled manner devoted himself ungrudgingly to its interests, appreciated its worth, and sympathised with its difficulties. Whatever may be the case in the world of politics, the Navy will certainly preserve a very warm corner in their memories for Mr. Goschen in recollection of the general confidence with which he has inspired them during the memorable years in which his connection with the Service has existed.

Mingled with the sentiment of regret inspired by Mr. Goschen's retirement, a feeling has been created in the public mind almost amounting to apprehension with reference to the selection of his successor. There can be no question that at the present time few matters of greater moment can be presented to Lord Salisbury's consideration than this. With dangers and difficulties looming ahead in the coming year, it is of the utmost importance that the First Lord of the Admiralty should be a statesman of weight and standing. It is pertinent to remember also that the most successful First Lords of recent times have been business men. It would be the height of imprudence to return to a practice, common enough indeed, but entirely indefensible, of using the post as a reward for the useful services to the party of some promising youngster. Four names have already been mentioned in connection with the office, those of Lord George Hamilton, and Messrs. Ritchie, Hanbury, and Arnold Forster. None of these approaches our ideal of the man for the post, but Lord George Hamilton would come to the Admiralty with a knowledge which should stand him in good stead, and with, we may assume, the ambition of bettering his former record. Oddly enough, the emoluments of the post of First Lord of the Admiralty are less than those of the Secretary of State for India, and to relinquish one for the other would be to put a tax upon Lord George's patriotism, which the country has no right to demand. Mr. Ritchie has not been so successful at the Board of Trade that we are anxious to see him at the Admiralty. Mr. Hanbury's qualifications are not particularly obvious, and Heaven defend us from an English Lockroy! It has also been suggested that Lord Roberts should become Secretary of State for War and Sir Frederick Richards, with a peerage, First Lord of the Admiralty. The idea is not without its fascination, mainly because of the personalities of the two men. If, however, such sacrificing changes are necessary, why not go a step further and make Prime Minister of the general and Foreign Secretary of the admiral? It is quite certain that neither the Army nor the Navy would wish to see anything of the kind take place, since it would not fail to be to their disadvantage in every way.

The necessity for a man of strong will, virile energy, and great business capacity is increased by the circumstance that next year must be full of difficulty for any one who undertakes the administration of the Navy. If he is to fulfil his paramount duty of maintaining the efficiency and strength, of the British fleet at an adequate standard he must be prepared for an arduous, uphill task. Not only is a new programme essential, but there are arrears to be made up for which the contractors are in a great measure responsible. He must be prepared, therefore, to come into conflict with interests and influences. That he will have the strenuous support of his naval advisers at the Board goes without saying, and it may be that the opportunity will come to Lord Walter Kerr, which Lord Hood of Avalon and Sir Frederick Richards met in such very different ways. The present Comptroller has not yet shown that he can deal with dilatory contractors as his predecessor did; Sir John Fisher had a very short way with those gentlemen, which gave us ships, too, in a very short time. But a strong First Lord will have strong colleagues, and he should be able to count upon the support of the country in his endeavours, although it is not without significance that the Navy is conspicuous by its absence from the election addresses now being scattered broadcast. That there are uncertainties in the situation should make us regard with the greater anxiety the selection which Lord Salisbury has to make.

THE AMERICANS AT TIEN-TSIN.

THE American accounts of the capture of the native city of Tien-tsin are extremely interesting, and show how desperate was the service in which the United States troops were engaged. As is well known, the Japanese played the chief part in the attack, and while Colonel de Pélacot gives credit to them and the French for their gallantry with the bayonet, and General Stoessel states that the French and the Germans marched forward with the Russians, the American despatches and letters are largely concerned with the operations of the British and American forces. It is not unknown that some misdirection, the cause of which seems not well made out, marred the attack of the 9th United States Infantry, which suffered very heavily under a destructive fire. All the reports give great credit to the gallantry with which our Naval forces covered the retirement. Thus Major Lee, who succeeded when the colonel of his regiment was killed, says—"Our final withdrawal was handsomely covered by the British Naval troops and United States Marines sent to our aid by General Dorward. These gallant men also aided us in the removal of our wounded, and we owe General Dorward and them a debt of gratitude which will never be forgotten by the American soldiers in that bloody field." Again Lieut. A. U. Loeb, of the 9th Infantry, in a private letter which has been published, speaking of this attack on July 21, says that about half-past eight in the evening, after the moon had risen, British bluejackets came out across the dangerous space, and that under their fire the American troops withdrew. The wounded were started first, and then the uninjured men crawled away on their hands and knees.

This officer gives an account of the great hardships that were suffered in that desperate fighting. He says that the orders were to follow the Japanese and support them in the attack, but "the orders were received wrong by our gallant colonel; so when we started out of the fort we went to the right instead of following the Japs to the left, and there before us was half a mile of open country covered with ditches, mud, water, and mounds, with a terrific and deadly fire coming from the city." The men were ordered to stop fire while advancing. It appears to have been a very dangerous undertaking, but the report says that not a man flinched, though one-fourth of the rank and file and one-third of the officers were killed or wounded. "The bullets fell so thickly that their patter sounded like hail. Many of the men who were struck fell headlong into the ditch, and those who were not killed outright were drowned." It was impossible for help to reach the devoted regiment, and these Americans lay all the day in mud and salt-water up to their waists, and the men in their desperation attempted to ease their burning throats by drinking the horrid stuff. They kept up a fire all the time, and the rifles got so hot that they had to be cooled in the water. Colonel E. H. Liscum was killed, and Major Lee assumed the command. That officer reports that throughout the trying ordeal of the day the great majority of the men behaved with splendid gallantry, and that when the ammunition was nearly exhausted, and the force in the firing line was greatly reduced, there was grim determination on the part of every officer and man to hold on until night should enable them to withdraw. Lieut. Loeb states in his letter that the Major, who fought through the Spanish war, said that this was the worst battle in which American troops had been engaged since the Civil War.

The New York Sun offers some criticism of the Wei-Hai-Wei Regiment on this occasion, and says that, though some of the men were raw recruits, all showed what the Chinese can do when well led and well organised. "With the eyes of the fighting men of eight nations watching to see them show the first sign of wavering, they followed their gallant officers with hardly a duck, and swung across that fire-spattered field with almost as much precision as the superb little Japanese." The gallant officers are given great credit for the intrepidity with which they advanced and led their men, but the correspondent of the Sun censures them for having "stalked along ahead of the men as unconcerned as if only on parade, instead of helpless under a hell fire of Mannlichers to which they could not reply." The correspondent apparently overlooked the fact that these officers had not only to lead their men, but to do so conspicuously, for it is not likely that the Chinese are yet such trained soldiers that they can recognise the leadership of officers who hide themselves. We are extremely glad to render full credit to the gallant Americans who suffered so much on that desperate day in which they did high honour to themselves and to the Anglo-Saxon race.

Navy Notes.

An interesting document has been issued by a body calling itself "The National Committee to Encourage the Formation of a Volunteer Reserve for the Navy" in the form of a memorial, which it is intended to present in due course to the Government. The scheme which is thus put forth has, it appears, received considerable support. The memorial has been signed by the Lord Mayors of London, York, Liverpool and Bristol, the Lord Provosts of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Perth, Dundee and Aberdeen, and a great many other mayors and provosts. Among many well-known names attaching to it are those of Lord Brassey, the Earl of Dunraven, the Marquis of Graham, Lord Cottesloe, Rear-Admiral the Hon. T. Brand, Admirals Close and de Horsey, Sir Clements Markham, and Sir Allen Young. There can be no dispute about the influence of the persons who have thus taken the new scheme under their wing, and they will doubtless be able to bring a great deal of pressure to bear upon the Government and upon the Admiralty. It is very necessary, therefore, that the scheme which they are supporting and which they desire to see accepted by the Government, should be closely examined. The history of naval volunteer movements is easily accessible. Why the Naval Artillery Volunteer Corps was disbanded is to be found in an easily obtainable Blue Book. There should be no reason at all why the whole of the subject should not be thrashed out, and if, on full investigation, it can be shown that this proposed organisation is without the disadvantages which attached to other and previous schemes of the same nature, it must be admitted that an additional reserve for the Navy would be so much to the good.

There are nine clauses in the memorial, of which several will meet with general approval. Others again appear to us to be highly controversial. That a Volunteer force for naval purposes should be organised without delay is a statement to which anyone might subscribe, and it is obvious that, in the event of a great naval war, the combined forces of the Royal Navy and the Royal Naval Reserve would not be sufficient to make good casualties during a prolonged struggle. It is a truism also that a force of 20,000 trained Volunteers, familiar with the routine and discipline of a ship, would be a better source from which to make good the losses of war, than recruits picked up at random by the offer of bounties. When, however, we are told that the establishment of such a reserve of volunteers should not, and could not, in any way prejudicially affect the Royal Naval Reserve, we should wish to have some clear demonstration of the assertion. In the ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE we have consistently advocated the enrolment of naval volunteers, provided they can be obtained from a different class to that upon which we are drawing for the Royal Naval Reserve, and provided also that these volunteers will submit themselves to a training prescribed by the Admiralty, and enter into an engagement to serve anywhere that they may be wanted, whether in or out of the kingdom. Herein appears to us to lie the difficulties which beset the establishment of such an organisation, and, moreover, it is not clear that the Admiralty's scheme of making such volunteers Marine Artillerymen, rather than bluejackets, has not in it a number of advantages, which are more likely to give early and better results.

It is surely late in the day to begin criticising the constitution of the Boiler Committee? When the members were first appointed their names were well received by the Press, nor was any serious attempt made in Parliament to cavil at Mr. Goschen's selections. In a letter to the Pall Mall Gazette we now read:—"The one outstanding fact about the committee is that, with the exception of the naval engineer, not one member has had any practical experience either of working or making water-tube boilers of any design." Another writer in the Engineer maintains that sea-going experience should be regarded as an indispensable qualification in the members of this committee, and the same correspondent breaks away from his subject to contend that the chief inspectors of machinery in the Navy have no experience of the practical working of engines. This is irrelevant to the discussion, unless, indeed, we may assume that actual engine driving is one of the least important functions of the Marine engineer. It is most probable that the opponents of the water-tube boiler would have cavilled just as much had Mr. Goschen made other selections. This committee is composed of most distinguished engineers, and should, in our view, be fully competent to decide for or against the water-tube boiler for naval purposes. Meanwhile, the cruiser Hyacinth, in which extensive experiments are to be carried out under the direction of the Boiler Committee, will be ready to proceed to Stoke's Bay on October 5. The vessel is being supplied with the Marconi apparatus, so that further experiments in wireless telegraphy may be made simultaneously.

The case of George Greentree, the A.B., of the destroyer Flirt, directs attention to the anomaly that officers and men of the Navy cannot be recommended for the Royal Humane Society's medal if they happen to save life when off duty and absent from their ships. The Admiralty rule is designed, we suppose, to ensure that all such recommendations shall be made through the commanding officer; yet it appears desirable that gallantry and humanity should be recognised if these qualities be displayed by officers or men who chance to be on leave. Any civilian who saves life at the risk of his own is eligible for one of the Humane Society's awards. The recommendation has to be made by trustworthy witnesses, of course, but there are, we believe, no other conditions. Hence it is an anomaly that a naval man should be debarred by the Admiralty rules from receiving a medal unless his gallantry happens to be displayed when he is actually on board his ship and under the eye of his captain. In the case of Greentree this was so strongly felt by some of the inhabitants of Portsmouth that a handsome writing-desk has been purchased by public subscription, and at the instance of the representative of the Humane Society in that town. There have, no doubt, been hundreds of cases in which the humanity of naval officers and men when off duty has been completely ignored. Cannot their lordships see their way to modifying a stupid rule?

The progress of the battleship Implacable, building in Devonport Dockyard, has been considerably retarded, we regret to note, by the delay in delivering her 12in. barbette guns. This is the first vessel to be supplied with the new pattern wire-wound gun, and it may be hoped, therefore, that the guns may come to hand without delay in the case of the battleships less far advanced than the Implacable. The secondary armament of this ship consists of 6in. guns of the Mark VII. pattern, and these have been delivered and are now being mounted in their casements. They are officially known as "Mark VII. breechloaders," but are in all essentials similar to the 6in. q.f. gun already mounted in so many of our vessels. The distinction lies in the fact that in the Mark VII. the charge is separated from the projectile, which makes the rapidity of fire slightly less. The new 12in. guns will be subjected to a series of experimental trials by the officers of the Gunnery School when the Implacable is ready for sea.

Captain Arthur J. Horsley, of the Europa, arrived at Plymouth on Sunday last, from Sydney, N.S.W., with paid-off crews, upwards of six months having elapsed since he left England. The engines and boilers of this cruiser are reported to be in a defective state, and the endurance of Fleet Engineer Joseph Purkis, and his staff, has been put to an unusual test while under steam, as well as in effecting repairs during their stay in port. The official mind was exercised shortly after the arrival of the Europa at Sydney, in June last, by the appearance in the home daily press of statements attributed to Chief-Inspector of Machinery James Bedbrook, the Admiralty representative on board that cruiser, regarding the generally defective state of her machinery and propelling power. The Admiralty, by telegraph, directed the Commander-in-Chief in Australia to inquire into these assertions. This gave Mr. Bedbrook an opportunity of entirely denying to Rear-Admiral Hugo L. Pearson, at Sydney, that he had afforded any information on the subject to the local press, although his name was quoted as the authority for the announcements that were communicated by the latter to their London contemporaries. It was highly improbable that an engineer officer of high rank, employed on a special duty, would overlook his responsibility and divulge information that was only intended for the Admiralty.

Major Carne Rasch, the secretary to the Service Members' Committee, takes Captain Lambton to task because, in addressing the Elswick workmen, he stated there were forty Service members in Parliament, and not one of them was on the Liberal side, consequently there was no true criticism. While it is certain that Captain Lambton was wrong in his facts, at the same time it is indisputable that there has been recently little real criticism from the Service members. It is all very well for Major Rasch to speak of forty Service representatives, and to include Sir Charles Dilke amongst them; the fact is that, looked at from a naval point of view, the Service Committee are of very little use, if any. It is possible, and perhaps likely, that the paucity of work apparent from the labour of the Service Committee, is due to the little hearing most of its members get from their fellows in the House. It is, however, very certain that much more results from the work of those outside, and therefore there is considerable ground for Captain Lambton's contention.

The incident of the hoisting of the Boer flag at Bar Harbour by Mr. Van Ness on the occasion of the visit of the British Squadron did not appear to us worthy of remark. It has, however, been made, it appears, the subject of some controversy on the other side, and it was unquestionably meant as an insult to this nation. In connection with the matter Captain Mahan has written to the New York Times recalling an interesting circumstance of a similar nature in his own personal experience during the Civil War. He writes:—"I was first lieutenant of the United States ship Macedonian, which entered the harbour of Plymouth during the early summer of 1863. It will be remembered that then, prior to Vicksburg and Gettysburg, the general feeling in England, as far at least as found expression, was distinctly adverse to our cause. A merchant vessel—British as I recall—lying some distance inside of us, hoisted the Confederate flag. This being done after our arrival, was clearly insulting, as was the action of Mr. Van Ness. Soon after a boat from a British ship of war was seen to go alongside, and the Confederate flag was hauled down, and that afternoon a British naval officer visited our ship, and expressed his regret at the occurrence, and stated that the flag had been lowered by their direction." There will doubtless be some officers in our own Service who may remember this incident.

An inquiry is now being made and estimates prepared in view of the conversion of the Rat, or Burrow, Island, near the Royal Clarence Yard, Gosport, into a coaling station under the recent regulations for carrying out that important duty at our principal naval arsenal. Since the early days of the gunnery establishment the island belonged to the Excellent, and was a favourite place of the late Admiral Thomas Bridgeman Lethbridge's for field-piece drill while he was senior gunnery officer of that vessel.

The Admiralty have accorded the Chief Engineer of Devonport Yard their appreciation of the success that has been obtained from the engines and boilers of the Vestal that were manufactured in his department. He was also entrusted with similar requirements for the Fantôme. The hulls of these vessels were built at Sheerness. This method of building a ship at one public yard and making her propelling machinery at another involves additional expense and the trouble of transport which might otherwise be obviated. The inconvenience will, however, not occur with the new type of second-class cruiser ordered, constructed, and engined at Devonport, and we hope that the success of the Vestal's steam trials will be repeated in this more important display of engineering skill.

The remains of several British sailors and soldiers who died during the Russian War were buried at Erenkoi, on the southern, or Asiatic, side of the Dardanelles, where they have recently been exhumed and are now to be given another, and it is hoped final, resting-place. Lieut.-Commander Edward C. Villiers, of the Salamander, left Constantinople on Saturday last for the Dardanelles, to convey them to the British cemetery at Haider Pasha, south of Scutari. An almost similar instance of re-interment occurred in New Zealand twenty years ago. While the Cormorant was at Auckland the remains of a naval officer were found in the sand on Onehunga beach, at the spot where the officers of the Orpheus were buried in 1862. Public opinion at Auckland suggested their relegation to consecrated ground, which the commodore endorsed by ordering a public funeral, and the inhabitants of the largest town in New Zealand did not fail to appreciate the ceremony. The identification of the deceased officer was assured by portions of his uniform that remained after being eighteen years below the surface.

Navy Personal.

Admirals the Hon. Sir Edmund Fremantle and Sir Charles Hotham, Vice-Admiral Richard Kinnahan, Rear-Admirals A. W. Moore and the Hon. Victor Montagu, Captains Sir Cecil Domville, Bart., Randolph Foote, and Charles Windham, and Commanders the Hon. Francis Addington and George Gubbins attended the service at St. Peter's, Eaton Square, on Friday in last week in memory of the late Captain the Hon. Maurice Bourke.

Vice-Admiral Sir Henry Stephenson and Lieut. Sir Charles Cust, Bart., represented respectively the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York at the memorial service of the late Captain the Hon. Maurice Bourke, at St. Peter's, Eaton Square, on Friday in last week. Captain Prince Louis of Battenberg represented the First Lord of the Admiralty.

Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, Admiral Superintendent of Naval Reserves, assembles the Reserve Squadron at Portland, on November 5, for a month's cruise in home waters.

Commodore R. L. Groome, commanding the South-east of America Squadron, despatched the Wye from Bahia on Saturday last on her homeward voyage, and left that port the following day in the Flora for Cape Frio and the southern portion of his station.

Captain Cecil Burney, of the Sappho, joined the broad pendant of Commodore R. L. Groome at Bahia, on Saturday last, in place of the Pegasus.

Captain Frederick Pike was relieved in command of the Minerva on Tuesday last, on completing two years' service in the Training Squadron, and is fortunate to obtain almost immediate re-employment in commissioning the Gladiator next Tuesday. He is undoubtedly an able officer, and, unfortunately, his future service is limited, for in about five years the Compulsory Age Clause affects him.

Captain Frederick R. W. Morgan, recently promoted from the Tartar, arrived at Southampton on Saturday last in the Union-Castle steamship Moor from South Africa.

Captain Hugh P. Williams, Naval Attaché at Paris, leaves that appointment to commission the Sybilie, at Portsmouth, on the 9th prox., in place of the Barrosa on the Cape of Good Hope and West African Station. It is expected that he will be succeeded by Commander Ewart, late of the Naval Intelligence Department.

Captain A. L. Winsloe is fortunate in obtaining command of the Training Squadron, as he is fifty-sixth on the list of his rank. He has seen considerable service, and distinguished himself in Egypt and Eastern Africa.

Captain the Hon. Walter Stopford vacates the post of Naval Adviser to the Inspector-General of Fortifications to commission the Pallas, at Portsmouth, on the 11th prox., to relieve the Pearl on the North American and West Indian station.

Captain E. Pitcairn Jones' appointment as Flag Captain to the coming Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, instead of commissioning the Gladiator at that port on Tuesday next, is a recognition of his recent distinguished command of a Naval Brigade in South Africa. He previously served in a similar capacity with the Rear-Admiral on the China station, and will, undoubtedly, prove a valuable acquisition to the staff of Admiral Sir Charles Hotham.

Captain Alban G. Tate, of the Pactolus, has undertaken the arrangement of the Channel Squadron recreation ground, recently acquired at Berehaven by Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson.

Commander Montague E. Browning, who has been succeeded in the Prince George by Commander Sydney R. Fremantle, has been appointed one of the secretaries to the Parliamentary Committee on Water-Tube Boilers.

Lieut. Alldin Moore, from the Endymion, in China, and Assistant-Paymaster Arthur Weston, relieved from the Torch after nearly four years' service in Australia, arrived at Plymouth on Saturday last in the P. and O. steamship India.

Lieut. Frederick G. Bird, gunnery officer of the Diadem, has virtually been acquitted by a court martial, held last week on board the Prince George, at Berehaven, in reference to an explosion of a 6in. cartridge on board that cruiser, by which two seamen lost their lives. The court were of opinion that the charge was "not proven," but considered that he did not act with discretion in the orders he gave for testing the cartridges.

Lieut. James S. Parker, of the Nile, sustained a simple fracture of the thigh by being thrown from a runaway horse at Devonport on Saturday last.

Fleet-Engineer Robert Edwards, late of the Powerful, who was the scenic artist of the theatricals in the Far East, has designed a memorial to be placed in Victoria Park, Portsmouth, by the ship's company to their shipmates who lost their lives in South Africa.

ROYAL MARINES.

Lieut.-Colonel and Brevet-Colonel William T. Adair, recently on the Staff in South Africa, embarked in the Union-Castle steamship Kildonan Castle at Cape Town on the 15th inst., in command of details and invalids for passage home. He has been mentioned for the appointment of A.A.G. of the Royal Marine Force, but, according to custom, the post should fall to an officer of the Artillery Division.

Captain L. W. Miller and Lieut. M. W. Festing for the Centurion, Captain E. J. Stroud for the Endymion, and Captain N. F. G. Sampson for the Aurora, left in the P. and O. steamship Mazagon on Saturday last for China.

THE NAVY AND THE ELECTIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The Executive Committee of the Navy League note that in none of the manifestoes issued by the leaders of the two great political parties is any specific mention made of the necessity for augmenting our naval strength.

Our naval position to-day is greatly compromised by the failure to carry out that naval shipbuilding programme stated by Mr. Goschen to be the least that would meet our requirements, and for which money voted by the late Parliament is still unspent.

The Navy League, therefore, submit the following questions, which they suggest should be asked of all candidates for Parliament throughout the kingdom, and they hope that their fellow-countrymen will assist them in this important matter.

1. Are you aware that the officer in command of the Channel Squadron said at Greenock on May 11 last "that he considered we had not enough battleships and cruisers to meet any great emergency that might arise"?

2. Will you pledge yourself to require from the Government, irrespective of party, the provision and maintenance of that standard of naval strength in modern and effective warships, their necessities and auxiliaries, as are sufficient to hold command of the sea against a coalition of any two other Maritime Powers?

3. Will you urge legislation tending to restore British seamen to the vessels of the British Mercantile Marine?

H. SEYMOUR TROWER,
Chairman, Executive Committee.

THE Right Hon. A. Staveley Hill, Judge-Advocate of the Fleet, does not intend seeking Parliamentary re-election, but it will not necessitate relinquishing his judicial appointment. The learned gentleman is three years younger than his junior colleague, Paymaster-in-Chief George Martin, and they have been attached 25 and 24 years respectively to the legal department of the Admiralty.

THE CHINA CRISIS.

Sunday, Sept. 23.

A force of 2,600 Germans left Tien-tsin on Thursday last to join the troops in the neighbourhood of Taku, which number 4,000 of all nationalities, 1,500 being German and the remainder chiefly Russians. The intention was to attack the Peitang forts.

A telegram from Peking states that Gens. Barrow and Chaffee, after a conference, decided to despatch a joint British and American column, 1,300 strong, to San Haitien, under Gen. Wilson, with the object of capturing the arsenal there and dispersing the Boxers, the French and Japanese operating to the north-east. Gen. Wilson, with 800 American and 600 British troops and six guns, marched to the west, the Germans moving to co-operate with the column.

The following telegram has been received from Gen. Chaffee, dated Peking, the 19th inst.:

"The Wilson Expedition has returned, its object having been successfully accomplished. There were no casualties among our troops. Captain Forsythe's squadron scouted to the north-east for 40 miles to relieve some native Christians in that direction, and has returned, bringing 14. The surrounding country is daily growing less hostile and more peaceful, as far as my expedition can determine the question."

A despatch from the French Consul at Canton states that disturbances have broken out near Canton, in the Suntae sub-prefecture. Several villages have been destroyed, and others are besieged by the rioters. The missionaries, however, succeeded in escaping. The first force sent by the Viceroy having been unable to suppress the disturbances, representations have been made by the Consular body with a view to the despatch of a much larger force. The Chancellor of the French Consulate will accompany that force, which will be supported by the gunboat Avalanche.

Monday, Sept. 24.

The Secretary of State for India has received the following telegram from Sir A. Gaselee, dated Peking, September 19:—

"A joint Anglo-American expedition of 1,500 men, with four guns, about half British, proceeded to Liukochao on the 16th, and thence by a night march got in rear of the Boxers' headquarters at Patachu, the well-known eight temples, 12 miles west of Peking. The Boxers were completely surprised, and lost about 50 men. Our casualties were nil. In the evening a squadron 1st Bengal Lancers and sappers went on to Sankarten and destroyed the new arsenal there. No opposition. On the 18th the Americans and bulk of British and troops returned to quarters; 200 men remain at Patachu with Sir Claude Macdonald for a few days."

The following despatch has been received from Admiral Remy, dated Taku, Friday last:—

"A force of Russians, Germans, and Austrians advanced on Peitang forts last night. Fire was opened by the Chinese and kept up all night at intervals. The forts were evacuated at nine in the morning. The Europeans hoisted their colours over the forts at eleven. Twenty-five Russians and Germans are reported to have been blown up by a mine. According to information from Commander Wise, who followed the troops into the forts, only five Chinese were killed."

The St. Petersburg Official Messenger publishes the following telegram from Vice-Admiral Alexeieff:—

"On the 19th and 20th inst. the forts of Peitang, to the north of Taku, were taken by the Russian, French, and German troops under my leadership, from the land side, and under the immediate command of Gens. Stackelberg and Zerkitzki. Our troops took part in the conflict. Sixty of our men were in the storming party at the head of the column. The total loss was 30 wounded. The landing force had no casualties."

In his report regarding the powder explosion at Tung-Chau, in which 14 men were killed and 19 injured, besides Capt. Hill, of the Chinese Regiment, and a native officer, Major Scott, commanding the British force, gives details of the casualties:—

"Welsh Fusiliers: Martin and Padon, dead; Cook, hopeless; Jones, very doubtful; Corpl. Hughes and Pte. Wogan, doubtful; Hugh, hopeful; Highfield and Gilbert will recover."

"Chinese Regiment: Capt. Hill, hopeful; two killed, eight injured. An interpreter was killed."

"1st Sikhs: Nine killed, four injured, the latter including a native officer, slightly."

"The victims formed portion of a fatigue party under Capt. Hill, who, with Capt. Fairfax, was employing them to remove boxes of powder from a magazine in the temple to a safe place, where it was spread out on the ground and burned. The boxes were carried under the supervision of a line of sentries to where the remainder of the party carefully opened them. When it was spread out, the powder was unaccountably ignited, and the explosion occurred. A Court of Inquiry will be held to-day to collect evidence. The sufferings of the victims were terrible. The American and Japanese doctors rendered valuable assistance."

The following despatch was received at Berlin on Saturday last from Shanghai:—

"In magnificent weather Count von Waldersee held a review of the allied troops assembled here. The Bengal Lancers supplied horses for the Field-Marshal and his suite, and furnished the escort. The troops marched past in the following order:—Germans, French, the volunteer corps, composed of English, French, Americans, Japanese and Germans, the Bengal Lancers, and other Indian troops. About 5,000 men in all took part in the march past."

Tuesday, Sept. 25.

The following telegram has been received from the Austro-Hungarian naval commander at Taku, dated Saturday last:—

"Lieut. Demeter and Naval Cadet Lukas, with 20 men, are remaining to guard the southern fort of Peitang and the captured mine centre in the adjoining fort, upon the glacis of which the Austro-Hungarian flag is flying. The Russians yesterday occupied the fortifications of Lutai."

Wednesday, Sept. 26.

The 20th Punjab Light Infantry arrived at Taku on Saturday. An expedition will leave there for Pao-Ting-Fu, the capital of the province of Chih-Li, on the 29th inst.

Gen. Voyron, in a despatch to the Minister of Marine, dated Taku, Sept. 22, announces that his forces landed there on Sept. 21, and that after establishing his headquarters at Tien-tsin, he took over the command of the French expeditionary force, the positions of which are as follow:—The artillery is distributed between Peking and Tien-tsin. The 18th Batn. of Marines occupies posts along the road between the two cities, and the 17th is at Peking. The 16th is about to leave Peking for Tien-tsin, where the battalion which has arrived from Indo-China is stationed. Gen. Voyron also gives some information regarding the attack by the Allies on the Peitang forts, in which a battalion of Marines, a mountain battery and a section of another mountain battery took part. The affair was confined to a cannonade, and the Chinese withdrew after offering a feeble resistance. The Allies had altogether about 100 wounded, among whom there was only one Frenchman. All the losses were caused by the explosion of mines.

The Russian General Staff announces that on the 12th inst. Gen. Sacharoff captured Chu-lan-chen, near the Sungari River.

It is announced that the German naval division, consisting of ships of the line, left Shanghai yesterday for Taku. Three German torpedo cruisers have arrived at Hong Kong.

Li Hung Chang telegraphs that his troops, in obedience to orders, are hunting out the Boxers in the province of Chih-li, and that they have killed more than 1,000 at Hang-chau, and dispersed large bodies at Austub (? Ansu) and Cho-chau, south-west of Peking. Li Hung Chang predicts that the surrounding country will be free from Boxers in less than ten days. He has arrived at Peking.

Thursday, Sept. 27.

We are officially informed that the statement telegraphed from New York as to the reply made by Lord Salisbury to the German circular is incorrect. The answer of the British Government cannot be sent until a further communication has been received from Her Majesty's Legation at Peking.

Nothing is known in Berlin of an ultimatum to be presented to China by Count von Waldersee.

The following cablegram has been received from General Chaffee, dated Peking, Sept. 21:—

"I have offered Li Hung Chang an escort from Tien-tsin. He has declined it. The country is very quiet. Good order prevails in Peking."

The Redoubtable arrived at Taku on Sept. 24. Admiral Pottier has assumed the command of the French squadron in the Far East.

The Russian General Staff have received a detailed report from Vice-Admiral Alexeieff concerning the taking of the Peitang forts. The list of casualties includes four men killed and four officers and 36 men wounded.

Friday, Sept. 28.

The following despatch has been received at Washington from Tien-tsin, dated 24th inst:—

"Gen. Chaffee has arrived. He has visited Li Hung Chang, and informally discussed with him the prospects of a settlement. No other Power except Russia has yet officially recognised Li Hung Chang's presence. Count von Waldersee arrives to-morrow. It is reported that the Russians, after taking the Lutai forts, are rushing north along the railway for the purpose of occupying Shan-Hai-Kwan."

Yang-tsun has been selected as an intermediate camp for the American troops, and it is probable that it will also be chosen as an intermediate camp by the other nations. Yang-tsun is likely to become an important intermediate station of the Allied forces on account of its proximity to the railways and to the river.

The special Wiener Abendpost states that Capt. Bless von Sambuchi has taken over the command of the mixed Austro-Hungarian naval detachment at Peking amounting to about one battalion. The forces landed at Taku up to the present number 494 men of the Austro-Hungarian navy, 8,178 Germans, 8,353 British, 5,608 Americans, 6,575 French, 2,541 Italians, 20,934 Japanese, and 15,570 Russians.

Navy Foreign.

The French Minister of Marine has issued an order of which the inner significance is not easy to discover, although it doubtless has some reference to recent occurrences. "The admirable spirit of discipline," he says, "of which the various branches of the Navy have always given proof, and the unselfishness and devotion with which officers accomplish their duties, place them outside the strife of parties. In order that this independent and excellent situation should continue it is important that all acts of command be strictly limited to the exercise of professional duties. It is particularly essential that the orders, reports, &c., emanating from different naval authorities should be entirely devoted to technical questions of the Service, and should contain no allusion to, and still less any appreciation of questions of political or religious order such as might give rise to controversy, and thus tend to reduce the authority of officers, as well as respect and discipline." This order is to be promulgated in the most formal manner by the Prefects at the Naval ports.

There is an article in the Marine Française upon the British and French Naval manoeuvres by Captain Vignot, which distributes praise and blame pretty equally. In France, the Ministry of Marine was at fault, and the officers afloat did their best; in England, the Admiralty laid down an admirable plan, which the admirals did not understand, and therefore failed to draw the intended profit. Captain Vignot believes that the objects of the Admiralty would have been perfectly studied and investigated if Sir Harry Rawson, in order to gain command of the sea from his adversary, had obliged Sir Gerard Noel to divide his forces, which would have been done if he had remained himself at Berehaven, A2 at Lough Swilly, and A3 had gone to Queens-town. It was more important, says Captain Vignot, for "B" to make sure of his command of the sea, and he would have been compelled to divide his forces in order to blockade the three ports. "A" might then have attempted to attack in superior force or with tactical advantage, and there would have resulted a series of interesting operations in which battleships, cruisers, destroyers, and torpedo boats would have found their opportunities. There is undoubtedly some truth in this, if not in the strategical scheme, and tactical encounters would have been decidedly advantageous. Captain Vignot's idea is that our admirals do not rise to new conditions, and he confesses that he is very glad of it. They are, he says, like too many French admirals, who, to his regret, have remained in the rut of tradition, and thus "from a theme of manoeuvres, which would have permitted interesting combinations, they developed operations which lacked common sense." Of course, Captain Vignot is an exponent of the Jeune Marine, and probably does not understand command of the sea in the sense which we apply to it. It is difficult to see how his plan could have given it to "A."

The Austrian battleship Habsburg, which was launched early in September, belongs to a new type, in which, upon a moderate displacement, many qualities are crowded. She is described as a battleship, but has a high speed, intended to be eighteen knots at sea, and thus partakes of some of the qualities of a cruiser. Her displacement is 8,340 tons, her length 353ft., and her beam 65ft. She has practically unarmoured ends, but the hull is greatly subdivided. For 63 per cent. of the length there is a double bottom of cellular construction, and like construction reaching up to the battery deck, the water-tight compartments extending to a height of 10ft. 6in. above the water line. The total number of water-tight compartments is 174. The pumping machinery is very extensive. Wood is used to a very small extent in the structure, and scarcely at all for constructive purposes. The decks are covered with steel, but the upper deck has wood planking, while below there is linoleum or cortecine, and in the cabins xylolith, or other like substances. The side armour extends for 63 per cent. of the total length, and in the vertical direction from 4ft. 6in. below the water line to 3ft. 6in. above it, and it is 8-6in. thick, while the transverse bulkheads are of 7-8in. steel. Forward of this armour and extending to the stem is thin plating. The armament comprises three 9-4in. guns, of which two are in the forward barbetta, and the third in the after barbetta, as well as twelve 5.9in. Skoda quick-firers—six on a side. They are really coupled in turrets, one being above the other, thus forming a kind of double turret. All the bases of the turrets and barbets as well as the ammunition hoists and communications for the conning tower are protected and connected with the citadel, which is constituted by the side armour and bulkhead. There is a large minor armament. The ship is provided with sixteen Belleville boilers, and two triple-expansion four-cylinder engines.

The report this year of Rear-Admiral Highborn, the Chief Naval Constructor of the United States Navy, will be exceedingly long, and will be historical in its treatment of current details of shipbuilding. Besides the routine of the report, Admiral Highborn will make many recommendations of a radical nature. The Construction Department greatly favours his plan of consolidating the Bureaus of Equipment, Steam Engineering, and Construction into one Bureau, to be known as the Bureau of Construction and Repair. It is proposed by Admiral Highborn that the Hydrographic Office, now under the Bureau of Equipment, shall not enter into this consolidation with Construction, but be transferred to Navigation. Many officers of the Navy favour this project, but naturally it has also many opponents. It will be strongly advocated in the yearly report of the Bureau.

THE VICTORIA CROSS.

WAR OFFICE, Sept. 28.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her intention to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross on the undermentioned officer and non-commissioned officer, whose claims have been submitted for her Majesty's approval, for their conspicuous bravery in South Africa, as stated against their names:—

Capt. William Engleson Gordon, Gordon Highlanders.—On July 11, during the action near Leeshoe-noek (or Doornbosch Fontein), near Krugersdorp, a party of men, accompanied by Capt. Younger* and Allan, having succeeded in dragging an artillery wagon under cover when its horses were unable to do so by reason of the heavy and accurate fire of the enemy, Capt. Gordon called for volunteers to go out with him to try to bring in one of the guns. He went out alone to the nearest gun under a heavy fire, and with the greatest coolness fastened a drag-rope to the gun and then beckoned to the men, who immediately doubled out to join him in accordance with his previous instructions. While moving the gun, Capt. Younger and three men were hit. Seeing that further attempts would only result in further casualties, Capt. Gordon ordered the remainder of the party under cover of the kopje again, and, having seen the wounded safely away, himself retired. Capt. Gordon's conduct, under a particularly heavy and accurate fire at only 850 yards range, was most admirable, and his manner of handling his men most masterly; his devotion on every occasion that his battalion has been under fire has been remarkable.

*MEMORANDUM.—Capt. David Reginald Younger, the Gordon Highlanders, in recognition of the conspicuous bravery displayed by him on the same occasion (July 11, 1900), would have been recommended to her Majesty for the Victoria Cross had he survived.

Pte. C. Ward, 2nd Batn. King's Own (Yorkshire Light Infantry).—On June 26, at Lindley, a picquet of the Yorkshire Light Infantry was surrounded on three sides by about 500 Boers, at close quarters. The two officers were wounded and all but six of their men were killed or wounded. Pte. Ward then volunteered to take a message asking for reinforcements to the signalling station about 150 yards in the rear of the post. His offer was at first refused owing to the practical certainty of his being shot; but, on his insisting, he was allowed to go. He got across untouched through a storm of shots from each flank, and, having delivered his message, he voluntarily returned from a place of absolute safety, and recrossed the fire-swept ground to assure his commanding officer that the message had been sent. On this occasion he was severely wounded. But for this gallant action the post would certainly have been captured.

Corpl. J. Shaul, Highland Light Infantry.—On Dec. 11, 1899, during the battle of Magersfontein, Corpl. Shaul was observed (not only by the officers of his own battalion, but by several officers of other regiments) to perform several specific acts of bravery. Corpl. Shaul was in charge of stretcher-bearers; but at one period of the battle he was seen encouraging men to advance across the open. He was most conspicuous during the day in dressing men's wounds, and in one case he came, under a heavy fire, to a man who was lying wounded in the back, and, with the utmost coolness and deliberation, sat down beside the wounded man and proceeded to dress his wound. Having done this, he got up and went quietly to another part of the field. This act of gallantry was performed under a continuous and heavy fire as coolly and quietly as if there had been no enemy near.

As some misapprehension exists with respect to the issue of rifles to members of rifle clubs, it is stated that beyond the issue on loan of one Lee-Enfield rifle to every ten members for practice, 30 per cent. of the strength of each rifle club affiliated to the National Rifle Association will be allowed to purchase Martini-Enfield rifles, the price being fixed at 38s. each.

INSTRUCTIONS have been issued from the War Office pointing out that no men returned from South Africa who have been prisoners released on parole are to be sent back to South Africa.

A CIRCULAR letter has been sent out from the head office of the Army League and Imperial Defence Association to the election committees of all parties throughout the United Kingdom, impressing upon them the necessity of obtaining a definite declaration on the subject of Army reform from every candidate.

A NEW quick-firing gun, discharging 300 shots per minute, with a muzzle velocity of nearly 2,000 feet per second, has been invented by a Newcastle inventor. The shots are impelled by centrifugal motion, without the aid of explosives, consequently, when fired, there is neither noise nor recoil. The gun can be mounted on a light carriage or motor platform for field purposes. Standing 5ft. in height and weighing about 6cwt., it is worked by two men protected by a shield. The power is generated by a small oil motor mounted on a gun-carriage with generative electric machine. It may thus supply any number of guns over any area from the one reservoir. The gun fires round a complete circle, and possess a vertical range of 90 degrees.

DISABLED SOLDIERS.—Lord Lansdowne writes to a correspondent, who urged that liberal provision ought to be made for soldiers disabled in South Africa, as follows:—"Under the Army Regulations all men of the Regular Army who are incapacitated by wounds or injuries received in action or in the performance of military duty are entitled to pensions, ranging in the case of non-commissioned officers and men, wholly disabled, from 1s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. a day and in the case of men partially disabled, from 6d. to 3s. 6d. a day. Non-commissioned officers and men disabled by sickness attributable to service receive pensions varying from 6d. to 1s. 6d. per day." His lordship states that members of the Colonial Forces serving in South Africa are entitled to the same rates as the Regular troops.

It has been brought to the notice of the Commander-in-Chief, with respect to the arrangements made for dealing with the sick and wounded arriving from South Africa, that in several cases Salisbury Plain has been entered on furlough forms and returns as the nearest military station at which soldiers should report themselves on completion of their furlough. This is incorrect, and they are directed in future to report themselves at the nearest other military station.

THE COLONIES AND THE WAR.—The War Office notifies that:—

"A certain number of officers and men, representing so far as possible each of the Colonial corps now serving under Lord Roberts, will be invited to visit this country as soon as it becomes possible to reduce materially the strength of the South African Field Force. These representatives of our Colonial Forces will reach our shores simultaneously with the British troops which may be the first to return at the close of the war. During their stay the officers and men selected for this purpose will be the guests of the nation. Her Majesty the Queen has intimated that if circumstances permit she will be pleased to inspect the Colonial troops and to present them with colours commemorative of the distinguished part which they have borne in the campaign."

RETIRED OFFICERS AND STAFF EMPLOY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—We are constantly hearing that this and that officer called from the Reserve for temporary staff employment will be recommended for extension of service. One officer of my acquaintance told me the other day that he was to retain his appointment for a period of two years. I cannot imagine that any such arrangements really are contemplated, and I trust you may be able to enlighten officers like myself as to the intention of those in high authority, as at present there is a widespread feeling of uncertainty, and unless full attention is drawn to the matter much injustice may be done.

ACTIVE LIST.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—There have been for some time, as doubtless you are aware, disquieting rumours as to the efforts being made by some retired officers recalled to employment to obtain a confirmation of their temporary appointments. One case in particular is spoken of freely. It is that of a cavalry officer who has been appointed officiating assistant military secretary to a general officer of influence. Naturally there is indignation, and I assure you that in this club I have heard opinions freely given vent to that it would be a most unwise thing to remove from headquarters Major-Gen. Sir Coleridge Grove, who has been an absolutely fair military secretary, and has earned the confidence of the whole service. There is no disguising that there exists just now some anxiety as to the future for reasons that I need not allude to. It is most necessary, as I am sure you will allow, that nothing should happen, after what has occurred in South Africa, to create the impression that patronage in the Army is a matter of favour. Yet there is no denying the existence of a strong feeling that unless great care is exercised, a good deal of patronage will be allowed to go by favour only. In the interests of the Army I trust you will be able to give us an assurance that officers with influence, of whom there are many brought back from the retired list, are not to be allowed, as some of them seem to think will be the case, to retain their appointments beyond the period of the war.

BACK FROM THE CAPE.

Naval and Military Club, Sept. 26.

A REUTER message from Constantinople says:—The remains of 102 British soldiers and sailors who died during the Crimean war and were buried at Abydos and Erenkoi on the Dardanelles have been exhumed and will be formerly interred in the English cemetery at Haidar Pasha.

THE War Office has issued a memorandum for the information of candidates for first appointments as subaltern officers in the Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers. It directs that candidates for commissions should apply to the commanding officer of any regiment they may wish to join, giving full particulars as to age, occupation, place of education, and certificates as to physical fitness and character. The minimum of age for appointment in any of the Services in 17 years, and no examination is required before appointment. Adjutants will give all information as to examinations required afterwards. No list of vacancies is kept at the War Office; but the number of subalterns allowed to each regiment is shown in the "Army List," and thus the number of existing vacancies can be easily ascertained. It is added that expenses vary in the different regiments, and information on the subject can be obtained from the adjutant of the regiment a candidate may select.

THE Council of the Royal Colonial Institute is desirous of raising a fund, by public subscription, for the purpose of erecting in a prominent position in London a suitable memorial to commemorate the loyal services of those officers, non-commissioned officers, and men in the Colonial forces who have fallen in the South African War. A correspondent, who offered a handsome donation, first brought the matter under the notice of the Council, of which the Prince of Wales is president.

MODERN FIELD GLASSES.

To the naval and military officer, the sportsman, and the tourist a binocular is most necessary. The War in South Africa and the operations in China have awakened an interest in field glasses which is so widespread that the reader will certainly be interested in the following description of the new prismatic type of glass which is so rapidly supplanting glasses of the older form of construction, in consequence of a combination of those advantages which go to form a perfect field glass—highest power, finest definition, largest field, smallest size, and lightest weight.

The most perfect models of prismatic field glasses, which represent the highest standard of modern optical perfection, are the famous Goerz-Trieder Binoculars, which have done, and are still doing, excellent service in South Africa, and with which a great part of the German Army, the recognised model army of Europe, is equipped. The ray of light entering the glass is bent by reflecting prisms, as the reader can see in the accompanying figure, which shows the inner construction of this ingenious instrument. An enormous advantage the Goerz glasses have over all other existing prismatic field glasses is the ease with which they are adjusted to the eyes. The Goerz-Trieder Binoculars can be focussed with one hand only, which is far more convenient than having to use both, as is necessary with almost all other prismatic glasses. On horse-back this drawback to other glasses renders their use most difficult, if not impossible.

The extended field of view of the Goerz-Trieder Binoculars is the greatest hitherto obtained in any glass, and this, together with the fine definition, even up to the extreme margin, is due to the special object glasses which are the patent of the Goerz Works. With this larger field of view it is easy to keep the binocular on the required object, an operation very difficult with the hand telescopes of the old construction, owing to their extremely narrow field.

Only a few of those who use field glasses have any idea of the principles of their construction, and the reader is recommended to obtain an interesting pamphlet giving details of the construction of the different types of field glasses, and in particular the Goerz-Trieder Binoculars, obtainable post free, if this paper is mentioned, of C. P. Goerz, 4 and 5, Holborn Circus, London, E.C. The Trieder Binoculars may be obtained of any good optician in the United Kingdom.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

BRASS CAP.—Three years.

CROSSED SWORDS.—Both phases.

R. A. M. C.—It is as yet quite uncertain.

QUETTA.—Not under three years.

BUGLE.—For the Indian Mutiny.

1st CORPORA.—According to the terms of the Warrant you are fully entitled thereto.

RED HACKLE.—1901-1902 most probably.

G. O. C.—Yes.

JUSTITIA.—We doubt whether you have any substantial claim.

INDIAN ARMY.—Unquestionably your view is a correct one.

HOSPITAL ORDERLY.—As at present arranged, but the actual orders are not issued.

J. S. W. (Devonport).—The matter shall have our attention.

STAFF EMPLOY.—We will institute all necessary inquiries.

CAPTAIN, R.A.—We have the matter before us now.

JUMNA.—Yes, for nearly thirty years.

CAPE VOLUNTEER.—The ribbon certainly ought not to be worn until the medal is issued, unless an Army Order gives permission. As yet there is no official intimation of the grant of a medal.

THE Secretary for War has sanctioned the provision of a safe at the orderly room of each regimental depot for the custody of medals, in accordance with the revised Queen's Regulations recently issued.

DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.—The Government has issued a pamphlet giving instructions as to the civil employment of Army Reserve men and discharged soldiers who will before long return from South Africa. Rules for registrations are clearly defined, and special registers will be kept by the Chief Recruiting Staff Officer, St. George's Barracks, Charing Cross; by the Recruiting Staff Officers at Dublin, Liverpool, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Manchester, Leeds, Birmingham, Sheffield, and Woolwich; also by the Commandant of the Discharge Depot, Gosport; the Officer Commanding the Militia and Volunteer Artillery District at Great Yarmouth, Leith, and Scarborough; as well as by the Officer Commanding Militia and Artillery Districts at Londonderry and Cork. The Regulations provide for the employment of discharged soldiers (pensioners only) as messengers in Government offices, and discharged men in the Royal Army Clothing Department, Army Ordnance Department, barrack services, Customs, Office of Works, Ordnance Factories, Post Office, prisons service, Royal Engineer services, Stationery Office, and Government departments generally. Also employment in the police, in the Corps of Commissionaires, on railways, as Customs watchers, &c. A full list is published of the railway companies who will engage discharged soldiers, with the rates of wages, and the districts where to apply for work in all parts of the United Kingdom.

YORK CASTLE is to be used as a military prison.

It is expected that the first demobilisations of the Militia will be made about Oct. 15.

THE Queen has sent £4 to Mrs. Nobes, of East Hanney, in Berkshire, all of whose seven sons have served in the Army.

A PROPOSAL is under consideration to utilise the service of the Punjabis enlisted in the coolie corps now with Gen. Gaselee in China, either as armed orderlies for railway station work or as guards at the Treaty Ports. The coolies are strong, stalwart men, many of whom come from fighting races. Many of them will be quite willing to accept service instead of returning to India.

In consequence of so many men of the Army Ordnance Corps being now at the front, recruiting agencies have been directed to make special efforts to induce men of all trades to join the corps. At the large ordnance and field stores at Aldershot at the present time, owing to the same cause, some hundreds of civilians and pensioners are employed daily, drawing good pay, and many working extra hours.

THE COLT AUTOMATIC QUICK-FIRING MACHINE-GUN AND DUNDONALD GALLOPING GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition or
'303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition, loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready to transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space, weighs about 600 lbs.

THE CLOSING SCENES.

THE interest in the war in South Africa has almost gone, although the incidents occurring here and there are deserving of passing notice. The campaign which closed with the occupation of Komati Poort was appropriately followed by the courtesies that took place on the Portuguese frontier, when some 9,000 British troops under Lieut.-General Pole-Carew were passed in review in presence of the Governor-General of Mozambique, and the flag of Portugal was saluted in honour of the birthday of the King of that country, our old and friendly ally. There are still many guerilla bands in evidence; their suppression is gradually being accomplished, but it is giving much trouble, and may continue to do so for some time longer. On Monday, a skirmish occurred between a band of forty or fifty Boers and a party of Lovat's Scouts eighteen miles south-west of Lindley, the base of the operating columns in the Orange River Colony. Farmers in that direction are praying for protection against Boers, who are shooting blacks and threatening whites. A Boer dressed in the full uniform of Brabant's Horse was lately made prisoner, and a notice has since been issued—none to soon—that such an act is punishable with death. De Wet's followers have lately been collecting at Eland's Kop, five miles north-east of Heilbron, in the same colony. The position was surrounded on Tuesday by Colonel De Lisle and the Colonial Division, but the result has not yet been reported.

Colonel White's little column has returned to Bloemfontein from the south, in the Bultfontein direction, having failed to come up with a marauding band, which fled at his approach. Some dynamite, horses, oxen, and six prisoners were, however, captured. A Boer wrecking party has succeeded in damaging the railway near Wolvehoek Station, at the junction of the Heilbron branch with the main line, thus delaying the journey homewards of the City Imperial Volunteers. General Rundle engaged a small party near Reitz on the 26th ult., and General Campbell, one of his brigadiers, came across another party, and captured a gun of No. 10 Mountain Battery, lost at Nicholson's Nek, with two waggons and 65,000 rounds of ammunition. A telegraph party was attacked between Lindley and Kroonstad on the 28th ult. On the next day a band entered Wepener and helped themselves to saddlery and clothing; they then moved to the south. Their appearance there, and also at Dewetsdorp, caused much excitement. De Wet's force hoisted the Free State flag at Lindley on the 20th ult., but it was promptly hauled down at night by Englishmen. These various incidents are sufficient proof that the guerilla bands infest the country in all directions. They are still capable of doing endless mischief and are said to be—both the men and their horses—in splendid condition. In the Transvaal Colony, Rustenburg, which frequently changed hands during the war, was re-occupied on the 26th ult. by General Broadwood's cavalry. Far away to the south-east a British convoy of waggons, proceeding from Natal to Vryheid, was attacked and overpowered on Monday, a few only of the escort escaping. This is a decidedly unfortunate occurrence at the present time. A train conveying a part of the 2nd Batn. Coldstream Guards was derailed on the same date near Pan Railway Station, nine miles east of Middleburg, where the Boers had damaged the line. Five men were killed, and one officer and eighteen men were wounded, for the most part by explosive bullets. In the existing condition of affairs these attacks on the railways are acts of brigandage. They should be treated with the utmost sternness, or they will continue indefinitely, to the detriment of our prestige in the newly-acquired colonies.

A new Republic is reported to have been proclaimed by Barend Vorster in the Zoutpansberg district. Louis Botha with 2,000 Boers is said to have proceeded thither, and 50,000 cattle are reported to be collected along the Olifant's River. A British column from Komati Poort is believed to be pursuing Botha. General Paget's force at Pienaars River Station north of Pretoria was attacked on the 27th ult., the enemy being repulsed with loss. A patrol near Heidelberg was fired on on the same date. General Barton recently reported an attack on a patrol near Bank Station south of Krugersdorp. Lord Roberts in a despatch on Wednesday, from Pretoria, reported the return to Lydenburg on Tuesday of Sir Redvers Buller after a circuitous march through the country from Spitz Kop, via Pilgrim's Rest and Kruger's Post, during which he swept up many oxen and sheep and large supplies, and destroyed 184,000 rounds of ammunition. One hundred and nine burghers surrendered. No serious fighting occurred, but some loss was caused near Kruger's Post by two long range guns, which, as usual, the Boers succeeded in withdrawing. General Hart, after executing a similar movement about Krugersdorp, has returned to that place with an enormous take of cattle, sheep, and stores, which affords direct evidence of the extent to which the farmers are fleeced by the raiding bands. Lord Roberts reported a very smart affair near Johannesburg, where Lieut. A. Rochfort, with the mounted infantry of the 2nd Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, attacked a Boer laager, rushing the position with the bayonet, and taking nine prisoners, men of importance, and troublers of the district for some time past. The incidents above recorded are but a portion of those still almost daily occurring. They demand for their suppression unremitting vigilance and strong repressive measures on our part, and we are glad to see that Lord Roberts has quite recently made public a notice providing for uniformity in the treatment of the inhabitants of the Transvaal and Orange River Colony, under which burghers who break their oath, or continue the practice of sniping, or acts of "unfair warfare," will be very severely dealt with.

THE STATUS OF THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

WITH varying degrees of cogency two leading questions are being put before the constituencies in the General Election now in progress. They are the future settlement of South Africa and the reorganisation of the Army. The former, however intrinsically important, concerns us as a Service paper less at the present moment than the latter. If we mistake not the signs of the times, the country has come to see that our position as an Empire can only be maintained so long as diplomacy, when convinced of the necessity for a certain line of policy, is backed by the force required to give effect to its mandates. In other words, the Empire must rest upon the stalwart arms of its sons enrolled in adequate force in its two great bulwarks, the Navy and the Army. For the Navy much has been done, wisely and well, in recent years to keep the right arm of the Imperial power abreast of requirements. There has been no great and systematic attempt to place the Army on a footing commensurate with the Empire's expansion. The Army itself cannot be blamed. It is what its organisation, training, and opportunities at any time combine to make it.

Perhaps the most important admonitory lessons taught by the South African War have been the inadequacy of our regular military forces in point of numbers, the want of practical professional training by our officers, our serious weakness in the mounted arms, and the general lack of initiative shown by our Administration in the failure to keep abreast of the times in respect of armaments. The Army, in respect of these shortcomings, while smarting under a deep consciousness of the existing defects, has played its part splendidly in the field. The gallantry of officers and men is beyond dispute. The same immunity from blame cannot be claimed for those whose duty in the past it has been to provide for our Imperial requirements. The responsibility in this respect must undoubtedly be laid, in the first instance, at the door of the Government of the day, whatever its party colour may have been; but individual responsibility has rested more distinctly with the Secretary of State for War, the adviser of Government on military matters. The burden which has to be borne by the War Minister is enormous, and he, being as a rule a Statesman only, requires, and is supposed by the country to have, the highest military expert knowledge at his right hand, to keep him au fait in all questions affecting Imperial defence. Up to 1895 this high military function was performed by the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, who in virtue of his office was the military adviser of the Secretary of State for War. In that year the position of the Commander-in-Chief was distinctly lowered, his responsibility lessened, and his usefulness jeopardised, by bracketing him as an adviser with the heads of the military departments at the War Office, with any of whom the Secretary of State might take counsel at pleasure.

The welcome appointment of Lord Roberts to the exalted position of Commander-in-Chief after his brilliant achievements in South Africa now offers a fitting opportunity, which should not be lost, for the alteration of an arrangement so faulty in itself, and so fraught with mischief. The officer selected and appointed by the Queen to fill the highest military post in the Empire is the proper adviser of the War Minister on all matters appertaining to the defence of the Empire, and the conduct of war, as well as on all questions concerning the strength, organisation, training, equipping, and quartering of the various branches of the armed forces of the Crown. We do not say that, in purely technical matters, the department of the Director-General of Ordnance with the Ordnance Factories, or that of the Inspector-General of Fortifications with works and buildings, should not have a measure of independence, but all proposals made by the heads of those important branches, for the construction of works or barracks, or for the adoption of armament or equipment, should be submitted to the Secretary of State for War by the Commander-in-Chief whose approval should be a condition precedent to adoption. It must be fatal to the smoothness of departmental working within the War Office itself, as well as to a real healthy subordination of the Army to its Chief, and the standing of that Chief before the country, to allow any third party to come as military adviser between the Commander-in-Chief and the War Minister. We therefore most strongly advocate as the initial step in any measures of military reorganisation or of War Office Reform that may be in contemplation—the defining more clearly, and, before all things, the strengthening of the position of the Commander-in-Chief in his relations with the Secretary of State for War.

We have admitted the unpleasant fact that serious defects of organization and administration in our military system have been ruthlessly exposed during the recent war. Let us take comfort, on the other hand, from the revelation the country has received of the enormous defensive power that has lain dormant in the vast over-sea colonies of the Empire. The existence of this unexpected strength has been magnificently demonstrated by the aid given so spontaneously and in so ungrudging a spirit by the colonies in an hour of great national danger. To utilise this new source of defensive strength, which was capable of adding in a short time between 30,000 and 40,000 men to the fighting force in South Africa, will be one of the most important duties to be performed on the reassembling of Parliament. For this reason the country will watch with the deepest interest the formation of the new Government, and especially the selection for the office of Secretary of State for War. It is more than ever requisite that the post should be held by a statesman of high and tried capacity, broad views, and open mind on the many questions better understood by his military adviser—the Commander-in-Chief—than by himself. He should be a man possessing the confidence of the country and of the Service, one who while working loyally with his colleagues would fearlessly place Imperial interests before any considerations of party.

Army Notes.

The official announcement of the appointment of Lord Roberts as Commander-in-Chief was only sent to the Press on last Sunday evening. It duly appeared in all the daily papers on Monday morning. The Army was for some time back prepared for the intelligence, and there was, as far as is publicly known, no special reason for making it on October 1.

Lord Roberts was born 68 years ago at Cawnpore. His father, Gen. Sir Abraham Roberts, G.C.B., had a distinguished record of service in India; as an officer of the Hon. East India Companies' Service, and died, in 1873, as Colonel of the 101st Royal Bengal Fusiliers, of which he was appointed a titular chief on the amalgamation in 1862. After a course of education at Eton, Sandhurst, and Addiscombe, Lord Roberts was appointed 2nd Lieut. in the Bengal Artillery, December 12, 1851, becoming Major-General, December 31, 1878; Lieut.-General, July 26, 1883; General, November 28, 1890; and Field Marshal, May 25, 1895. He served as D.A.Q.M.G. throughout the Indian Mutiny, and was wounded at the capture of Delhi; engaged in the relief of Lucknow and the battle of Cawnpore (thanked by Governor-General, Victoria Cross, Brevet of Major, and medal with clasp); was employed on special service with the expedition of 1863 on the North-West Frontier of India (medal with clasp); served in the Abyssinian campaign, 1868, as A.Q.M.G. Bengal Brigade, and was selected by Sir Robert Napier to be the bearer of his final despatches (Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel and medal); served as A.Q.M.G. and Senior Staff Officer in the Lushai expedition, 1871-72 (C.B.); commanded the Koorum Field Force from the commencement of the Afghan war in 1878, and was present at the storming and capture of the Peiwar Kotal and the pursuit of the Afghan army to the Shutargardan, at the affair in the Maugior Pass and during the operations in Khost (received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament and K.C.B.); commanded the Kabul Field Force during the advance on and occupation of Kabul in the autumn of 1879, and was present in the engagement at Charasiah, and throughout the operations at Sherpore during the winter of 1879-80 (C.I.E.); commanded the Kabul-Kandahar Field Force which marched from Kabul to Kandahar in August, 1880, relieved the Kandahar Garrison, and on Sept. 1 defeated and dispersed the army under Ayub Khan (received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, medal with four clasps, and bronze decoration); nominated G.C.B. and created a baronet for his distinguished services in India; commanded the forces in Burmah in 1886 after the capture of Mandalay (received the thanks of the Government of India, clasp); he was appointed to the command of the Forces in Ireland in October, 1895, and Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in South Africa in December last.

For months, ever since the war began, we have been surfeited with proposals for a reform of the Army. One can scarcely take up a newspaper or magazine without finding some scheme or other propounded for placing our military system on the proverbial "better footing." We are apt to get confused midst this deluge of paper reform. But judging by what has happened during the last fortnight the evil is by no means at an end, for to the legion of newspaper reformers we have now to add another legion of politicians. Nearly every candidate has apparently his own notions as to what should and what should not be done in order to provide us with an efficient and mobile Army. Nothing seems easier to some people than to launch, spic and span, new systems to supply the great want of the British Empire. Army reform has been receiving the attention of our best-known soldiers for thirty years past, and they all are ready to acknowledge that the problem is a most difficult one to solve, owing to the fact that we cannot in this country hope to establish our system on the principles which form the groundwork of Continental organisations. But the candidates for the suffrages of electors have no false modesty. They have nearly all of them mastered all the complications of the situation, and show clearly—to their own satisfaction, at least—how everything could be managed if only the War Office was got rid of. That is, the department which has to bear the blame for everything. No one, of course, suggests that anything else is at fault. According to one eloquent platform orator "every official at the War Office should at once be sent to the right about and punished for the misdeeds of the department by being refused any pension, or any future employment in the public service." If heroic legislation such as this did not give us a strong and efficient Army, what would? We express, we believe, the views of all soldiers when we say that the Army would much prefer to await the result of the Election and let the new Government approach the whole question calmly and resolutely. In some quarters an attempt is being made to bring against the Government a charge of breach of faith. It is alleged that an understanding was given early in the Session that inquiry would be held into all the failures of administration brought to light during the war. The impression was created, it is said, that a committee would be appointed before the House rose to draw up a report. Now this charge could on no pretext be substantiated, for we fail to find that any pledge of the kind was ever given—and if it had been, it would have been a ridiculous one. Any inquiry held during the progress of the war could but have been of superficial character only, with the object of throwing dust in the eyes of the public. It speaks well for the honesty of the Government that it refused to consent to such a proceeding. The inquiry will, in due course, be held, no doubt; but when it is, it is all important, if good is to result, that the whole of the material necessary for the prosecution of the investigation shall be complete, and that the principal officers holding command and administrative appointments in South Africa shall be at home to give evidence if required.

It is a pity that Captain Gambier's vigorous article in the Fortnightly Review is marred by so much exaggeration. His facts are indisputable, but his conclusions are one-sided. The Army has revealed many weaknesses in South Africa, but it is not quite so contemptible as he would have us believe. Our record in China can safely challenge comparison with the record of any one of our rivals, and it must be remembered that our hands are tied, while theirs are free. Germany only sent 200 men to the relief of the Legations, and France less than 500, whereas we sent 3,000 and twelve guns. One thing is certain—the despatch of troops to Manchuria has dislocated the Russian transport and also seriously affected the German carrying trade. We were able to despatch over 200,000 men to South Africa without impeding the course of our trade in the smallest degree. Our Continental friends may distrust our military capacity as thoroughly as Captain Gambier assures us that they do; but it is important to remember that, after all, practical experience is on our side. Nor is it so many years since that Austria required 400,000 men to subdue the peasants of Herzegovina, and the path of Russia to the Pacific. The little wars of France in Madagascar and Tonquin were not great successes. It is easy to quote "the reports of military attachés for further evidence of the decay of our military prestige." There is as much trustworthy evidence on the other side. The Governor of Damaraland, who knows the Boer and his country well, says that no other European army would have succeeded in the present campaign as well as the British Army as done, and his opinion is at least as weighty as that of General Count Luchino dal Verme. It is, too, unfair to the British Army to describe the enemy as "a handful of farmers and shopboys." The number of shopboys in the Boer forces might easily be counted; the soldier burgher belongs to a type which has left its mark in history, from the rise of Attila, the Hun, to the path of Nadir Shah, a century ago. No possible good can result from exaggerating our military deficiencies, and it may do a certain amount of harm.

New Zealand is very much in earnest on the defence question. A few months ago her Premier drew up an excellent scheme, which, if adopted, would have provided the Empire with 10,000 fighting men. The Select Parliamentary Committee to which it was referred is, however, content with considerably less, perhaps wisely preferring that the colony should walk before it attempts to run—at any rate, in military matters. Their report, so far as it goes, is admirable. The fortifications of Auckland, Wellington, Port Phillip, and Port Chalmers are to be mounted with guns of the latest pattern, and at all the principal ports coal depots are to be established for the use of the Navy. This is an important step in view of a possible war, for New Zealand possesses the best steaming coal in the South Pacific, and some experts consider it equal to Welsh coal. That its quality is excellent was proved in Apia some years ago, when Captain Cook navigated the Calliope out of the harbour with the teeth of a cyclone, a fact which no New Zealander ever forgets. It is also proposed to form an Imperial Reserve Force, the cost of which is estimated at £373,000 in the first instance, with an annual charge of £100,000 to cover interest and sinking fund. The report suggests that this expenditure should be met by the home Government, or, if not, that it should guarantee part of the annual cost. It is not so long ago since England guaranteed aid to Greece, so that her own children have a right to expect a similar favour—at any rate, where the great question of defence is concerned. Clubs are to be established and cadet corps filled by youths until they are of an age to join the Volunteers. That this method of training young men for the realities of war works successfully has been proved by the Natal Volunteers, who nearly all received their first military instruction in a cadet corps. It is to be hoped that the other colonies will follow New Zealand's excellent example in devising a practical scheme for the defence and the formation of a fighting force, and that it will not be prudent again to leave the Gold Coast without an adequate force to protect it in case of rebellion. The Ashanti is an enemy which it is safe to underrate.

General Dunne writes:—"It is well-nigh twenty years since the ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE favourably reviewed a little book of mine, 'Calcutta to Peking,' a light sketchy account of the China War of 1860, long since out of print. My old friend Arthur S. Barnes, of my old regiment—the 9th—now wields the pen so well in this magazine that I send you extracts from his last

"Tien-tsin, July 29.

We have been here over a month and were the first to arrive. We had an infernally fine time until we took the city, for we were bombarded by countless guns daily, and the Chinese are wonderful shots. On that day they have kept on eight of their Russian gunnery instructors shot them up to make good shooting—there is some such thing to account for the wonder-accuracy of their artillery fire. I have seen many duels here where they got the range from once and burst shrapnel all round them, but people were feeling for the range for about an hour. Of course their spies tell them all about their maps give the ranges, whilst we have none of these advantages. It is grand to see gunner-men competing absolutely indifferent to shells, and gradually putting their shells and nearer until they get a few well home, and the Chinese cease firing. I have been in quite a few battles, too, and have been shelled in the open, and behind walls. They have given us some surprises at times with big guns too. I counted 39 from their "Empress Dowager," a 4.7 gun, I either pass or burst over our house in half-an-hour and I really believe that for actual weight and the shells thrown at us far exceed anything in Africa; the ranges are so close it is impossible to know a shell is coming until it has arrived. The taking of the city was a great battle, and lasted over 24 hours. It was grand to see the 4 in. lyddite shells knocking the place about too. It was just like a medieval battle, with its puffs of blue and white smoke, coming from the cumulated walls of the city, for the Chinese have many kinds of arrows, besides Mausers and Mannlichers, and even gingals firing black powder.

"The losses were very severe, and these Chinese have startled a good many who thought it would be a walk over. None more so than the Indian force, in whose standing orders is a paragraph to say that our formations should be quite unlike those against the Boers. This is an awful fallacy, for these Chinese are just like the Boers. They are excellent shots, and good at hiding. They will fire at you as long as you fire at them, and will follow you if you retire, but charge at them and they will bolt after firing a train of fire-crackers to frighten you! They are no mean foes, but very seldom come to close quarters. Our fellows (the Chinese Battalion) are first-rate, and have done much useful work so far—it is main hard to expect a half-formed and half-trained regiment to compete with old corps, but here we are, and are doing our best."

Lord Wolseley, during his inspection at Lichfield last Saturday, paid a visit to the new Soldiers' Club in that city. He was received and conducted over the premises by the hon. sec. (the Rev. W. T. Saward), to whom he promised a subscription of £50, and also a portrait and autograph. As a Staffordshire man he heartily approved the present scheme of purchasing the premises for the purposes of the Staffordshire Soldiers' Club. Mr. Williams' scheme is an admirable one, it being to establish the club as a memorial to the non-commissioned officers and men of the South and North Staffordshire Regiments, who have fallen during the war in South Africa. So convinced is the officer commanding the Regimental District of the usefulness of the institution that he has sanctioned a considerable grant from the canteen fund. This constitutes it a club in the eyes of the law. The total sum required to defray initial expenses is £1,500 to £2,000, and this it is hoped to raise in the principal centres in the district from which the men are drawn. A room will be named after each place of importance. Thus the bar and reading-room will be the West Bromwich Room; the billiard-room, the Wolverhampton Room; bagatelle-room, the Lichfield Room; private sitting-room, the Stoke Room; writing-room, the Hanley Room; bedroom No. 1, the Burton-on-Trent Room; bedroom No. 2, the Walsall Room; bedroom No. 3, the Stafford Room. We give these particulars as furnishing a basis for similar schemes in other counties, where a desire is evinced to do something in a practical manner to perpetuate the memory of the brave fellows who have gone to their rest fighting the battle of Queen and Empire. Staffordshire is setting an example which might well be followed.

A Bengal infantry officer, writing to the Times from Meerut on September 15, directs attention to the depressing influence of the treatment of the Bengal regiments on active service where he says "they never have had a chance" since the mutiny, as the Punjab regiments are always sent to the front before them, the result being that the fighting races, Jats and Rajputs, who fill the ranks of nine out of the fifteen regiments of Bengal are disinclined to enlist, and keen British officers do their best to get into favoured corps which are pushed to the front. He suggests as a remedy that regiments should be sent in their turn to the front when there is occasion or matters will become worse and worse. It is rather alarming to find a Bengal officer quoting the opinion of "an Indian officer," that "neither the Bengal nor the Madras army is fit to take the field" as the text for his discourse.

The troops under Sir J. Willcocks in Ashanti had an engagement with the enemy at Abuasu on Sunday last, the fight lasting an hour. The Ashantis are evidently making a strong stand, for Sunday's action was a more or less tough business. Earlier in the century the Ashantis were known among their neighbours as a great fighting race. Up to the outbreak of the present war it cannot be said that they lived up to their reputation. Only once have they taken the offensive, in 1872, when they raided the Cape Coast, and overran the country. True, they made a gallant stand at Amoaful, and, in the four days subsequent, showed both skill and courage in attacking the British line of communications, but they have never made a determined resistance such as a warlike race, favoured by nature as they are, might have been expected to do. In 1881, 1888, and 1894 Ashanti troubles were settled peaceably without any fighting. In this way an idea has grown up that, as soldiers, the natives are only little superior to their neighbours. Indeed, British officers in West Africa have not hesitated to assert that, only in a country of cowards, could the Ashantis have gained a reputation for bravery. The mistake was natural, but unfortunately it has been learned at a bitter cost in the present campaign. Since last April the rebellion has called forth the most strenuous exertion on the part of the little band of English officers on the spot, and all West Africa has sent reinforcements to their aid. Nevertheless, it still drags on, and the Ashantis cannot be said to have scored a single success. They were not even able to seriously hamper the force that retired from Kumasi with Sir Frederick Hodgson. They have been beaten again and again. Their allies one after the other have submitted. But the true Ashanti, deserted and defeated as he is, refuses to yield. After the latest engagement, in which Captain Stevenson was killed, a chief surrendered with 400 "guns," but King Kofiata "retired to the West," where he still holds Tugu and Odumasu, and prisoners tell us that he "means to fight to the death." The moral is that the Ashantis possess the spirit of a fighting people. This makes it all the more necessary that the present settlement should be final.

For two years the life of "a first-class trooper" in Baden-Powell's Police will be a happy one as far as pay is concerned, for he will have double the pay of a 2nd Lieut. in the Army, and will have nothing to pay out of his 9s. a day, as his rations are supplied by the Government. But in other respects his life will be exciting and interesting, and the calm of the Reserves will we hope engage the attention of the force at the end of their term of service.

The casualty list in Thursday's War Office report gives more than eighty names of men who died as far back as March and April, and a long list of British South Africa Police who died in Rhodesia—some in October and December, 1899!

The Secretary of State for War has done well to appeal to the public to see to it that no Reservist who has fought in South Africa and is discharged at the end of the war lacks, on his return, the opportunity of securing employment in civil life. The man who has gone through a campaign of this kind with credit deserves well of his country. There is, unhappily, the chance that he may seek work in vain. Lord Lansdowne does not disguise that Reservists cannot be put in the way of getting employment by the military authorities. Local organisations must endeavour to make the situation clear to employers of labour, and when the men come home they ought to be looked after. A considerable strain will shortly be put on the agencies which exist for securing the employment of discharged soldiers. In this connection the report of the National Association for the Employment of Reserve Soldiers for 1899-1900 is of interest. The present report is the fifteenth which the council has been called upon to present. That the work of the association has prospered is shown by results. For the year ending 1886 only 174 men were placed in employment; in 1899 the number had grown to 6,160. This is all the more creditable seeing that the association is worked on the most economical lines, and charges no fees either to the men or employers. No men are registered who do not bear good characters, and every endeavour is made to ascertain their special qualifications before they are recommended for openings in civil life. It is evident that the association must rely largely on the support it receives from the general public, and especially from big employers. It is most gratifying, therefore, to learn that there has lately been a considerable increase in the number of firms which have placed themselves in touch with the organization. Last year in the metropolis alone no fewer than ninety were added to the number. But the most pleasing of all evidence of the value of the society's work is undoubtedly the letters which have been received from all parts of the country from the heads of firms regretting the departure of Reservists to rejoin their regiments, and promising that in recognition of their excellent conduct their places should be kept open for them. The National Association now has eighty-five branches, all, with one or two exceptions, working satisfactorily. As the whole income of the Association, including £500 Government grant and £100 as donations from canteen funds on hired transports, was for the year ending March 31, 1900, only some £900, it will be seen how admirably the Association is administered. Now that such pressure is likely to be put upon it, we trust that an effort will be made to supplement its funds so as to enable it to prepare for the work it will be required to do when the war in South Africa comes to an end, and places have to be found for those who come as fresh hands on to the labour market, hoping to reap the reward of their gallantry.

It will interest Mr. Burdett Coutts and others, no doubt, to learn that in China every attempt is being made to provide for all contingencies, so far as hospital arrangements are concerned, the establishment having been fixed on the most liberal terms. For the European portion, numbering in all about 1,000, ten beds for officers and 200 for men in the field and general hospital have been provided. This is in addition to the hospital ship Maine, containing 175 beds. For the native portion of the force, numbering in all, including non-combatants, about 30,000, there are 1,300 beds in the Native Field Hospitals, 1,500 in the General Hospitals, 200 on the line of communications; also two hospital ships containing about 365 beds, and 500 beds in the General Hospital, Calcutta. The personnel sent to China comprises 135 medical officers, 35 assistant surgeons, 25 native hospital assistants, and 224 nurses. All the hospitals are fully equipped, the ambulance includes 180 bearers to each field hospital, and nine ambulance tongas. A complete conservancy establishment accompanies each hospital. We are assured by a correspondent, a medical officer, that "the utmost care was taken by the military authorities in India to prevent any failure of system, it being recognised that the difficulties of the campaign may be great, and with a trying climate to face the native troops might feel the strain greatly. But the care with which every detail was worked out ought to be a guarantee that the troops will be well cared for."

Although to some officers on the Reserve list the arrangements by which they have been called to employment may have been agreeable, there are many who would be much relieved if some idea could be given them as to the probable date of their release, so that they might make their arrangements accordingly. Several of those in this category are men with large families, who find themselves greatly out of pocket by their recall to duty. Some have properties requiring their care and attention, others have left appointments in civil life which cannot, perhaps, be kept open indefinitely. It would be but fair to allow those who are thus situated to make known their desire to be relieved, and to plan matters so that they would not be unduly inconvenienced.

Everybody will be glad to hear that Captain E. B. Towse, V.C., Gordon Highlanders, has been granted a special wounds pension of £300 a year. Two dates are given on which in separate actions he displayed the conspicuous bravery which earned him his Victoria Cross, on the latter of which he was wounded in such a manner that both his eyes were shattered and the sight completely lost. At Magersfontein, on December 11, Captain Towse displayed both gallantry and devotion in assisting Colonel Downman, who was mortally wounded, and endeavouring when close up to the firing line to carry him on his back. Failing in this, Captain Towse supported him till assistance arrived. But it was on April 30 last that he was wounded in the manner described. On this occasion he, with only twelve men, took up a position on the top of Mount Thaba, far away from support. A force of about 150 Boers attempted to seize the same plateau, neither party appearing to see the other until they were but one hundred yards apart. Some of the Boers approached to within forty yards of Captain Towse and his party, and called upon him to surrender. He at once caused his men to open fire, and remained firing himself until disabled by the fearful wound which caused the loss of his sight. His gallantry in vigorously attacking and driving off the Boers—for he not only fired, but charged forward—saved the situation, notwithstanding the numerical superiority of the enemy. The announcement we are able to make cannot fail to meet with general satisfaction.

The harsh criticisms which were passed by the correspondent of the Times upon the French military manoeuvres do not seem to be received in a very kindly fashion, though we have not so far seen any direct remarks upon them in the military press. Many French officers are not themselves pleased with all they witnessed. Nothing but high praise is offered of the cheerful endurance and general smartness of the officers and men, but there are not wanting gloomy hints that the manoeuvres were, after all, rather hollow. An anonymous general, who has been watching military manoeuvres ever since 1870, writes in the France Militaire concerning his misgivings. He is afraid that the French army tends more and more to return to those evolutions which from time to time were executed before the war of 1870 at the camp of Châlons. The general believes that the desire to see everything, to do everything, to consider as necessary an assembly before the day begins, and to approach little by little to the external forms associated with the Champ de Mars, is leading France to a merely formal achievement. There is no progress, and, certainly, here there should be distinct progress, especially in regard to the question of supply, which is very difficult in time of war, and distinct from the same operation in time of peace. Was it indispensable to unite the four corps in the plain of Beauce? It has been said that these recent manoeuvres were intended to reproduce in the east the day of Villersexel, and in Beauce that of Coulmiers—which the general denounces as a heresy. "We have excellent soldiers, capable of doing hard work with admirable spirit, officers of good will and complete competence for their duties, generals who will give themselves up entirely to their task, military staffs in which the only thought is to acquire and to labour—and yet we do not sufficiently use these qualities."

The Armée Territoriale says of General Brugère that he has fully justified the judgment of those who selected him, and that he has won the confidence of his subordinates. Thanks to his rapid motor-car, which conveyed him to any distant point at which his presence seemed necessary by day or night, he was always in evidence. In every respect he has conformed exactly to military regulations, so that every officer has been exactly informed as to his duties and rights, and the operations therefore proceeded without a hitch. There were no stupid unrealities, and the plan was clear, precise, and well executed, and to each day was allotted a task appropriate, as much as possible, to the conditions of actual war. Twice the operations began by a night skirmish between outposts, and they were methodically unrolled in the events until about midday, and in the evening the positions were resumed where the affair began in the morning. In regard to the men, the Territoriale had nothing but good things to say. It is able, on the authority of a high placed journalist, to give the personal opinions of General Brugère, who says that though much has been accomplished, much remains yet to be done. The unanimous effort deserves the praise of the Press, but the Army is the first to recognise that this effort must be redoubled. "We have not yet reached perfection."

The Echo de l'Armée is the only paper which shows bitterness—not with those who directed the manoeuvres, but with England. After lavishing abundant praise upon everything that took place in the plain of Beauce, and declaring that the Chancelleries of Europe have received a lesson, our Nationalist contemporary goes on to say that in the concert of praise, England alone sounds a bitter and discordant note. The Echo is offended apparently by some reproduction in another journal of what the Times' correspondent has said. "The British people is like a child amused with fairy tales. Are not its Blowitzes instructed to delude it with fantasies and mirages? If they wish to test the value of our troops let them permit the disembarkation at Dover of the army which has just been manoeuvring in the plains of Beauce." We quote these remarks rather to show the fantastic folly of a section of the French Press than to throw any light upon the French manoeuvres.

Attention was drawn lately to the case of a Corporal Money, 7th Battery R.F.A., who appeared before Mr. Francis at the Lambeth Police Court. He had, he said, lost his kit and several medals in a public-house in which he had been drinking. He was sent to Newcastle under a police escort, and there was brought face to face with the real Corporal Money, a soldier of good character, who had no difficulty in proving to the satisfaction of the police that the man they had in their charge was an impostor. Corporal Money has a substantial grievance, for his good name has been temporarily injured by an unprincipled scoundrel. The gallant gunner has, however, the satisfaction of knowing that he has proved to comrades-in-arms how easy it is for soldiers in times like the present to fall into bad hands. It would be well for the incident to be taken to heart by the rank and file of the Army. As Lord Wolseley says in his letter, which appears elsewhere, our greeting to the brave soldiers returning from the war ought to be "something better than simply an incitement to excessive drinking." But it is to be feared that many a good soldier will only return home to find himself ruined by those who, as Lord Wolseley holds with such great reason, "instead of being his best friend, will in reality be his worst enemy."

It is not known yet what number of horses the 5th and 6th Dragoon Guards and 9th and 12th Lancers, and "I" and "J" Batteries, R.H.A., the 13th, 16th, 62nd, 67th, 69th, and 75th Batteries, R.F.A., will take with them to India when they leave South Africa; but it is doubtful whether many of their horses will be conveyed across. It might be as well, therefore, for arrangements to be made in time, as otherwise these units might find themselves at considerable disadvantage on arriving at their new stations.

THE initial cost of despatching the full force from India to China is estimated at £2,100,000 sterling. The monthly recurring expenditure is estimated at £120,000, including the pay of the troops and the cost of rations and grain. Although General Gaselee's supplies are estimated to last till October, an additional three months' supply is being despatched, and a further six months' supply will be sent next month.

SALE OF MEDALS.—Messrs. Debenham, Storr, and Sons have just had a sale of medals at their house in King Street, Covent Garden. These included a naval medal with clasp "Venerable," Jan. 16, 1814, £15; a very fine circular Volunteer medal, Lanivet, Volunteers, presented to Roger Henwood, 1802, £14; a Peninsula war medal with clasp for Ciudad Rodrigo, to 94th Foot, £12 10s.; another with 12 clasps, awarded to a soldier of the 88th Foot, £35; a fine hall-marked regimental medal of the 25th King's Own Borderers, dated 1816, £14; a naval medal with three engagement clasps, 1810-1811, awarded to a lieutenant of the Marines, £22 10s.; an oval Volunteer medal for Tuffnell's Volunteer cavalry, presented to W. Fitch, as best shot, 1799, £16; the naval general service medal with clasp for boat service, Dec. 14, 1814, awarded to H. J. Carr, £11 5s.; the Waterloo medal, awarded to Ensign William Bain, 33rd Regiment, also his sword, worn at Waterloo, £10; the gold Blane medal, 1853, the silver Arctic discoveries medal, 1818-1855, and the Baltic medal, awarded to Alexander Armstrong, £14; and a Peninsula medal, with two clasps for Egypt and Java, to captains of the 69th Foot, and the Sultan's gold medal for Egypt, 1801, £21 10s.

Commenting on the appointment of Lord Roberts as Commander-in-Chief of the British Army, the German Press agrees in saying that the appointment is a becoming reward for the great services he has rendered his country. It anticipates that even if conscription is not introduced in England, there will, at all events, be great changes in the army, especially as regards the training of officers, and it is held that after his recent experience Lord Roberts is the man to superintend any changes which may be necessary as the result of the war. The French and Austrian military papers take the same view. The criticisms are all most friendly to the distinguished field-marshal.

In reference to our article on the pay and position of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, the London correspondent of the Yorkshire Post says:—

"A suggestion has been made that the pay attached to the post of Commander-in-Chief of the Army must be brought up to a more adequate sum than that now given. The former pay of the Commander-in-Chief was about £6,600 a year, but when Lord Wolseley succeeded to the office the amount was reduced to £4,500 on a five years' appointment. The pension to which he is entitled is that of a Field-Marshal, namely, £1,500 a year. As compared with the leading positions in other public departments and professions, it is argued that this is not adequate. When the scale of pay of military officers is revised, that of the Commander-in-Chief is sure to receive attention. There is a wide difference between the remuneration of the head of the military and of the legal professions. The Lord Chancellor receives £10,000 a year as such, and £4,000 a year as Speaker of the House of Lords. He is entitled to a retiring allowance of £4,000. The Lord Chief Justice receives £8,000, the Master of the Rolls £6,000, and each on retirement would receive a pension of two-thirds. In the case of the Church the comparison is still more startling. The pay of army men seems to be based all through on the assumption that they have private means."

Lord Roberts has telegraphed to the Lord Mayor Elect (Mr. Alderman F. Green):—

"PRETORIA, Oct. 2, 1.20 p.m.
"I much regret that I shall not be home in time to accept the kind invitation of yourself and Sheriffs to dinner on Nov. 9. I trust by that time you will have once more amongst you that gallant body of men—the C.I.V.'s—whom I had the pleasure of inspecting this morning before their departure for home.—ROBERTS."

General Sir Power Palmer has issued in India an Army Order on the subject of official correspondence, in which he says:—

"The question of simplifying and reducing the amount of official correspondence and returns having been under consideration, it has been brought to notice:—(1) That sufficient use is not made in Departmental, District, and Station Staff Offices, of the various reports and returns submitted by units, and that commanding officers are frequently called on to furnish by wire or letter, information that has already been given. (2) That notwithstanding the provision laid down in Army Regulations, India, the multiplication of returns, by districts and departments, occurs. The Commander-in-Chief directs that steps be at once taken to discontinue these practices."

Might not this matter receive, with advantage, attention at home?

Lord Hopetoun left England on Thursday evening to take up his duties as Governor-General of the Australian Commonwealth. His staff consists of Captain the Hon. Claude Willoughby, 9th Lancers, Military Secretary, and Lieutenants B. D. Corbet, Reserve of Officers, and R. W. Duff, Forfar and Kincardine Artillery Militia.

Lieut.-General Sir William Butler has issued an order at Aldershot stating that it is expected that all mounted officers off duty shall attend as spectators the field exercises announced in district orders.

Lieut.-General E. C. Griffin, Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, has been appointed a Colonel-Commandant, R.A. He joined the Bengal Artillery, December 9, 1854, and was twice mentioned in despatches during the Mutiny campaign.

Major-General Sir J. F. Maurice, R.A., has been granted a Distinguished Service Reward of £100 a year after upwards of thirty-nine years' service. He served in the Ashanti War 1873-74 (twice mentioned, medal with clasp); Zulu War, 1879 (mentioned, severely wounded, medal with clasp and Brevet of Major); Egyptian War, 1882 (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp, 4th Class of the Medjidie, Khedive's Star, and Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel), and Nile Expedition, 1884-85 (mentioned in despatches, clasp, and Brevet of Colonel).

Mr. Bennett Burleigh, of the Daily Telegraph, tells a story of Lord Kitchener:—

"A certain Yeomanry commander, whilst on parade, rated his men in unmeasured terms. Nothing was right in his judgment that the troops did. They sat their horses wrong, they moved unlike machinery, &c., and were 'no better than a d— rabble.' A lot of guttersnipes, &c. 'That,' said Lord Kitchener, who came up, 'is not the way to address men. They are not a d— rabble, but soldiers, and to be spoken to as such. No troops can be trained in that fashion, and the commander who does not respect his men is unable to lead them.' The whole force heard the observation, and the men were as decorously elated as the Yeomanry officer was obviously crestfallen. Lord Kitchener said no more openly upon parade, but he took that overstrung gentleman aside and read the 'Riot Act,' or what stands for it in military phraseology, to him in such severe fashion that he will never forget the lesson."

Lieut.-General Sir Leslie Rundle has found a warm supporter in Mr. A. G. Hales, the war correspondent of the Daily News. Here is what he says:—

"Where all are good, as a rule it is hard to make a distinction; but in this instance one man stands out above his fellows, and that man is Gen. Sir Leslie Rundle, the commander of the 8th Division. His task from the first was herculean. He had to hold a line fully 100 miles in length; day after day, week after week, the enemy tried to break that line and pour their forces into the territory we had conquered. Had they succeeded, they would have shaken the whole of South Africa to its very centre. This task kept Sir Leslie Rundle busy night and day. Wherever he camped, spies dogged his footsteps; black men and white men constantly upon his track. His every move was rapidly reported to our ever-watchful enemies. But, quick as the enemy undoubtedly were in all their movements, Gen. Rundle nullified their efforts by his rapidity."

Major-General Sir Henry Colville returned to Gibraltar on Tuesday and resumed command of the Infantry Brigade at that station, which he vacated in order to proceed on active service to South Africa.

Major-General the Hon. Reginald Talbot will leave England next week for Egypt to resume his command.

Major-General R. S. S. Baden-Powell took over command of the Police Force at Pretoria on Tuesday. The command will consist of some 12,000 men in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony.

Major-General A. G. Raper has arrived at Jamaica from England and taken over command of the troops at this station on appointment.

Major-General R. H. O'Grady Haly, C.B., commanding the Canada Militia, is organising a church parade and review at Montreal on the 21st inst., the anniversary of the departure from the Dominion of the first Canadian Regiment for South Africa. The general and his staff will be present.

A field officer writes from "Gib." :—

"The news has reached us here of the pending retirement of Brigadier-General H. L. Dundas, commanding the Infantry Brigade, who hands over his duties to Major-General Sir Henry Colville on October 1. Brigadier-General Dundas has earned, during the period of his command, the respect of all who have served under him, and I should like to point out that it was at Gibraltar, as far back as February, 1865, that he won [the silver medal of the Royal Humane Society by saving the lives of two Marines. The retirement from his brigade command will be followed closely by his retirement from the Army. He will be a loss to the Service, for he has had much experience, and is remembered for his courtesy and kindness on all occasions."

Brigadier-General St. J. F. Michell has been permitted to take the name of Fancourt in lieu of that of Michell. General Fancourt will leave England in a fortnight's time for India to resume his district command.

Colonel the Hon. H. Legge, late of the 9th Lancers, and now commanding her Majesty's Reserve Regiment of Lancers, comes as a new Parliamentary hand to St. Stephen's, having been elected as Unionist member for the St. George's, Hanover Square, Division of Westminster, with a majority of 2,574. He should prove a valuable addition to the Service representatives in the House of Commons, and his presence there is the more important as the cavalry has suffered the loss of three old officers in Lieut.-General Sir Frederick Fitz-Wygram and Major-Generals Frank Russell and Goldworthy, all of whom have retired from active political life.

Colonel H. H. S. Watkin, C.B., R.A., attains the limit of age on Monday next. Colonel Watkin will retain his appointment as Superintendent of the Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield.

Colonel G. Poignand, half-pay, lately A.A.G. for Instruction, Western District, will be placed on the Retired List on Monday next, for age disqualification.

Colonel F. F. Johnson, half-pay, A.S.C., on return from active service in South Africa, is appointed A.A.G. North-Eastern District.

Colonel E. P. B. Smith, A.S.C., in Egypt, completes his term of service in the rank of Lieut.-Colonel on Wednesday next, and Colonel W. F. Moore, A.S.C., at Cork, on the 15th inst.

Colonel W. J. Vousden, V.C., C.B., I.S.C., assumes command to-day of a small column which has been concentrated at Chakdara to watch the tribal country during the camping out of the annual Chitral reliefs, which began yesterday. Not that there is any appearance of unrest anywhere, the people of the Swat Valley expressing themselves very sensible of the fairness of all arrangements entered into with our government.

Colonel C. R. Macgregor, C.B., I.S.C., has been appointed to the command of a 2nd Class District, Bengal, with the rank of Brigadier-General.

Colonel H. M. Rose, D.S.O., I.S.C., has been appointed Colonel on Staff to command a station in the Punjab.

Lieut.-Colonel C. Hegan returns from active service in South Africa to resume command of the Cavalry Depot, Canterbury.

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel H. H. B. Watkis, I.S.C., completes his five years as D.A.A.G. at Indian Army Headquarters on Thursday next.

Major H. L. Pennell, King's Dragoon Guards, has been granted a year's extension of appointment as A.D.C. to Sir Anthony Macdonnell.

Major A. F. Montanaro, R.A., returned to Kumasi on the 26th ult., his honour having done excellent work in the neighbourhood of Ofinsu. Major Melliss, I.S.C., was again slightly wounded, Sir James Willcocks, in his telegram from Kumasi, on September 28, says: "Montanaro's good dispositions of troops accounts for our slight loss."

Major M. G. Wilkinson, King's Own Scottish Borderers, on return home from South Africa, has assumed duty on the Musketry Staff, Salisbury District.

Major F. J. Eveleigh, 1st Batn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry, who is serving in South Africa with mounted infantry, will be saved from compulsory retirement by promotion to a half-pay Lieut.-Colonelcy, antedated to September 27, the day upon which he would have had to go otherwise.

Major T. P. E. Lowry, 2nd Batn. West Indian Regiment, attains the age limit of his rank tomorrow. He is the only officer of his rank who will come under the terms of the Royal Warrant during the present month.

Major H. R. Firth, R.A.M.C., has been selected to succeed Colonel J. L. Notter, as Professor of Military Hygiene, at the Army Medical School, Netley. Major Firth won the Alexander Memorial Gold Medal in 1888 and 1891, and the Parkes Memorial Gold Medal in 1889 and 1892.

Majors W. H. Lewin, G. Rippon, and J. Jackson, I.S.C., are to be granted the rank of temporary Lieut.-Colonel to command native regiments.

Major P. B. Lindsell, I.S.C., 15th Bengal Lancers, is about to retire.

Major A. G. Pawle, C.I.V., has been gazetted at Pretoria "Receiver of Revenue for all taxes, revenues, in the Transvaal." The same Gazette has notified the provisional appointment of Captain J. E. H. Orr, C.I.V., as secretary to the Military Governor from August 26 last, vice Major C. Thompson, 7th Dragoon Guards, who was to rejoin his regiment.

Captain E. G. Godfrey Fanssett, R.E., has been appointed a Director of Telegraphs in the Transvaal.

CAVALRY IN SOUTH AFRICA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I read with much interest in your last issue your correspondent's remarks on certain cavalry incidents in South Africa, and your excellent comments thereon. Having lately returned from the front, I may be permitted to say that your correspondent does not exaggerate the feeling that exists, and his opinions carry the more weight coming as they do from an infantry officer. I trust the points raised may be considered. It is not for me to suggest remedies, but I do think that if cavalry are to be expected to be always ready for service something should be done to dispose of stations in which they are frequently kept for a year or so quite inactive to all intents and purposes. I can speak from personal knowledge of the interest which cavalry officers generally take in their profession, and your friendly and straightforward observations on your correspondent's letter really meet the case admirably, but at the same time there does exist a need for a better system, and I am making known the views of many when I say that in any reform of the Army which may be pending, the cavalry should not be overlooked. It should not be forgotten that the work in South Africa has been of the most trying possible kind and the difficulty of providing remounts hundreds of miles from the base has added not a little to the trials of commanding officers and squadron leaders. Your views, however, are so full of good sense that I am sure our case can well be left in your hands. There is one thing I trust you will impress upon the House of Commons, seeing that it is so anxious to mend matters, and that is the provision of stations at which the three arms can not only be quartered, but work together. This reform is all important; until such arrangements are made, it is the height of injustice to say, as some do, that the cavalry as a service is not up to date. How can it be?

SQUADRON LEADER.

THE VICTORIA CROSS.

(From last night's London Gazette.)

WAR OFFICE, Oct. 5.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her intention to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross on the undermentioned non-commissioned officers, whose claims have been submitted for her Majesty's approval, for their conspicuous bravery in South Africa, 1900, as stated against their names:—

Sergt. H. Engleheart, 10th Hussars.—At dawn on March 13, the party that had destroyed the railway north of Bloemfontein had to charge through a Boer piquet and get over four deep spruits, in order to make their way back through the Boer lines. At the fourth spruit Sapper Webb's horse failed to get up the bank, and he was left in a very dangerous position. In face of a very heavy rifle and shell fire, notwithstanding the great chance of being cut off, Sergt. Engleheart returned to Sapper Webb's assistance. It took some time to get the man and his horse out of the spruit and the position became momentarily more critical owing to the advance of the Boers. He was, however, at last successful, and retiring slowly, to cover Webb's retreat, was able to get him safely back to the party. Shortly before this, Sergt. Engleheart had shown great gallantry in dashing into the first spruit, which could only be reached in single file and was still full of Boers hesitating whether to fly or fire. Had they been given time to rally, they must have destroyed the small party of British, as they outnumbered them by four to one.

Corpl. F. Kirby, Royal Engineers.—On the morning of June 2 a party sent to try to cut the Delagoa Bay Railway were retiring, hotly pressed by very superior numbers. During one of the successive retirements of the rearguard, a man, whose horse had been shot, was seen running after his comrades. He was a long way behind the rest of his troop, and was under a brisk fire. From among the retiring troop Corp. Kirby turned and rode back to the man's assistance. Although by the time he reached him they were under a heavy fire at close range, Corp. Kirby managed to get the dismounted man up behind him and to take him clear off over the next rise held by our rearguard. This is the third occasion on which Corp. Kirby has displayed gallantry in the face of the enemy.

THE RETURN OF THE TROOPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The time draws near when we may hope to welcome home many of the gallant soldiers who have so nobly fought our battles for us in South Africa. Their reception will, I know, be cordial, and it is this assured cordiality that impels me to ask those wishing to do them honour to refrain, while extending to them a hearty welcome, from offering them intoxicating liquor. Our soldiers are recruited from all classes of her Majesty's subjects, and only differ from their brothers in civil life by the habits of discipline they have acquired in the Army. Like all of us, they are open to temptation. Many of them must soon resume the occupations and positions their employers have patriotically kept open for them; others will have to seek for new situations, and will require a helping hand in doing so. It is, therefore, most important that all should endeavour to preserve a good name for steadiness and sobriety before entering upon their civil work. I trust that our greeting to the brave soldiers returning from this war may be something better than simply an incitement to excessive drinking, and that all will remember that whoever encourages them in this, far from being their friend, is really their worst enemy.

RETIRED OFFICERS AND EMPLOYMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—With reference to the letter in your issue of Sept. 29, will you kindly find space for the ventilation of the other side of the question regarding the employment of Reserve officers? Many regimentally (temporarily) employed, who have on their hands house, land, &c., are unable to keep up two establishments on the munificent sum paid for their services by a grateful country, would like to know when their services are likely to be dispensed with. If you can throw any light on this point you will earn the thanks of many who, like myself, have been called out at great inconvenience, and at a dead loss from a monetary point of view, for TEMPORARY EMPLOYMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—With regard to the correspondence in your issue of September 25 on the subject of the retired officers now employed, I think there are two sides to the question. Although the greater number of these officers will doubtless be glad to return to civil life, there are a certain proportion who have had to break up their homes altogether, and give up their occupations, sustaining a heavy financial loss in consequence. In some cases these officers would be entitled to an increased rate of pension if they were allowed to remain on full pay for some short time longer, and it would seem only fair and reasonable to allow them to do so, considering the sacrifices they have been called upon to make for the good of the Service.

POOR DUG OUT.

THE WAR AND ITS LESSONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It is to be hoped that this headstrong generation will not blindly take the Transvaal War, and the lessons it has learned therefrom, as its sole pattern in the revision and the reform of our Army. No doubt many changes are worth reproducing; but it would be very easy to show that the greater part of our experiences will never occur again. I see that Dr. Conan Doyle jumps to the conclusion that in the future no branch of the Service need be considered but the infantry, and no weapon will be wanted but the magazine rifle. I have an idea that the magazine does more harm than good. It was the cause of the disaster at Nicholson's Nek in that it led to a foolish waste of a limited supply of ammunition. And at Magersfontein, it is hardly straining probabilities to say that if the Highland Brigade had not had so much ammunition and such ease in firing they would have risen and charged (and captured) the very feeble earthworks in front of which they lay "potting" all day. I am not a rifle expert, but I am told by those who have used it that the Lee-Netford is inferior to the Martini-Henry as a serviceable weapon. The Mauser is nowhere, i.e., except for the peculiar conditions under which the Boers used it, viz., in trenches and positions of their own choosing, accompanied by an attendant pony. And that is where, I think, Dr. Conan Doyle is wrong. To express myself by an Irishism, all his "infantry" were, from the essential point of view of quick locomotion, "cavalry." No, sir, we can scarcely expect a war in any country in the world where the conditions of geographical features and distance, difficulty of transport, distance from base, and utter unpreparedness on our part against the almost perfect preparations of the enemy, will be repeated. Facility in taking cover, and especially in seeking cover for our guns, are lessons that we may perpetuate; but cavalry will generally be essential for reconnaissance, and artillery more so than ever.

J. J. WILLOUGHBY LIVETT,

Late Capt. T.H.R.B.

3, Plowden Buildings, Temple, October 3.

THE INDIAN RELIEFS.—The units which leave India under the proposed programme for the relief at the termination of the war in South Africa are:—To England—2nd Batn. Essex Regiment, 2nd Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers, 2nd Batn. Royal Sussex Regiment, and 2nd Batn. Durham L.I.; 22nd, 50th, and 70th Batteries R.F.A., No. 3 Battery (Mountain) R.G.A. To Aden.—1st Batn. Shropshire L.I. To Mediterranean.—1st Batn. Duke of Cornwall's L.I. To Ceylon.—2nd Batn. Royal Irish Regiment.

It is satisfactory to learn on the authority of Reuter's correspondent at Pretoria that one of the chief causes of complaint against the efficiency of our guns in South Africa has lately been removed by the War Office. At the beginning of the War it was urged that the Artillery did not possess shrapnel shells with a fuse of sufficiently slow burning power to allow of their bursting beyond 2,500 yards. This defect has now been entirely remedied. A new fuse has been introduced which enables field guns to burst shrapnel at 5,400 yards and proportionately increases the range of Horse Artillery.

FLOR DE DINDIGUL CIGAR.—Mild, exquisite, and delicate leaves. No unpleasant taste. Seven gold medals awarded. 3d. each, or five for 5s. Flor de Dindigul Cigarettes (all tobacco leaf, no paper), 8s. per 100, post free, of Bewlay, 49, Strand, London, or of any respectable tobacconists.

Army Foreign.

The French papers are very full of laudatory criticism of the recent grand manoeuvres. They all give high testimony to the good will, the intelligence, the activity, and the endurance of the troops, as well as to the excellent qualities in the officers which led to such good results. A nameless military attaché, who has been interviewed by the Echo de l'Armée, was enthusiastic in his admiration of what he saw, and was particularly gratified to witness the cheerfulness and spirit of the men. Thus the three battalions of the 115th Regiment marched upon a particular day a distance of fifty kilometres, and, on reaching their cantonments, he heard them singing and joking, apparently not very fatigued. Finally, he said that the French infantry was marvellous, and that henceforth the moral strength of the country would be doubled in Europe. The Progrès Militaire has the same high appreciation of the personal qualities which have been displayed, and draws particular attention to the fact that the great army moved and operated, and was furnished with all necessary supplies without a single hitch.

At the same time the voice of criticism is not still, and, although we have not seen in any French papers such a strong attack upon the French tactics as is conveyed in the correspondence of the Times, some observations are offered which would seem to be well justified. The Progrès considers the operations to have been a school of training for the men, and does not seem to suspect that they were not trained in the art of utilising the ground. But it remarks that the manoeuvres have failed as a school for superior officers, in not having placed before them the problems they would have to face in war, such, for example, as the discovery of the enemy, the examination of his position, and the penetration of his purposes. Credit is given to General Brugère for having done his best to introduce the element of the unforeseen, especially in ordering night attacks. Nevertheless, from the point of view of the command, the operations are pronounced to have been much of a failure. It was in the work of reconnaissance, says the Progrès, that the French were weak in 1870, when the Germans far surpassed them, and it draws attention to the very different character given to manoeuvres in Germany now. Thus in regard to the recent operations in Pomerania, the Militär-Zeitung has stated that, though the date of commencement was September 10, the manoeuvres actually began on the 3rd, the intermediate week being given up to the preparatory operations of search and contact. It would appear that in the operations of the French, the points of contact being already indicated, the officers did not take great interest in the work of leading up to the discovery of them.

Great attention has been directed to the artillery and the four-gun battery of the French. The composition of the battery is also being much discussed in Germany. General von Rohne has expressed the opinion that a battery of four guns has the advantage of occupying a smaller front, and that thirty batteries constituted in this way, and thus including 120 guns, would possess greater value than twenty-four batteries of six guns, and of 144 guns in all. An anonymous writer has criticised his view in the Militär-Wochenblatt. He points out exceptional cases of difficult ground, in which even a six-gun battery has proved insufficient, and insists that the supposed advantages of the four-gun formation must remain for the present purely theoretical. General von Rohne himself admits that the smaller battery would feel its losses more; and his critic is not content with his instance, drawn from the day of Gravelotte, when three batteries of the 7th Corps are represented as having been unable to find positions in the artillery firing line. The writer says he knows the ground perfectly, and affirms that, if a proper disposition of the batteries had been made by the Germans, there would have been positions for all of them. He argues further that Sedan was an altogether abnormal instance, and cannot be taken as illustrative of the right battery composition. He concludes by saying that to have too large a number of guns may be inconvenient, but is not dangerous, which would not be the case if the guns were too few, and he says that Germany, having perhaps in the next war to fight upon two fronts, cannot afford to weaken her artillery arm by reducing the strength of the batteries.

"A Colonel on the Active List" writes:—"Having been present at the French manoeuvres, I must say that I was favourably impressed by them. I was out with the Army for three days, and was much struck by the way in which the large forces of infantry were brought into action. There was no confusion, and regimental officers had their men well in hand. Everything was splendidly done, and as for the courtesy of officers I can only remark that personally I carried away a most pleasant recollection of the kindness I received. When it was known that I was an English officer, all ranks displayed the greatest desire to make me feel that I was not an intruder, but an honoured guest."

The French Council of State has decided to reinstate Colonel Picquart in the Army.

The United States Army suffered in the terrible disaster at Galveston, when Captain W. C. Rafferty and Lieut. J. C. Nichols, of the 1st Artillery, were killed, as well as twenty-eight men of the O Battery of the same regiment. Every article of equipment or property pertaining to the battery perished, and not a record of any kind is left, the survivors having saved nothing but the clothes they wore. Looting commenced almost immediately, and seventy gunners were the first of the troops employed on patrol duty.

In conformity with the law recently enacted, the Heir Apparent, Prince Constantine, assumed on Monday the command in chief of the Greek Army. Prince Constantine's appointment has been welcomed by the Press, and it is confidently expected that he will address himself to the arduous task of military reform with tact and resolution. The urgent necessity of reorganising the Greek Army has been clearly recognised ever since the disastrous war with Turkey. A retired German officer of high rank is expected shortly to superintend the reorganisation of the forces.

The Emperor William has conferred on Major-General Stoessel, the Russian officer who commanded the International detachment at Taku and Tien-tsin, the Order of the Red Eagle of the second class, with the star and swords.

The Russian Minister of Ways and Communications has opened a school of river navigation at Blagovestchenk, where officers and mechanics are to be trained for service in the steamers navigating the Amour and its affluence. The school has been founded out of subscriptions collected by the ship constructors in the Amour district. It is announced also that under a recent decree a certain number of military officers are to be employed in future in the flotilla on the Amu-Daria, in order that they may become familiar with the navigation of that river.

THE TASMANIAN AND NEW ZEALAND FORCES.

[WITH COLOURED SUPPLEMENT.]

If anything were wanting to enforce the strong military spirit which exists in New Zealand—and with New Zealand we may link Tasmania—it would be found in the proposals just made by the Colonial Government for strengthening the defences, encouraging cadet corps as feeders for the Volunteers, and creating an Imperial reserve. At the outbreak of the war in South Africa New Zealand was the first of the Colonies to despatch a contingent, and munificent patriotism was displayed in providing for the second contingent, which left on January 20, and for the New Zealand Rough Riders who followed, being picked men drawn from an excellent class. The utmost enthusiasm attended the departure of these forces, whose fortunes have been watched with the keenest interest by the men of the colony. The established forces are the Permanent Militia of the colony, the New Zealand Militia, and the Volunteers. These last have district reserve corps at Auckland, Wellington, Canterbury, and North Otago. The Volunteer Corps are the North and South Canterbury Infantry Volunteers, the Wellington Mounted Rifles, the First Otago Corps, and the Otago Mounted Corps, the 1st Auckland, and the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Wellington Rifles, besides some other local corps. In Tasmania the force comprises the Launceston and Southern Tasmanian Artillery, the Tasmanian Engineers, and three battalions of Tasmanian Infantry.

The force of New Zealanders sent to South Africa numbered over 2,000, and much credit is due to Major Robin of the Otago Mounted Volunteers, who was in command of the first contingent, and took an active part in the operations south of the Orange River. In the action of January 9, when the Boers threatened the communications, the New Zealanders under this officer frustrated the attempt in gallant style. When the Boers attacked our eastern position at Slingsfontein, some days later, there was desperate fighting at what afterwards became known as Zealanders' Hill. The Boers crept up during the night, guided by natives, and opened a very hot fire from a concealed position. The 1st Yorkshires, whose captain was wounded, began to waver, but Captain Madocks, of the New Zealanders, rushed forward, ordering the men to follow, and calling out to them to fix bayonets and charge. The result was that the Boers were driven off, but two New Zealanders, Gourlay and Connell, the former the son of the New Zealand Premier, were killed.

The New Zealanders, again, took a prominent part in the relief of Kimberley, and saw a good deal of hard fighting with Cronje's rearguard. They marched with General Porter to Paardeberg, and after the capture of Bloemfontein were involved in the unfortunate fight at Koorn Spruit, in which, with other Colonials, they covered the retirement of the Q Battery. Several of the New Zealanders were missing after that engagement. The force took part in the general advance, and has often been mentioned for the excellent service it rendered. The Hotchkiss battery has also done very good work during the campaign, and the Rough Riders have come to the front. No colony deserves greater credit for its military spirit and solid services than New Zealand, and the Tasmanians, who have also done fine work in South Africa, deserve to be linked with the New Zealand forces in this high commendation.

It has been decided that officers invalided from active service may for a period up to 91 days during medical board leave, be allowed lodging money elsewhere than at a military station, but subject to certain restrictions.

NOTICE has been given that the grant of medical attendance, &c., to the families of Reserve men called up on mobilisation, and of men of the Royal Reserve regiments, must be in accordance with the regulations for the Army Medical services.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, Sept. 29.

Lord Roberts telegraphed to the War Office that a patrol of Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry was attacked by a party of Boers near Heidelberg, on the 27th. Capt. Hamilton and 57113 Pte. Cockrane being taken prisoners. The following were wounded: 7548 Pte. W. Jamie (dangerously, since dead), 9210 Pte. Craigie (severely), 767 Pte. J. W. Robertson (severely), 9742 Pte. W. M. Wilkie and 1090 Pte. A. North (both slightly).

Yesterday being the birthday of King Charles of Portugal, Lord Roberts sent a message to the effect that "the British Army in South Africa begs to offer to your Majesty its respectful congratulations on this happy day." In honour of the occasion a ceremonial parade was ordered of all the troops at Komati Poort under Lieut.-Gen. Pole-Carew, consisting of the Guards' Brigade, under Major-Gen. Inigo Jones, Major-Gen. Smith-Dorrien's Brigade, the 4th Mounted Infantry, West Australian Mounted Infantry, Victorian Mounted Rifles, Tasmanian Mounted Rifles, South Australian Mounted Rifles, one battery R.H.A., and the 20th and 85th Batteries R.F.A., with four 5in. guns and some "pom-poms." These troops were under the command of Lieut.-Gen. Ian Hamilton. The Portuguese commandant on the border with a large staff attended and witnessed the ceremony. Gen. Pole-Carew and the foreign officers then inspected the troops. After the inspection the generals assembled at the saluting point, the Portuguese flag was hoisted, arms were presented, and the band played the Portuguese National Anthem. The Union Jack was then hoisted and similar honours were rendered, the band playing "God Save the Queen" amid the cheers of the inhabitants, both British and Portuguese. The troops then marched past to their different camps independently. "The Portuguese officers expressed the utmost delight at the magnificent spectacle of a great army in fighting trim. They were more especially struck by the appearance of the Guards' Brigade, who, despite their recent hardships, turned out with their equipment clean and remarkably smart. The whole function formed a most impressive sight." After the ceremony on British territory Gen. Pole-Carew and staff accompanied Gen. Machado to Ressano Garcia and witnessed the firing of a royal salute by a party of Portuguese sailors and troops assembled there.

Sunday, Sept. 30.

An accident occurred at Komati Poort whilst our men were destroying Boer ammunition, which resulted in one man, 1st Batn. Gordon Highlanders, being killed, and 2nd Lieut. A. L. Davis and 18 men of the same regiment being wounded, a man of the Royal Engineers also being wounded.

Monday, Oct. 1.

Lord Roberts, in a despatch issued by the War Office during the day, states that on the 26th one of Gen. Rundle's Brigades, commanded by Major-Gen. Barrington Campbell, came across a party of Boers, from whom they captured one of the guns belonging to No. 10 Mountain Battery, lost at Nicholson's Nek; also two waggons and 65,000 rounds of ammunition. On the same day Gen. Rundle had an engagement with a small party of the enemy near Reitz, and captured some trek oxen.

From Gen. Hunter's camp at Mooi Spruit it is stated that the Boers in that district are now carrying on a system of guerilla warfare, and that it is unsafe to go any distance out of camp. De Wet is reported to have gone to Heilbron.

Gen. Dartnell, Commandant of the Natal Volunteers, in dismissing them from active duty, issued a special order reciting testimonies to the value of their work in the field by Lord Roberts and Sir Redvers Buller, and adding his own expression of appreciation of the spirit shown throughout the war and the excellent service the men have done. The Volunteers are to return from the Transvaal tomorrow.

The Austrian Lloyd steamer Styria left Lorenzo Marques to-day, carrying 400 refugees from the Transvaal, including Italians and members of the Irish-American and French contingents. All their expenses are being paid by the late Transvaal Government. The men were each given 30s., and will be paid £8 10s. on landing. They are allowed to land at any port they may select.

A party of Lovat's Scouts was opposed by between 40 and 50 Boers near Jackraal, 18 miles south-west of Lindley. One Boer was killed. There were no casualties on our side.

A convoy of 22 waggons proceeding to Vryheid under escort of 60 mounted troops was attacked by about 140 Boers six miles from De Jagers Drift. Twelve men escaped. The Natal Volunteers were at once sent by Brig-Gen. Dartnell to ascertain the fate of the remainder.

A serious accident occurred near Pan railway station owing to the Boers having derailed a train conveying three companies of the 2nd Batn. Coldstream Guards. Five men were killed, and 2nd Lieut. Heywood and 13 men injured. Five men of other regiments were wounded.

Tuesday, Oct. 2.

Col. de Lisle and the Colonial Division surrounded Elands Kop, five miles north-east of Helibron this morning. De Wet's followers had been assembling there. One Boer was killed, two were wounded, and three taken prisoners. Trooper Burnell, 10th Hussars, who was taken prisoner, and then afterwards escaped, reported that the Boers are very disheartened many of them being dismounted and short of gun ammunition.

Lord Roberts telegraphed from Pretoria at 7.45 p.m.:-

"As Paget informed me the Boers were told not to believe that Kruger had crossed the Portuguese border and that Komati Poort was in our hands, I authorised Dirksen, who has been in command of a body of the enemy opposed to Paget, to proceed by rail to Komati Poort. He returned last night, and with his Field-Cornet Oosthuizen surrendered to Paget this morning. Kelly-Kelly reports that White's little column has returned to Bloemfontein from the Bulfontein direction. The enemy took themselves off whenever White's column came near them, and on more than one occasion fled in great confusion. Several bags of dynamite, some horses, 300 oxen, and six prisoners were captured. Our casualties nil."

Lord Roberts reviewed the City Imperial Volunteers at Pretoria and said that he was proud to be honorary colonel of a regiment which had so distinguished itself. They had marched 1,018 miles in four months. After mentioning details of their losses in battle and through sickness, he said that any regiment might be proud of their performance. They were allowed to return among the first in consideration of the fact that their situations were kept open by their employers. He had always been a firm believer in Volunteers. When Commander-in-Chief in India he was the first to employ the Calcutta Volunteers on active service. The work of the City Imperial Volunteers and of the other Volunteer corps in the present campaign strengthened his belief in them. Lord Roberts wished them "God speed," and the regiment responded with three cheers for the Field-Marshal. Their journey to Cape Town will be somewhat delayed, as the railway is broken at Wolvehoek, in the Orange River Colony. The Boer wrecking party has already been driven off, but the corps will sail to-morrow and ought to reach Southampton by the 28th or 29th.

Major-Gen. Smith-Dorrien has addressed a telegram to Col. Mackinnon in which he speaks in the highest terms of the work done by the City Imperial Volunteers. He especially praises the conduct of the mounted portion, stating that some of the finest mounted infantry work during the war was done by them.

Wednesday, Oct. 3.

Gen. de Wet reported to be moving in order to meet ex-President Steyn, who is to the south of the Delagoa line. De Wet's object believed to be to persuade Mr. Steyn of the hopelessness of continuing the struggle and that if successful in this he will surrender on the 13th inst. The opinion persistently expressed in Dutch circles that the Boers are making it a point of honour to prolong the war for one year and then give up arms.

A notice published in Lord Roberts's Gazette, providing for uniformity in the treatment of the inhabitants of the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony. Burgers who surrender voluntarily will not be deported from the country, but this is not to apply to prominent military and political personages, nor to those who break the oath of submission, nor to foreigners. Should any leader make inquiries as to terms of surrender the question must be referred to headquarters. The stock and supplies of those on commando or of those who break their oath are to be taken without any receipt being given. In cases where some members of a family have broken their oath and returned on commando, those who remain are warned that unless those who have broken the oath surrender within a reasonable time all the stock and supplies of the family will be taken without receipt. With reference to sniping, the leaders of bands must be informed that unless this ceases their houses will be burned and all their goods confiscated.

Thursday, Oct. 4.

A telegram issued from War Office, received from Lord Roberts at Pretoria, to the effect that Sir Redvers Buller had returned to Lydenburg after a successful march from Spitz Kop. He reached Pilgrim's Rest on Sept. 27, and on the 28th the South African Light Horse seized the top of Pilgrim's Hill after a night march. The enemy retired hurriedly, losing two prisoners, 40 oxen, and 4,000 sheep. On the 29th the column got to the top of Pilgrim's Hill, and on Oct. 1 arrived at Kruger's Post, where it was met by a small column from Lydenburg. On Oct. 1 the Boers shelled Gen. Buller's bivouac with two long range guns, killing one officer and one man and wounding an officer and eight men, but withdrew the guns before a party sent out against them could reach their position. The column brought back 600 head of cattle, 4,000 sheep, and 150 wagon-loads of supplies, and has destroyed 184,000 rounds of small arm ammunition. Some 100 burghers surrendered to Gen. Buller during the operations. Gen. Hart's column, during 33 days' marching and fighting in the Krugersdorp district, lost three killed, 29 wounded, and three missing. A good many Boers were killed and wounded, and 96 taken prisoners, while large captures were made of cattle, sheep, horses, waggons, and supplies. The casualties in the 2nd Coldstream Guards near Pan Railway Station were, Lord Roberts stated, caused by the enemy's fire, and not by the derailing of the train. The Boers used explosive bullets. A small Boer laager between Pretoria and Johannesburg was taken by the bayonet by the Royal Dublin Fusiliers on Tuesday, and nine prisoners were captured. A small party of Boers had made their appearance at Dewetsdorp and Wepener, but detachments of troops had been sent to these places, and the Highland Brigade, under Major-Gen. MacDonald, was on its way to Bloemfontein.

Lord Roberts telegraphed to-day, stating that Clements, with Broadwood and Ridley, had been clearing the country in the neighbourhood of Rustenburg during the last few days. They captured 29 waggons, some rifles, and over 10,000 rounds of small arm ammunition.

Total casualties since the beginning of the war up to the end of last week:-

	Officers.	N.C.O. & Men
Killed in action	287	2,750
Died of wounds	86	825
Prisoners who have died
in captivity	3	89
Died of disease	150	5,753
Accidental deaths	3	114
Total deaths in S. Africa	529	9,531
Missing and prisoners (excluding those who have been recovered or died in captivity)	7	812*
Sent home as invalids	1,326	30,300†
Total, S.A. Field Force	1,862	40,643

42,505‡
Total reduction of the Military Forces through war in South Africa:-

Deaths in South Africa	529	9,531
Missing and prisoners	7	812
Invalids sent home who have died	4	193
Invalids sent home who have left the Service as unfit	—	873
	540	11,409

11,949‡

* This total probably includes a large number of men reported "missing" who subsequently rejoined, but whose return was not notified.

† Of these 193 have died, 873 have been discharged from the Service as unfit, and 775 are in hospital.

‡ The difference between these two numbers is due to the fact that the great majority of the men invalided home have recovered and rejoined for duty (see note *).

NOTE.—Future issues of this return will be at monthly intervals.

FOR REGIMENTAL CANTEENS AND MESSES

is a desirable and economical addition to the kitchen supplies of the Mess-room.

GRAVINA is a gravy powder, particularly useful for making a gravy for joints. By its aid many appetising hot dishes can be made from scraps of cold meat, or odds and ends of game, poultry, &c.

GRAVINA is one of the varieties of the popular

DESICCATED

and it is the one specially recommended for gravy. When, however, a hot soup is required without labour, one or other of the soup preparations is more suitable, and will be found much more supporting, and in every way preferable, to the usual coffee or cocoa supplied to men on night guard, or after an arduous day's duties.

ARMY.

Major-General John Bedingfield Knocker, Colonel, retired list, Indian Staff Corps, died at Leegrove House, Ryde, on the 30th ult., aged 75. He joined the Army April 5, 1842; became Captain Nov. 30, 1855; Major April 5, 1862; Lieut.-Colonel April 5, 1868; Colonel April 5, 1873; and Major-General Feb. 19, 1879. He was actively employed during the Indian Mutiny against the insurgents in the Sumbulpore District.

Col. Alexander Henry Fraser, late Royal Berkshire Regiment, A.A.G. North Western District, died at Chester on the 1st inst. Born June 30, 1840, he joined the 33rd Regiment as Ensign Jan. 11, 1867; became Captain Jan. 31, 1878; Major, Oct. 29, 1881; retired on half-pay, Nov. 11, 1882; was brought into the Hampshire Regiment April 14, 1883; was promoted to his Lieut.-Colonelcy April 21, 1893; exchanged to the South Lancashire Regiment, Oct. 18, 1893; was selected for the command of the 2nd Batn. Royal Berkshire Regiment, Nov. 11, 1896; became Colonel April 21, 1897; and was appointed A.A.G. at Chester Jan. 24, 1899. He served in the Abyssinian expedition 1867-68, including the assault and capture of Magdala (medal).

Col. Frederick James Taggart Hutchinson died on the 25th ult., aged 90. He was last surviving son of the late Gen. Sir William Hutchinson. He obtained the rank of Lieut.-Colonel May 27, 1858, and shortly afterwards retired by sale of his commission.

Col. Albert Locke Nicholson, retired list, late of the 64th and 107th Regiments, died at Durie House, Leven, Fife, the residence of his son-in-law, on the 26th ult., aged 78. He obtained his commission as Ensign Oct. 12, 1840; became Captain March 18, 1857; Major Aug. 7, 1866; Lieut.-Colonel Jan. 1, 1871; and Colonel Aug. 20, 1871. He served in the Afghan Campaign, 1842, under Gen. Pollock (medal). Served also in the Indian Mutiny as commissariat officer to Col. Turner's Field Force in Shahabad, 1858-59 (medal).

Capt. Nathaniel Johnston Hutchinson Powell, Indian Staff Corps (23rd Bengal Pioneers), died at Mean Meer on the 30th ult. Born June 23, 1863, the fourth son of the late Mr. N. R. Powell, of Beilo Sgurdo, co. Dublin, he obtained his commission as 2nd Lieut. in the East Surrey Regiment from the ranks of the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, March 30, 1887, became Lieut. Jan. 24, 1888, and Captain March 30, 1898. He served in the Miranzai expeditions (first and second) in 1891 (medal with clasp) and expedition to Dongola, 1896 (medal).

Lieut. Lionel Howard Gilliat, 16th Lancers, died of enteric fever at Barbarton, on the 24th ult. Born Oct. 1880, he joined the 16th Lancers from the 5th Batn. King's Royal Rifles, Jan. 10, 1900, and was promoted Lieut., July 21, 1900.

2nd Lieut. Harry Wilfred Cuming, 1st Batn. Devonshire Regiment, was killed in action at Kruger's Post on the 1st inst. He joined the regiment as 2nd Lieut. on Jan. 10 last from the 3rd London V.R.C.

It having been brought to the notice of the Commander-in-Chief that it would be of great assistance to secretaries of local charitable funds if they could be afforded information as to the addresses, length of furlough, and other particulars of soldiers and Militiamen who have been granted furloughs and who are residing in their neighbourhoods, it is notified by the Secretary for War that much might be done in this respect if officers commanding regimental districts would record particulars regarding soldiers on furlough which may come to their notice, and also that some assistance might be obtained from the local police. The Commander-in-Chief trusts that by these means a good deal may be done to assist local secretaries of charitable funds, and feels sure that all regimental district commanders will endeavour to co-operate with them in the excellent work which they are undertaking.

THE WAR OFFICE AND THE TREASURY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In considering the new system for the administration of the Army, it is earnestly to be hoped that some attempt will be made to better the relations between the military and the civil element at the War Office. It is my duty, as an administrative officer, to visit the War Office from time to time on questions affecting the department with which I am associated. I am always treated with the greatest courtesy by officials on "both sides of the house," but I find it difficult at times to get any real help from them, for there seems to prevail a feeling of distrust and uncertainty which makes it difficult, if not sometimes impossible, to obtain a proper settlement of the details which it is my business to arrange. It cannot be the fault of officials themselves, for no men could be more desirous than they are to meet one's wishes in every way; but the system has, of late years, become so complicated that no one is really certain what his status and responsibilities are. This naturally results in great loss of time. Even the most trivial matters are left in abeyance, frequently on the plea that references have to be made here, there, and everywhere. Red tape has ever been the curse of our War Office; it is now rampant, and, so far as my experience goes, it is nobody's duty to do anything but raise the most paltry objections. I had an example of this lately when required to attend to explain a requisition in connection with stores for South Africa. I was deputed by my chief to put matters right and meet him afterwards to complete the arrangements for shipment. I was obliged to telegraph at 3 o'clock that I was still fighting circumlocution. At 6 o'clock I had seen eight officials, and the following day had to attend again, with somewhat similar results. It certainly was not the fault of any of those with whom I was brought into touch, for it would have been impossible to have found any officials more courteous and anxious to assist. But the system cannot be defended which takes a hard-worked officer from his legitimate duties for two whole days fighting a demon begotten of Treasury clerks. When one hears of War Office failures one is apt to forget—Members of Parliament are, certainly—how much the Treasury has to do with the faults of the department in Pall Mall. In the experience to which I refer, there was no blame attached to the War Office, the whole responsibility rested elsewhere—in another public office which is not referred to by any of the critics of the War Office, but still plays its full part, and more than its full part, in obstructing public business. As the question of Army Reform is so much in the air it might be well in any inquiry that is being instituted for one point to be kept in view, viz., the responsibility of the Treasury, for in my judgment much of the present circumlocution is due to the old-fashioned and obstructive lines upon which the office of the Chancellor of the Exchequer proceeds.

COMMON SENSE.

THE DISEMBODIED MILITIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It is only a small detail, perhaps, but it is one of importance to a number of individuals. A large proportion of Militia units are being disembodied. I hear from more than one commanding officer of Reserve battalions that they are very short of officers. Might I be allowed to suggest that offers should be made to officers of disembodied Militia to take up duty with the Reserve regiments in cases where the latter are short of their establishment. In my own battalion, three or four smart officers could be recommended who would be an acquisition to the Reserve corps, and, as they have just had a five months' training, they would be able to fall into their places at once.

ADJUTANT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Have the orders for the disembodiment of Militia battalions been quite well thought out? I see that many of the battalions which are to be disbanded have only been up since the beginning of May, whilst others have been doing duty since December last. On what principle has the selection been made? My own battalion would gladly have continued to do duty; it is to be dismissed! Another battalion quartered close to us wanted to return to civil life because the men could easily have fixed themselves in employment at this period of the year. It is to remain up. Some officers will be much inconvenienced by being obliged to continue doing duty. It was said that those units which were called up first should be disbanded first. Would not this have been a fairer arrangement?

ADJUTANT.

MILITIA DISEMBODIMENT.

Arrangements are being made by the War Office for 34 of the Militia corps at home to be disembodied at their headquarters this month as follows:—

From Aldershot.—3rd Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, at Enniskillen, and 5th Worcester, at Worcester, on Oct. 15; 6th Royal Irish Rifles, Dundalk, Oct. 16; 6th Manchester, Ashton, Oct. 17; 5th Leinster, Navan, Oct. 18; 6th Worcester, Worcester, and 5th Manchester, Ashton, Oct. 19.

From Devonport.—Glamorgan Artillery, Swansea, Oct. 9; Pembroke Artillery, Milford Haven, and Tipperary Artillery, Templemore, Oct. 10; Cardigan Artillery, Aberystwith, and Northumberland Artillery, Berwick-on-Tweed, Oct. 11; Cornwall and Devon Miners' Artillery, Falmouth, Oct. 12; Waterford Artillery, Waterford, Oct. 13; and 4th Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Carnarvon, Oct. 17.

From Dover.—Kent Artillery, Dover, Oct. 10; 6th Royal Fusiliers, Finsbury, and 7th Rifle Brigade, Dalston, Oct. 18.

From Portsmouth.—Wicklow Artillery, Wicklow, Oct. 9; Sligo Artillery, Sligo, Oct. 10; Lancashire Artillery, Seaforth, and South-East of Scotland Artillery, Glasgow, Oct. 11; Fife Artillery, Cupar, Oct. 12; 4th Royal Munster Fusiliers, Tralee, and 3rd Royal Dublin Fusiliers, Naas, Oct. 18.

From Chatham.—5th Lancashire Fusiliers, Bury, Oct. 17; and 5th Rifle Brigade, Woolwich, Oct. 20.

From Salisbury Plain.—5th Royal Fusiliers, Hounslow, Oct. 16; and 3rd Royal Irish Rifles, Newtownards, Oct. 19.

From Tynemouth.—Durham Artillery, Sunderland, Oct. 12.

From Colchester.—5th Royal Warwickshire, Warwick, Oct. 18.

From York.—3rd Yorkshire Light Infantry, Pontefract, Oct. 17.

From Manchester.—3rd North Staffordshire, Lichfield, Oct. 20.

From Jersey.—3rd Devonshire, Plymouth, Oct. 20.

THE War Office is very desirous of taking steps at once for the complete rearmament of the fortification of Dover.

CAVALRY.

2nd Life Guards.—The funeral of the late Gen. Earl Howe, Colonel of the regiment, who died at Gopsall, Leicestershire, took place at Penn, Bucks, whither the body had been conveyed, on Saturday last. The remains were enclosed in a leaden shell, with an outer covering of polished oak, with brass furniture and plate, upon which was inscribed "Richard William Penn Curzon, Earl Howe, C.B., G.C.V.O., born 14th Feb., 1822, died 25th Sept., 1900." The coffin was carried from the deceased's Buckinghamshire residence to the church (a distance of a mile) on a gun carriage, in charge of V Batt. R.H.A., while a detachment of the 2nd Life Guards formed an escort, the officers present including Lieut.-Col. Neeld, Capt. De Crespigny, and Lieut. Ashton, whilst the Prince of Wales was represented at the funeral by Capt. Holford. The mourners included Viscount Curzon (who succeeds to the title of Earl Howe) and his son, the Hon. Francis Curzon (the new Viscount), the following brothers of the late Earl, viz., Major Montague Curzon, and Capt. Ashton and William Curzon, the Duke of Beaufort (nephew), Sir Nigel Kingscote (brother-in-law), Mr. John Eyre (son-in-law), Mr. Harry Franklin (son-in-law), Mr. Fitzwilliam (nephew), and the Hon. F. G. Curzon (brother of the new Earl). The service in the church and that subsequently held at the graveside were conducted by the Rev. R. F. Ashley Spencer, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Williams, of Sudbury, Suffolk, and the Rev. A. Browning, of Cookham. A number of beautiful wreaths, crosses, &c., were contributed, including that from the Prince of Wales, "with respect and sympathy."

2nd Dragoon Guards.—Major Fanshawe sailed from Cape Town on the 26th ult. in the Carisbrook Castle to join an appointment as second in command from the 19th Hussars.

5th Dragoon Guards.—2nd Lieut. Parker sailed from Cape Town on the 26th ult. in the Dunera, invalided.

12th Lancers.—Lord Roberts visited the grave of the late Lieut.-Col. Lord Airlie on Diamond Hill, near Pretoria, on Monday last.

17th Lancers.—The Reserve Squadron moved on the 27th ult. from Ballincollig to Cork.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The Simla correspondent of the Times telegraphs:—"I understand that the military authorities have actively bestirred themselves regarding improved artillery equipment in India. An experimental field battery armed with 30-prs. will be tried in the cold weather. The need for rearming the whole of the mountain artillery with breechloaders firing cordite is most urgent."

In consequence of the insufficiency of accommodation at the School of Gunnery, Shoeburyness, no short courses of instruction for R.H.A. and R.F.A. will be held before the end of the year.

Lieut.-Col. C. N. Simpson, R.F.A., is posted to India on promotion, and will take over command of the R.A. at Jhansi.

Major W. S. Churchill has been posted to the Regimental District Staff, Woolwich.

Major Lawrie, R.F.A., sailed from Cape Town on the 21st ult., in charge of invalids, in the Montrose.

Major W. E. Kerrich, R.G.A., has been selected for continuous service in India.

The will of Capt. R. Fawcett, R.F.A., who died at Bloemfontein on May 7, has been proved in London by Mr. Harold Fawcett, his brother, and Mr. A. H. Bardwell, solicitor, of Oswestry, under £1,416 17s. 5d.

Lieut. the Hon. B. J. Russell, R.F.A., sailed from Cape Town on the 26th ult. in the Dunera, invalided.

Lieut. C. J. L. Allanson, R.G.A., has been appointed an A.D.C. to the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

It has been ruled that both in the ranks of Lieut.-Colonel and Major the appointments of officers as C.R.E's. of districts in India are to be regulated by regimental seniority tempered by rejection of the unfit.

Lieut. Douglas sailed from Cape Town on the 26th ult., invalided.

INFANTRY.

Brigade of Guards.—The Brigade of Guards has left Komati Poort for Pretoria, but its further destination is at present unknown. It is believed that it will return home shortly.

Scots Guards.—Lieut.-Col. the Hon. North Dalrymple-Hamilton, 3rd Batn., has been presented with a sword of honour by the tenants of the Bargany estates, Ayrshire, in recognition of his services in South Africa; the Hon. Mrs. Dalrymple-

Hamilton receiving a handsome clock in commemoration of her husband's return from the war.

Irish Guards.—The Secretary for War has approved of the bearskin for the regiment, which will be similar in shape to those worn by the other Guards regiments, but with a blue plume at the side nearly approaching in colour to Cambridge blue.

Royal Scots (1st).—Major Dundas, 3rd (Militia) Batn., sailed from Cape Town in the Montrose on the 21st ult., invalided.

King's Own Regiment (4th).—Capt. Vane, 3rd (Militia) Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 21st ult. in the Montrose, invalided.

Lincolnshire Regiment (10th).—Capt. Gaitskell, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 21st ult. in the Montrose, invalided.

Suffolk Regiment (12th).—Major Coleman, 2nd Batn., had taken up duty as officiating A.A.G. Mandalay when the mail left that station.

East Yorkshire Regiment (15th).—Capt. Campion is transferred, on promotion, from the 2nd Batn. in South Africa to the 1st Batn. in India.

Royal Irish Regiment (18th).—Capt. Welch, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 24th ult., in the Trojan, invalided.

Lancashire Fusiliers (20th).—Major Walter is posted to the 3rd Batn. at Malta, on promotion.

Royal Scots Fusiliers (21st).—Brevet Major Bowes, on being relieved of the duties of officiating D.A.A.G. Bombay Headquarters, has rejoined his permanent appointment of D.A.A.G. Nagpore District, at public expense.

Scottish Rifles (26th).—Capt. Burns-Macdonald sailed from Cape Town in the Montrose on the 21st ult., invalided.

Worcestershire Regiment (29th).—Capt. Hobson and Bucknall (Volunteer Company) sailed from Cape Town on the 26th ult., invalided.

Hampshire Regiment (37th).—Capt. Jackson, D.S.O., has returned to India from leave to England, to resume duty as D.A.A.G. Bombay Headquarters.

Dorsetshire Regiment (39th).—Capt. Codrington has been appointed Commandant at Attock.

Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (46th).—The following extracts from a letter home of a N.C.O. of the regiment now in South Africa, may be of interest, if only as throwing some light on the uncertainty of a regiment's movements when in the field:—

"Aug. 29, Groot Oliphant River.—When I wrote . . . last (about two months ago) we were at Irene. From there we went to Pretoria for a few days' duty. Then on to Deerpoot to guard the Nek, as the Boers were trying to get back through and hold the kopje. We were there a week; then back again to Pretoria. After two days there, off we went to the place where the Lincolns had that affair I daresay you've read of—I forget the name of the place. The night we were there was a night of all nights. We had taken our coats and blankets and climbed a high kopje to do outpost. We had no sooner put our posts out when we heard rifle fire, and our sentries reported being fired upon. To reinforce them the remainder of us climbed to the top, and as the bullets came whizzing around us we realised that we were on the skyline and afforded good marks for the Boers. Then we dropped down and waited for them to show themselves, but they were too crafty, and after lying there for three hours in the perishing cold, and wet through, too, we retired again to the trees, hardly having fired a shot at the beggars, and waited till morning. At 3 a.m. we extended along the top again and stayed there until they—our fellows—brought up a pom-pom, and that soon cleared them out. We returned again to Pretoria, covering a convoy, and stayed there a few weeks, doing duty in the town. It is not a very 'nice' place as it is, everything is dear. Butter, matches, and candles are scarcely obtainable, and most other things cost four times as much as they do in the old country."

"Well, from Pretoria we shifted to Silverton for a couple of days, then on to Eerste Fabriken. Very little duty here, and plenty of spare time. A capital place for a swim, too, and when the days were hot, we were in the water with every chance we got. When we were not in the water we were in the Kaffir kraal close by, trying to bargain with the folk there. The Canadians relieved us, and before we started we had some fun trying to catch the mules. Now we are at Groot Oliphant River for a bit, but we expect a shift soon. We have got tents at last, the first since we started on the march. I can tell you it was like sleeping in a palace, after having slept in our clothes in all weathers out in the open for months. I felt as if I could sleep till Christmas. . . . Paper, I mean anything decent that one can write on, is as scarce as diamonds. But still, few of us, if any, would have missed being here for worlds. It has been such real soldiering—no walk-over like our so-called wars of the last thirty years."

2nd Lieut. Kirk sailed from Cape Town in the Dunera on the 26th ult., invalided.

Loyal North Lancashire Regiment (47th).—Capt. Loch sailed from Cape Coast on the 26th ult. for England, invalided.

Shropshire Light Infantry (53rd).—Capt. and Qmr. Wilson has been granted leave from India to England for six months on medical certificate.

Dorsetshire Regiment (54th).—Details moved on Monday last from Spike Island to Kinsale.

Middlesex Regiment (57th).—Capt. Randolph has been appointed Station Staff Officer, 1st class, Madras, and Capt. Rowley Commandant Poonamalee Depot.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—Major Stuart-Wortley, 4th Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 26th ult. for England in the Carisbrook Castle.

Wiltshire Regiment (62nd).—Mrs. Harford, wife of Lieut.-Col. Harford, who had been sailing for a fortnight, died at Quetta of enteric fever on Sept. 12. The funeral took place the following day. The deceased lady, who had been about a year in the country, was only twenty-five years of age. General sympathy is felt for the bereaved husband.

Manchester Regiment (63rd).—The new 3rd Batn. is being got ready for foreign service. It is fast becoming a workable unit, and it expects ere long to receive orders to proceed to Malta.

Royal Berkshire Regiment (66th).—2nd Lieut. Merton sailed from Cape Town in the Dunera on the 26th ult., invalided.

Durham Light Infantry (68th).—Lieut.-Col. Woodland has been invalided from South Africa and will arrive in England about the middle of the month in the Dunera.

Highland Light Infantry (71st).—Capt. Wyndham, 3rd (Militia) Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 26th ult. in the Carisbrook Castle, for England.

Gordon Highlanders (75th).—The Prince of Wales as Colonel-in-Chief has subscribed £50 to the fund for the establishment of a home in the City of Aberdeen as a memorial to those who have fallen during the campaign in South Africa. Capt. Towse, who was awarded the Victoria Cross for gallantry at Magersfontein and at Mount Thaba, where he received a shot which blinded both his eyes, attended yesterday at Clothworkers' Hall, Mincing Lane, by the invitation of the Clothworkers' Company, to take up his freedom by patrimony. The livery of the company was subsequently conferred upon him honoris causa. Capt. Towse is a son of the late Mr. R. B. Towse, formerly clerk to the company and a liveryman.

Middlesex Regiment (77th).—Capt. Haviland sailed from Cape Town in the Dunera on the 26th ult.

Cameron Highlanders (79th).—Capt. Alderson, 1st Batn., is on passage home from South Africa in charge of invalids in the Trojan, which sailed on the 24th ult.

Shropshire Light Infantry (85th).—Lieut. and Qmr. Forrest sailed from Cape Town in the Trojan on the 24th ult., invalided.

Royal Irish Fusiliers (87th).—Lieuts. Kentish and Holmes sailed from Cape Town on the 26th ult., invalided in the Dunera.

Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (91st).—Lieut. Clark sailed from Cape Town in the Trojan on the 24th ult., invalided.

Gordon Highlanders (92nd).—Capt. Meiklejohn sailed from Cape Town in the Montrose on the 21st ult., invalided.

Wiltshire Regiment (99th).—Lieut.-Col. Carter has been invalided from South Africa, and will arrive in England about the middle of the month in the Dunera.

King's Own Light Infantry (105th).—Lieut. Simpson sailed from Cape Town on the 24th ult., in the Trojan, invalided.

Durham Light Infantry (106th).—Capt. Jones has been appointed Officiating Station Staff Officer, 1st Class, Rangoon.

Rifle Brigade.—Capt. Clarke sailed from Cape Town on the 24th ult., in the Trojan, invalided. Lieut. Blewitt, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town in the Dunera on the 26th ult., invalided.

Royal Army Medical Corps.—Major Holt sailed from Cape Town on the 26th ult. in charge of invalids on the Dunera.

Messrs. Cassell are republishing in fortnightly parts their really superb work "The Queen's Empire." It is a pictorial record of the Empire, its people, its modes of government, institutions, forms of worship, travel, sport, recreation, industries, and scenery. There will be nearly 700 magnificent illustrations, the edition being greatly enlarged, and amid it is many inartistic publications which are issued it is extremely gratifying to receive the first part of such a work, bearing the mark of excellent judgment, artistic care, and sound knowledge. It should be in every home.

As regards the pay of some 30 officers of the Indian establishment, who, whilst on leave from India, proceeded without special sanction to South Africa for service, the Secretary of State has decided that they are to cease to draw pay from the Indian funds from the date of their transfer to the Imperial establishment. Those whose services have not been formally applied for, and who have not been given an extension of leave by the Government of India, have been directed to rejoin their appointments in India when their leave expires.

Reviews.

THE MAGAZINES.

In the Nineteenth Century Mr. Brodrick expresses at some length the opinion—which seems to have some reason in it, though it is not of universal application—that we are “a nation of amateurs.” He is, of course, led to this view by the course of events in South Africa. Admitting that intrepid gallantry has been shown in hopeless frontal attacks, and admirable fortitude in many defences, he maintains that the virtues we have displayed are essentially those of the amateur and not of the professional. We have reason to be proud, indeed, that amateurs carry on nearly all the higher civil administration in the country, but we do not want amateurs in the Army. Yet Mr. Brodrick contends that we possess them in considerable number, and he suggests that our recent shortcomings are to be traced directly to errors of judgment on the part of “amateur” military experts in high places. Again, he holds, and with a good deal of reason, that the so-called Committee of Defence is a supreme and typical example of amateur administration. If we look a little below the very highest ranks of soldiers who have been tried and proved in war, we are to believe that favouritism has had much to do with the distribution of commands, and that our deplorable mistakes are just such as amateur commanders would have been likely to commit. Mr. Brodrick points out that naval officers when quite young have a better training than military officers, being accustomed to individual responsibility from the very outset of their careers. On the other hand, the young soldier seldom takes his profession seriously, and is hardly encouraged to do so. “The officer who has never been punished for grave blunders, and has thought it a joke to fall into an ambush on Salisbury Plain, is only too likely to be out-maneuvred by an astute Boer farmer ignorant of regular tactics but always on the alert, and possessed of the grim earnestness of Cromwell.” Sir Henry Blake contributes some very interesting notes and impressions from a tour in China. He speaks enthusiastically of the magnificent network of canals in Kiangsu at Chekiang, where the traffic is immense, and believes that there should be a handsome dividend on the projected railway lines from Shanghai to Soochow and Ningpo. In the fields everybody was busily engaged, and the people seemed contented and happy. At Wuchang he saw eight regiments of infantry, with two batteries and some horse, numbering about 8,000 men in all, of excellent physique and with arms and equipment in perfect order. The knapsack was of the Japanese pattern, and some of the regiments had khaki uniforms. All this was arranged by Chang Chi Tung, the Viceroy, who admitted that a good stamp of officers was needed, and that the litterati all despise the military profession. Evidently, on the day of manœuvres, the men knew that it was not real business, and the attack was delivered in the most leisurely fashion, a crowd of spectators being moved out of the way to enable the men to come on. The operations were under the direction of Japanese officers. At Wei-hai-Wei the Chinese regiment looked very smart. Sir Henry Blake wrote when the storm had burst, and he asks, “When the wise men are gathered together to discuss the political future of one-third of the human race, who can foretell the solution of the problem?” We have said so much about these two articles that we can only recommend our readers not to overlook Mr. Oman's article on “The Dutch Belgians at Waterloo,” of whom he has a poor opinion, and add that the number is very full of general interest.

There is in Blackwood an admirable account of the battle of Almond's Nek on June 11, by “A Linesman” who was there, and who rightly says that it was a great achievement to turn out 5,000 Boers from a position literally terraced with trenches, nodulous with gun-pits and flanked by two mountains, the whole commanding a natural glacis about 10 miles long. Majuba, Laing's Nek and Pongwana frowned upon the 4,000 men, who, by a clever movement, turned the position, and made it as harmless as Primrose Hill. How this was done has never been so well told, and high credit is given to the Dorsets and Middlesex men and to all who took part in that gallant day. A short article, but an aggressive one, is that on the military policy of the country. It is too true that hitherto the policy for our home army has been of a defensive character, and a great argument is that the offensive principle should be adopted, the change being a radical one, but not necessarily extravagant. Yet, according to the writer, barracks, military buildings, and manœuvre grounds, with rifle ranges, would have to be procured at the cost of at least 20 millions of money. We should have to increase largely the number of officers, and to devise a system of bringing battalions to war strength. The nation is to understand that the reform of the auxiliary forces is the principal factor towards placing the Army on a sound footing. Every Englishman is either to serve in the Militia or Volunteers, or to pay towards the maintenance of these forces. The Militia is to be prepared to enter the fighting line, and to have a reserve which will enable it to be increased threefold. On the other hand, the writer thinks that the rôle of the Volunteers is essentially defensive, and that their numbers should be restricted to actual requirements, the idea being to encourage members to join the regular Army. The “Musings without Method,” and other features of Blackwood, are just as interesting as ever.

Several articles in the United Service Magazine are of historical character, but are not the less instructive. Col. F. N. Maude continues his admirable notes upon the “Evolution of Cavalry”; Mr. William O'Connor Morris contributes his second article upon Frederick the Great, dealing with the war of the Austrian succession very capably; Mr. P. C. Standing has a very interesting article upon Gen. Forrest, the American “Rupert,” who was “not a West-Pointer”; and Mr. William Grey writes an account of Lord Rodney in the series of “Naval Heroes.” A technical article by Capt. R. F. Sorsbie, R.E., is intended to bring home to officers of Volunteer infantry the need of training themselves in engineering duties in the field. The paper is really an introduction to a series, and deals with bridges, water supply, roads, topography, camps, and some other matters. Major H. de Missy, of the French Army, has an article in relation to “The New Battle of Dorking,” which he annotates. He thinks it is doing wrong to the chivalrous character of France to suggest that she could make such a dastardly attack, and that such books—of which we may observe there have been many in France—are apt to embitter national feeling. Mr. G. Nugent Bankes offers what he considers an easy solution of compulsory service. His idea is that the Militia and Volunteers, as well as the Yeomanry, should be amalgamated into a single force, and that every able-bodied citizen should be liable to serve between the ages of 18 and 30. The suggestion is ingenious. An important article is by Brig.-Surg.-Lieut.-Col. W. Hill-Climo on “Army Medical Organisation in War.” This well-known writer believes that the R.A.M.C. is wanting neither in ability nor zeal, and that it is the organisation that is at fault. The important duty of the Medical Service has not been recognised, and the gulf between it and the army has been widened. Marvellous work has been done in the domain of surgery, but the evil is in the health of the individual, and health cannot be secured by appointing a medical officer to a corps on the eve of embarkation. Dr. Hill-Climo believes that the work will never be well done until every regiment has its own medical officer as an intimate part of itself, and no officer should have charge of a larger number of beds than he can efficiently supervise. The issue also contains an article on the education of naval officers by a “Naval Instructor,” who urges that the midshipman should not be sent to sea so young, and that his education in the Britannia or the College ashore should extend over four years, and approximate to that of a public school, but retaining its special features.

The Monthly Review is Mr. Murray's new and very promising venture—a stout issue, pleasant to hold and to read. We cannot hope to do any justice to it. There is a leading article on the “Paradox of Imperialism,” in praise of the Imperial expressions of Liberalism, which “must uphold a democratic autonomous Commonwealth,” and take its part in building up the greatness of the Empire. Other leading articles are “After Peking,” and “Parties and Principles.” Extremely interesting are the details of “In my Daily Life,” by the Amir of Afghanistan, being extracts from an autobiography which Mr. Murray is about to publish. The record is purely personal, and shows that the Amir is, as he himself says, very different from other Asiatic monarchs and chiefs. His life has always been simple and frugal, and he has devoted his days and nights to working hard at something or other, devoting only a few hours to sleep. “The more I see of the people of other nations and religions running fast in the pursuit of progress, the less I can rest and sleep; the whole day long I keep on thinking how I shall be able to run the race with the swiftest, and at night my dreams are the same.” Extremely interesting, too, are Mr. Bowlby's surgical experience in South Africa. There is a very trenchant article by Lieut. Carlyon Bellairs on the “War Training of Naval Officers.” He is moved by the thought that to the majority of young officers the history of the past is a dying echo instead of a living voice, and that mathematicians control the chief centre of education where, “never having washed their faces in salt water” they teach theories apart from practice, and revel in what they call an academic ground-work as the foundation of naval training. It is the arm-chair strategist and tactician who is attacked, and the study of history is strongly enforced. “To learn the best practical methods and possess the ability to apply them under all conditions of sea warfare is what naval officers require.” Plenty of sea training and the placing of the war training of naval officers in its entirety in the hands of the Board of Admiralty are what Mr. Bellairs advocates. In other words, his argument runs entirely counter to the views expressed in that notorious essay on “The Children of Nelson.” For the rest, we must be content to say that the number contains articles on “The Puzzles of the War,” “The Influence of the Stage,” a stirring ode on Khartoum by Mr. Henry Newbolt, and the beginning of a story by Anthony Hope.

The National Review has a very notable article by Mr. McHardy on “The Electors and the Navy,” to which we can do no more than draw attention, besides articles on “The German Danger in the Far East,” “General Wolfe's Letters,” and many other subjects.

We have also received Macmillan's Magazine, Longmans' Magazine, the Cornhill (with some military lessons of the war by Dr. Conan Doyle), the Humane Review, the Pall Mall Magazine (a very good number, showing distinct improvement), the Badminton Magazine (quite full of interest), Harper, the Century, and Scribner—all good; and the Antiquary and Genealogical Magazine.

NAVAL DEFICIENCIES.

THAT there is a general feeling of unrest in connection with our naval deficiencies is probably an over-statement, but that some anxiety has been aroused by various announcements about the personnel and material of the Fleet is unquestionable. The coming retirement of Mr. Goschen and the uncertainty about his successor has not tended to allay this feeling of anxiety. We have no intention of adding fuel to the flame, but the time appears to be opportune for a review of some of the points which have been made in various quarters in this connection. It is noteworthy that nearly all the questions are directly concerned with administration, and that, therefore, the personal element enters very largely into their consideration. It cannot be gainsaid that the country has based its belief in our naval superiority to a large extent upon confidence in the Board of Admiralty. That this confidence has been misplaced we are far from believing, but, as is well known, circumstances have from time to time arisen which have impeded and hindered the work which the Admiralty set themselves to carry out. It is only necessary to look back at the articles which have appeared in the principal newspapers, and at the speeches of competent and unbiassed critics of the Admiralty, to see how ready those who express the views of the nation were to support the authorities in the efforts they were known to be making to maintain the efficiency of the Fleet. Unfortunately those efforts have not always been fruitful, and, as a result, the arrears of work have accumulated until, as Mr. Goschen has been forced to admit, our needs have nearly outrun our resources for supplying them. The public has a very short memory; it is apt, also, to centre its attention on one thing at a time. It has long since forgotten the circumstances which brought about the Naval Defence Act, while the obvious need for Army reform obscures, in a measure, its naval deficiencies. We should be sorry to see the efficiency of the Fleet become a party question, and yet there is a significance about the almost universal omission of any reference to the Navy in political addresses and speeches which is not wholly reassuring.

The most important, and, in some ways, the most pressing question in connection with the personnel of the Navy is undoubtedly its training. Ever since last autumn, when four modern cruisers were substituted for the obsolete vessels which had hitherto given opportunities to a small proportion of the officers and men to acquire experience at sea under sails, this question of training has been prominently to the front. In the Press, and wherever naval officers meet together, the subject has been discussed with its many side issues. Indeed, the subject of mast and sail training has become a side issue itself, and the question now presents itself in a different guise. Virtually, we are asked to believe that the Navy is divided into two great camps, one of which holds that the modern seaman can receive a large part of his training in harbour, or on land, while the other believes our bluejackets must be degenerating unless they spend the greater portion of their time afloat. We do not propose now to reproduce the arguments used by the foremost exponents of either theory. In practice, the new conditions of sea life brought about by the change which has taken place in the motive power of our vessels has almost settled the question. It has become impossible to keep all our seamen at sea, even if we commissioned every ship on the "Navy List" and abolished our training establishments on land. Moreover, the whole story of the Navy warns us against sudden changes in organisation. There is nothing which comes out more plainly from an examination of each successive modification which an alteration in the conditions of sea-life aboard ship has brought about than its spontaneity. Changes have been suggested by force of circumstances, and have been tried and proved in the Service itself before they have received the official recognition of the authorities. After all, this is only natural, and its beneficial results have been so obvious that to ignore it would be to take unnecessary risks. Connected with this question is another, which continually forces itself upon public attention: the relative position of the engineer officers. Here, too, we deprecate any sudden change, but merely on the ground of expediency the subject is one that should surely be taken in hand and authoritatively dealt with. There are other matters, notably that of the dietary of the seamen, which cannot be much longer overlooked if our standard of naval efficiency is not to fall below that point at which prudence demands it should stand.

Turning to the Fleet as it presents itself in its material aspect, the most striking and, indeed, obtrusive feature at the present time is the large number of uncompleted vessels. Since the days when Mr. Stead published a note of alarm in "The Truth about the Navy" we have never had presented to us a condition of affairs in the public and private yards quite like that we see now. It is a truism that a man-of-war is of no value until she is fitted out and ready for sea. These unfinished hulls, therefore, represent an immense amount of unproductive capital, and, explanations and excuses notwithstanding, this fact remains the same. Even in the public yards one may see two or three battleships, not to speak of other vessels, in this alarming stage of uselessness. Reasons for this state of things are assigned in plenty. At least we have not that ancient one, that they are waiting for their guns. But that we may hear later. Generally it is the contractors who are blamed, but the Admiralty have powers to make contractors perform their pledges. Is it, that in trying to buy in the cheapest market the older and more reliable firms have been passed by for those who, from want of experience or capital, cannot complete their contracts? It is an ominous circumstance that with the change from energetic movement and active progress to enforced idleness and dilatory method we also hear stories of the revival of "the dockyard crow," with other bad habits associated with that disreputable bird. But our naval horizon is not limited by what we can now see on the building slips; the wider outlook impels us to say that a new programme is needed, and that, unless the country is willing to relinquish its pride of naval power, it is essential to add to the ships in hand. It must not be forgotten that if ships take long in building, their designs, relatively speaking, may become obsolete in the process. This fact it is that is at the bottom of most of the complaints about speed and gun-power which we find raised by the makers of comparative tables of the Sea Powers. We have said enough to indicate that we do not look with complete satisfaction upon the Navy, either as it is to-day, or as it may be in the immediate future. We will not now dwell upon those other important questions in connection with the efficiency of the matériel, which are connected with boilers and guns. We trust that the Government will show by its selection of a successor to Mr. Goschen, and by the manner in which it deals with the Navy in the forthcoming Estimates, that it has fully realised the importance of the matter we have here briefly referred to.

Navv Notes.

The beautiful statue which has been erected at Bridgewater, on the Cornhill, in honour of Admiral Blake was unveiled on Thursday by Lord Brassey. The ceremony was, unfortunately, marred by the wet weather, but in spite of this a large number of people attended. Lord Brassey, in speaking, referred to Blake as second to none of the great captains who had led Englishmen to victory. He considered that Blake laid the foundations of that system upon which the Navy has since been successfully administered. It is well to remember the lives of such men. They stand for ever as a shield and buckler to their country, and are worth more to us to-day than whole fleets of ironclads, since they inspire British seamen to emulation and achievement. "Blake," said Lord Brassey, "added to his conspicuous merits as a sea officer moral qualities of the highest order. He was contemptuous of private gain and a patriot in the loftiest sense of the word." A commemorative tablet has also been placed in Blake's house, and the unveiling ceremony was followed by a luncheon, at which the toasts honoured were, "The Immortal Memory of Blake," and "Blake as a Seaman." The speakers included Professor Montagu Burrows, Professor J. K. Laughton, and Mr. Henry Newbolt. The statue is a striking figure, and there are appropriate panels on the pedestal representing the taking of Santa Cruz and the bringing home of Blake's body to Plymouth Sound.

The assumption by Captain Gerald Langley of the Flag Captain's duties at Devonport, in addition to commanding the Nile, is undoubtedly advantageous. The accompanying transfer, however, of the tenders and destroyers from the general depot to his command is not an equally desirable measure. The Accountant Officer and his staff for that particular duty cannot, with advantage, take up their quarters aboard the port guardship, when she may at any moment be ordered to sea. The alternative is the erection of offices on the Admiralty ground at Mount Wise for this officer. The difficulty could be easily overcome by adopting the Portsmouth method of an independent flagship for the Western command, where the necessity for these auxiliary vessels is not likely to decrease.

To the Strand Magazine of the current month, Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford contributes an article on "The Rank and File of the British Navy." His lordship believes that as the points contained therein are but little known to the British public, he hopes that the publication of his article in such a popular magazine may keep alive the new-born interest in matters pertaining to our Fleet. The National Review for this month suggests a re-construction of the present Ministry with younger and more able statesmen, and includes Lord Charles as First Lord of the Admiralty. The last naval officer who filled the post was a late Duke of Northumberland, in 1852, but he was a "yellow" Admiral, who otherwise could not have held the appointment.

Some two or three years since we made reference to the conduct of Lieut. Arthur Cole Lowry, in saving life at sea, noting that such was far from a solitary instance on his part, and that he had twice received official recognition from the Royal Humane Society. We also noted that two of Lieut. Lowry's brothers, also in her Majesty's service, had received similar recognition. We have now to chronicle another occasion upon which Lieut. Lowry has distinguished himself under trying circumstances. The occurrence is thus reported:—When the Empress of India was on her way from Malta to rejoin the Mediterranean Fleet, and was nearing Doro Channel in the Grecian Archipelago it was observed about nine p.m. that rockets were being fired apparently by some ship needing assistance. Two hours later and a steamer was discovered with shaft broken and propellers gone, drifting helplessly towards the rocks. Owing to the bad weather prevailing the vessel could not be taken in tow, and she grounded. Two boats were lowered and filled with passengers, but before they could clear the ship they were stove and all in them drowned. A boat was sent from the Empress of India with Lieut. Lowry in charge, but could not get near the steamer owing to the heavy sea. Lieut. Lowry then jumped overboard with a life-buoy and line, and swimming to the steamer gave the life-buoy to a Turk to hold until he got on board. The Turk, however, let go, and the buoy drifting away, Lieut. Lowry was placed in the same dangerous position as the other people on board.

During the night several means were tried on board the man-of-war to make communication with the stranded vessel. It was not until the morning that the people who were left including Lieut. Lowry, who had been up in the top for some hours, were recovered from the wreck. An eye-witness says of the incident Lieut. Lowry's gallantry was beyond all praise.

In responding to the toast of "The Navy" at the banquet given in Edinburgh last week to the Earl of Hopetoun, Governor-General Elect of the Australian Commonwealth, Captain Richard W. White, of the Rodney, remarked that it was a matter of congratulation to everyone that the Navy and the Army had worked so well together, both in South Africa and China. To Lord Hopetoun he wished every success in the exalted position he was about to take up in the great island continent. Captain White commanded the naval forces of Victoria while the noble earl was governor of that colony, and is, therefore, aware of the immense responsibility that will devolve on his lordship, as well as his administrative ability for the requirements of this newly created and exceptionally difficult appointment as his Sovereign's representative.

The late Lord Henry Gordon Lennox remarked, during his Parliamentary career, that Service matters were usually discussed in a thin House during the "piping times of peace," but in the event of a national crisis members would flock down and vote millions in as many minutes. Mr. Robert Hanbury, Financial Secretary of the Treasury, in addressing the constituents at Preston last week, stated that when Army and Navy affairs were brought before the House of Commons only a few of those interested in such matters remained, and the lower chamber of the Legislature became virtually empty. It is to be hoped that a better attendance of members will obtain when the necessities of our defensive forces are brought before them in the coming Parliament, and that history will not again repeat itself.

Vice-Admiral Ernest Rice and the members of the committee for enquiring into seamen's rations and the working of the canteen systems, were at Devonport this week. The question of the amount the men receive in lieu of spirit ration was brought forward, as they consider it too small to be of practical value to them. Rear-Admiral Randolph's committee, in 1872, on the naval commissariat, recommended the grant of one penny per diem as an inducement for seamen to forego their rum, but the suggestion is still pigeon-holed. The sum of sixteen shillings now paid yearly to temperance men exceeds the value of the article issued.

The Admiralty have expressed their high appreciation of the manner in which the officials of the London and India Docks have carried out their duties during the fitting of the transports and the embarkation of troops in the Thames in connection with the present South African campaign by an appreciative letter addressed to the directors of that company. The letter was from Sir Evan MacGregor, secretary to the Admiralty, and in it their lordships convey their thanks also to the company's manager, the superintendents of the Royal Albert and Victoria and Tilbury Docks, and the staff under them. Much satisfaction is expressed with the ability of these gentlemen who worked so well and rendered such valuable assistance during embarkations of unprecedented magnitude, extending over many months. It will be remembered that a great number of the cavalry regiments embarked at Tilbury, and the work of getting so many horses safely shipped is much more trying than the embarkation and despatch of infantry.

Rear-Admiral John Fellowes' Challenge Cup (introduced in 1898) for six-oared gigs, manned by officers of the Channel Fleet, was won by the officers of the Pactolus at Berehaven last week in a 30-foot boat, manned by Lieuts. A. D'Aeth (stroke), F. Harrold, and Cecil Newby, Assistant Engineer H. Canning, and Gunners A. Reep and R. Ide. Lieut. (senior) Walter Ellerton was coxswain. The Cup was held for the previous year by the Majestic, the officers of which flagship delivered it to the winners for the present year with an excellent display of good feeling.

The new Order in Council regulating the distribution of prize-money and prizes offered in connection with the abolition of the slave trade, the capture and destruction of piratical vessels, and awards for salvage, differs very slightly from that already in force. There are some verbal emendations, as, for instance, where the expression "a rated ship" is now altered to "a classed ship" in accordance with the new classification of the Navy. References to certain grades of officers, as the "navigating lieutenants" and to rates of seamen now abolished have been omitted, and in addition we find new grades mentioned as the "Chief of the Staff," "quartermaster of Marines with honorary rank," and "artificer engineer." The principle of distribution remains exactly the same as it has been since the regulation was made that "ships or vessels being in sight of a prize, as also of the captor, under circumstances to cause intimidation to the prize and encouragement to the captor, shall alone be entitled to share as joint captors." The old rule that the admiral and others not present should take a share having been abrogated some time since.

As the result of a visit paid by the Admiralty to Chatham it has been decided that another wing shall be added to the new naval barracks which are there building. It is now more than three years since this work was begun, and such good progress has been made that it is expected the men will be able to turn over from the depot ships before the end of next year. The buildings are situated on the site of the old convict prison at St. Mary's, between the dockyard and the Royal Engineers' barracks. They are, as might be expected, of a very substantial character, red brick and Portland stone having been used in their construction. The accommodation is arranged in four blocks of two sets of buildings each. The officers' quarters consists of two wings with a mess establishment in the centre, the other blocks giving accommodation to nearly 4,000 seamen. There are also to be drill-sheds, offices, a canteen, and parade-ground. It is intended that the men shall sleep in hammocks suspended from railings 7ft. from the floor, and in other ways an attempt will be made to reproduce ship life, even the floors being made to represent a ship's deck, with planks caulked in the old-fashion. The building is to be lit by electricity throughout.

The following memorandum has been received from the Admiralty by the family of the young officer whose name is mentioned therein:—

"The Commander-in-Chief on the China Station, in a letter dated July 23, 1900, No. 429, in bringing to notice the names of certain officers and men engaged in connection with the attack on the native walled city of Tien-tsin on July 13 and 14, remarked as follows:—

"To those names I should also have added that of Captain Henry T. R. Lloyd, R.M.L.I., had he lived. This officer was with me in the advance towards Peking, and was engaged in every action, showing on all occasions great courage and zeal."

DISABLEMENT PENSIONS.—The Marquis of Lansdowne has sent a letter to a correspondent on this subject:—

"War Office, Sept. 28. Sir,—I am desired by Lord Lansdowne to acknowledge your letter of yesterday's date. You point out with reference to the letter sent by his Lordship to a correspondent, and published in the newspapers, that some doubt still exists whether, under the regulation which was referred to as securing to all non-commissioned officers and men wholly disabled pensions varying from 1s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. per day, a private soldier so disabled would be entitled to at least a minimum rate of 1s. 6d. per day. Lord Lansdowne is glad to inform you that under the provisions of the Royal Warrant all permanently disabled soldiers will have life pensions, and that the smallest of these pensions will not be less than 1s. 6d. per day. With regard to your statement that there may in some cases be an interval between the date of the disabled soldier's discharge and that on which he receives his first instalment of pension, and that during this interval the man may be entirely unprovided for, I am to point out that every man on his discharge is entitled to a gratuity of £2, and the discharging authorities have been instructed to satisfy themselves that every man, wholly disabled from earning his own living has sufficient funds to support him up to the time when he begins to draw pension. —I am, yours faithfully, H. W. W. M'ANALLY."

THE CHINA CRISIS.

Sunday, Sept. 30.

Admiral Seymour arrived at Taku on Saturday. A telegram from Peking, dated Sept. 22, states that active preparations for the forthcoming winter campaign are being made. The Temple of Agriculture will make a camp.

Monday, Oct. 1.

Field-Marshal von Waldersee and staff arrived at Tien-tsin on Thursday last. He was received by guards of honour drawn from all the allied forces. Gen. Gaselee arrived on Friday, and after calling on Field-Marshal von Waldersee he proceeded to Taku to visit Admiral Seymour.

Gen. Richardson arrived at Peking on Sept. 23, with the 16th Bengal Lancers. He has distributed the 3rd Bombay Cavalry along the lines of communication. A despatch from Tien-tsin states that a detachment of British cavalry made a reconnaissance forty miles south-west of that city and occupied several towns without opposition.

The British steamer Lung Kiang, plying between Canton and Wuchow, was stopped at Luk Lao on September 24. Five shots were fired at her, and the steamer's carpenter was wounded. The matter was reported to the British Consul at Canton, who has forbidden the Lung Kiang to use the Luk Lao passage.

The U.S. Military Information Bureau publishes a report showing that the number of allied troops now in China amounts to 108,166, with 326 guns. Additional forces, numbering 124,000, with 172 guns, are on the way to China. It is expected that 12,000 British troops are to be sent to Shanghai or kept at Hong Kong.

Tuesday, Oct. 2.

A telegram from Taku, dated Sept. 28, states that the allied commanders have decided to despatch a combined land and naval expedition to Shan-hai-kwan, leaving Taku on Oct. 1. The total land force will consist of 4,000 men, including 200 Americans. The details have not yet been completed. The extent of naval co-operation has not yet been decided upon. The Brooklyn will probably be the only American warship. The troops will be landed to the south of Shan-hai-kwan, and will co-operate with a large Russian contingent already en route.

Telegraphic communication between Khabarovsk and Kharbin has been opened.

It is reported that the gunboat Robin has shelled the village of Luk-lao, on the West River, in retaliation for the outrage upon the British steamer Lung Kiang, which was fired upon while on a voyage from Canton to Wuchow. The ringleaders are also said to have been flogged. The gunboat Sandpiper was stoned while passing Shekwan, on the West River.

The transport Landaura, with a wing of the Alvar Imperial Service Infantry, and a Section of the 33rd Native Field Hospital, the Russian transport Koron, with 29 officers and 1,853 men, and the Mohawk, from Swatau, have arrived at Hong Kong.

Wednesday, Oct. 3.

The Pao-ting-fu expedition has been postponed. The Peking column will be commanded by Gen. Gaselee and the Tien-tsin column by a German General. Four thousand Americans return to Manila immediately. The Russians have occupied Tongshan unopposed. Capt. Cogli, of the Queensland Defence Force, has been appointed on Gen. Ford Campbell's staff. The New South Wales contingent will winter in Peking. The Victorians are at Taku.

Thursday, Oct. 4.

The Terrible and Arethusa and 3rd Indian Brigade left Wei-hai-Wei on Monday for Taku. The Goliath, Orlando, and Hart have been ordered to Chung-wan-too.

The following despatch has been received in Vienna from the commander of the Austro-Hungarian Squadron in Chinese waters:—

"In accordance with the instructions of Count von Waldersee the seizure of Shan-hai-kwan was decided upon by the Council of Admirals on September 29. All was prepared for action and English warships were despatched to demand the surrender of that place. The Chinese evacuated the forts and the position, and the British flag was then hoisted over Shan-hai-kwan. The flagships proceed thither to hoist their respective flags on the forts."

The following despatch has been received at Washington from Peking, dated 27:—

"The Italian Marines are withdrawing. Concern is expressed regarding the plans of the Germans, who are bringing up a large force and are expected to embark on a campaign of revenge, which, it is predicted, will seriously delay peace."

A German column 1,700 strong, under Gen. von Hoepfner, encountered a small Boxer force south of the Imperial deer park. The enemy lost forty killed and the remainder fled. Four Germans were wounded. After the return of the German column, a small Japanese force left Huangtsun for Tsingyang, where the Boxers are supposed to be congregating. The Russians remaining at Peking consist of two battalions of infantry and a battery of artillery. Col. Tretiakoff is in command. They will hold the Summer Palace and the railway terminus.

Navy Personal.

The Duke of York returned to York House, St. James's, on Thursday last from the north.

Admiral of the Fleet the Earl of Clanwilliam attained the age of sixty-eight on Wednesday last, and, therefore, may remain two years longer on the active list. Vice-Admiral Sir Compton Domville will be fifty-eight on Wednesday next, and Rear-Admiral Sir Robert Harris, Commander-in-Chief of the Cape of Good Hope and West Africa Station, reaches the age of fifty-seven on the following Friday. Rear-Admiral Edmund F. Jeffreys completed his fifty-fourth year on Monday last.

Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock and Algernon F. de Horsey, two flag officers of considerable experience, and who have largely interested themselves in professional matters since they retired from active service, are both supporting the memorial to the Government from the "National Committee to encourage the Formation of a Volunteer Reserve for the Navy."

Admiral Sir M. Culme-Seymour, Bart., Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, resigned the command of that station to Admiral Sir Charles Hotham on Wednesday last, under the usual salutes. According to the Queen's regulations Sir Michael's flag remained flying until sunset.

Admiral Sir John Dalrymple Hay, Vice-Admiral G. Digby Morant, and Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, Admiral Superintendent of Naval Reserves, were the naval representatives at the banquet given on Monday last by the Institute of Naval Architects, at the Hotel Cecil, to their president, the Earl of Hopetoun, on the occasion of his appointment as Governor-General of the Australian Commonwealth. Lord Hopetoun, in responding, remarked that "there could not be anything of the 'Little Englander' about the naval architect—he and his colleague, the marine engineer, had had too great a share in making the British Empire what it is to-day for such to be possible."

Admiral Lord Charles Scott, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, transferred the port duties to Rear-Admiral Thomas S. Jackson, Admiral Superintendent of the Dockyard, on Monday last, and proceeded on three weeks' leave of absence.

Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson, commanding the Channel Squadron, dispersed the vessels under his orders at Berehaven, on Saturday last, for their respective ports, to admit of the officers and men recording their votes at the Parliamentary election. The fleet will commence to re-assemble on Tuesday next.

Rear-Admiral Day H. Bosanquet, Commander-in-Chief of the East India Station, left Mauritius in the Highflyer on Monday last for Trincomalee.

Rear-Admiral Edmund F. Jeffreys, Director of Naval Ordnance, is mentioned as successor to Rear-Admiral Sir Robert Harris, Commander-in-Chief of the Cape of Good Hope and West Africa Station, when that officer is promoted in January next, and Captain W. H. May, of the Excellent, as the successor to Rear-Admiral Jeffreys at the Admiralty. There are, however, four flag officers senior to the latter with equal claims for such a desirable appointment.

Captain Peyton Hoskyns, Lieuts. T. D. Pratt, Sutton Smith, P. D. R. West, and C. D. Pickering (R.N.R.), Staff-Surgeon F. J. Burns, Paymaster C. F. Pollard, Clerk Guy Lees, Assistant Engineer A. J. Mackean left Plymouth in the Orient steamship Austral for Sydney, N.S.W., on Saturday last, to commission the Tauranga. Assistant Paymaster F. Seymour, for the Dart, Surgeon C. Shepherd, for the Royal Arthur, and Engineer A. R. Rolle, for the Porpoise, embarked in the same vessel.

Captain A. C. Galloway, of the Scylla, with a new crew for the Barracouta, arrived at Sierra Leone on Saturday last, and left for St. Paul de Loanda the following day, en route for the Cape of Good Hope.

Captain Frederick O. Pike commissioned the Gladiator at Portsmouth on Tuesday last to replace the Isis on the Mediterranean station.

Captain Frederick G. Stopford, of the Pearl, arrived at Bermuda on Friday in last week, preparatory to returning home to pay-off that vessel.

Commander Henry P. Floyd, of the Fearless, arrived at Port Said on Saturday last from South Africa, to rejoin the Mediterranean fleet.

Commander Hugh Cotesworth left Southampton on Saturday last in the Union Castle steamship, Tantallon Castle, for South Africa, to re-commission the Barracouta at Simon's Town.

Commander William Watson, R.N.R. Marine Superintendent at Liverpool of the Cunard Steamship Company, has received a gratifying communication from the Admiralty in appreciation of the assistance he rendered in fitting out transports for troops, and embarking them at that port for South Africa.

Commander Hugh Talbot, whose services during the past three years at the Engineer Students' Training College, at Devonport, have tended to the advantage of that establishment, is unable to take up an appointment to the Tyne, to which he was nominated on the 20th ult. It is to be regretted if by ill-health such an able officer is debarred active employment.

Lieut. Angel H. Freeman's gallantry at Samoa, where he fell in action against the natives in 1898, is now commemorated at his birthplace, Benilton, by an ornamental window in All Saints' Church, which was unveiled on Sunday last. A brass plate below the memorial records that he met his death in the service of his country.

Fleet-Surgeon Charles E. James, recently paid off from the Eclipse, has been appointed medical officer of the Royal Naval Hospital, Cape of Good Hope. Considering that the strength of the naval forces on that station is identical with that of the North America and West India command, there should be a deputy inspector-general of hospitals at the naval base in South Africa, the same as at Port Royal, Jamaica. Of the two places, an officer of that rank is more requisite at the Cape than in the West Indies.

ROYAL MARINES.

Captain A. H. Brabazon relieves Captain H. J. Crocker in the Howe at Queenstown.

Captain Percy W. Simmons proceeds to the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, for temporary duty as Assistant to the Professor of Fortification.

Navy Foreign.

A good deal of work is in hand at the French yards. At Cherbourg, the Yachts, the destroyer Espingole has completed her trials by running torpedoes and firing her guns at various angles, as well as by attaining the expected speed at sea. Efforts have been made in fine weather to re-float the torpedo-boat Bouët Willaumez, which sank near the Gauthier rock north of Lézardrieux, but without success, and prospects of success are now remote. She is an old boat of no great value. The battleship Hoche, which has returned to Cherbourg, will, it is said, form part of the armoured division, which the Northern Squadron is to detach to Bizerta towards the close of the present year. These ships are to be fitted with bilge keels. At Brest preparations are being made to constitute the new light squadron, to the command of which Rear-Admiral Gourdon has just been appointed. The third cruiser will be the D'Assas, the others being the Bruix and Dupuy de Lôme, with the Cassini, La Hire, and Fleurus, and perhaps the Infernet for a short time. There are now five battleships at the port belonging to the squadron, but the Formidable and Amiral Baudin are expected to leave for Bizerta with the Hoche. In this case the first division will comprise the Massena, Carnot, and Amiral Duperré, but the latter will soon be put in hand for reconstruction. The ships were placed on October 1 in the scale of reduced complements for the winter, according to the provision made by the Parliament, but retains all their officers. At the present time the Bruix is at Rochefort, changing her boiler tubes. At Toulon the cruiser Cosmao has been put out of commission. She has returned from Constantinople, where she will be replaced by the torpedo cruiser Vautour. The Etoile is the second vessel in the Bosphorus. The Mediterranean Squadron is undergoing modification. The Brennus, Terrible, and Lavoisier, are to go into the reserve, and the St. Louis will replace the first named as flagship. The squadron will then consist of two divisions, each perfectly homogeneous in itself—the first comprising the St. Louis, Charlemagne, and Gaulois, and the second the Charles Martel, Bouvet, and Jauréguiberry. Vice-Admiral de Maigret succeeded Vice-Admiral Fournier in the command on October 1.

In relation to the creation of an armoured squadron, to have its headquarters at Bizerta, it is instructive to learn that the works of that port are being energetically pushed forward under the direction of Captain Merleaux-Ponty. At the suggestion of that officer the Minister of Marine has decided to establish complete stores and magazines there, with a proper staff, and a committee to investigate the best method of doing so has been appointed.

The Italian Superior Naval Board met at the end of September, under the presidency of Admiral Accini, and has held another meeting during the week to examine the plans of two naval constructors for a new type of fighting vessel. Admiral Morin proposes to call the vessels about to be put in hand the Vittorio Emanuele, Elena, and Roma.

Vice-Admiral Hoffmann, lately commanding the first squadron of the German fleet, having completed his period of command, has been succeeded by Prince Henry of Prussia. The Prince's last important command at sea was on the China station, when he went out with the now famous "iron fist" when Kiauchau was occupied.

For any occasion that requires a sustaining and nourishing food in the smallest compass, one readily taken and easily digested and assimilated by even the most feeble constitution, Bovril is without a peer.

For travellers deprived of regular meals, Bovril is an invaluable stand-by; it strengthens and fortifies the system against attacks of disease; it invigorates and builds-up in convalescence.

Bovril is "every man's own doctor;" a recognised feature of the dietary of the leading hospitals in the United Kingdom; a valuable ally of experienced cooks in preparing nourishing food.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A.S.C.—Not until April 1, 1901, as at present arranged.

TENEX.—The matter has been finally decided.

FURLOUGH.—You could not claim extension on the grounds you mention.

SPURBOX.—There was such an understanding, but it was never really sanctioned by regulation, as you suppose.

INDIAN SERVICE.—There would be no harm in applying, but we doubt whether you have much chance of being selected.

ESPRIT DE CORPS.—The regiment will come to England as soon as it can be spared from South Africa.

GLOUCESTER.—There is still uncertainty.

RESERVIST.—Apply to Adjutant, Exchange Court, Strand, W.C.

HAND GRENADE.—You do not send name or address.

NOT IN THE KNOW.—It is a matter upon which we prefer not to express an opinion, as it in no way affects the interests of the Service.

MILITIA C.O.—We cordially agree with you, and shall not fail to do as you desire.

SUBMARINE MINER.—There is no difficulty. You only have to apply.

THE RETURN OF THE TROOPS.

THE return of the South African army has now begun in real earnest. The departures from the Cape of the Royal Canadian Regiment and of the City Imperial Volunteers were the first indications of the break-up of the forces. Since then the Brigade of Guards has left Komati Poort to re-embark for England. The Guards show a striking and triumphant record, gained during a march of some 700 miles, stretching from Orange River Station in the south to Komati Poort in the far east, via Modder River, Bloemfontein, and Pretoria. On the 7th inst. Lord Roberts sent home-wards, with a hearty good-bye, a portion of the Naval Brigade, which has rendered him such marked assistance; and on the 8th the bulk of the Natal Volunteers passed southwards through Pietermaritzburg, where they received, "for their patriotic services," the warm thanks of the Governor of the colony in the Queen's name before entraining for their various destinations. Of the generals who have so successfully led the troops throughout the campaign, Sir Redvers Buller is the first to leave the field, there being no further operations to be carried out demanding an officer of his rank. From October 31, when he arrived at the Cape and assumed the command of the troops in South Africa, until the 2nd inst., when he returned to Lydenburg after sweeping the country round Pilgrim's Rest and Krugersdorp, a period of eleven months, Sir Redvers Buller's work has been constant, harassing, and arduous in the extreme. The enormous difficulties that beset his position when, covering the colony of Natal in its rear, he faced and heroically strove, with insufficient force, to break the Tugela lines, contribute to form a brilliant military record. The remarkable tenacity of purpose and perseverance then shown by him under repeated discouragements will perhaps be remembered even longer than his successful advances from Ladysmith, covering some 350 miles, first to Standerton, and thence by a cross-country march, via Dalmanutha, where he fought one of the most decisive battles of the war, to Lydenburg, the last natural fortress of the late South African Republic.

Meanwhile the general state of affairs in the new colonies continues to be unsettled. The district lying between Pietersburg and Leydsdorp in the Zoutpansberg far away to the north is a centre of disturbance not yet reached by our arms. Louis Botha is supposed to be there at the head of some 1,500 men. Bands still roam through the country, plundering and shooting, within a day's march of Pretoria, Johannesburg, and Krugersdorp. A stretch of country lying along the Swaziland border from Vryheid to Barberton has still to be occupied by our troops and this may possibly be part of the work entrusted to General Hildyard, who is established at Vryheid, to crush any resistance lingering in that quarter. But it is in the Orange River Colony that the guerilla bands seem to find their most congenial home. The great combined movement against Prinsloo which broke up the main force of the Free Staters at Fouriesburg is being repeated from Lindley southwards, in order to sweep up what remains of the raiding commandoes in that quarter. De Wet has become the bête noir of the campaign, and his skill in eluding pursuit appears to grow more perfect day by day. Colonel De Lisle and part of the Colonial Division has had some days' fighting with part of De Wet's commando near Reitzburg recently, and drove them north of the Vaal. The operations in progress are believed to be pushing many of the bands further to the south, as they have recently visited Wepener, De Wetsdorp, Rouxville, and Ficksburg, and have even fired upon a party of police on the Orange River near Aliwal North, and captured a Militia outpost near Bethulie. As a consequence, British troops have reoccupied Smithfield, Rouxville, Wepener, and Dewetsdorp, and in general throughout the two Colonies the smaller towns are to be garrisoned in order to stop raiding for supplies. The present positions of generals and their troops, so far as they have been reported lately, are briefly as follows:—The Colonial Division and Generals Hunter and Rundle are pushing southwards in the Orange River Colony, co-operating in the endeavour to surround the guerilla bands. General Bruce Hamilton is moving near Lindley; and General Charles Knox was engaged with the enemy on Tuesday near Heilbron. Kelly-Kenny has his centre at Bloemfontein, whence the Highland Brigade marched, about the 5th inst., but with what object we have not yet learned. On the 2nd inst. Colonel Pilcher's force was at Thaba-Nchu. General French left Barberton on the 3rd inst. moving towards Kaapschehoop. Lord Dundonald remains at Machadodorp, where Strathcona's Horse and the South African Light Horse received on Monday the well-deserved praise and thanks of Sir Redvers Buller as he passed towards Pretoria from the front, where he has left General Lyttleton in command. Lord Methuen arrived at Rustenburg on the 4th, having, together with General Douglas, fought two engagements on the 28th ult. with Lemmer's commando. Generals Clements, Broadwood, and Ridley have recently been once more clearing the country in the Megaliesberg, and General Barton near Krugersdorp had an engagement on Tuesday. General Clery, on the South-Eastern Railway, and General Paget, to the north of Pretoria, retain their former positions. On Wednesday Lord Roberts reported an unfortunate affair at Kaapmuiden, entailing serious losses, partly due to the wrecking of a train and partly to an attack by the enemy at the same time. It will thus be seen that no very material improvement in the situation has resulted from Lord Roberts's proclamations. There is reason, however, to think that the greater part of the men still in arms are desperadoes and renegades whom it is high time to declare outlaws, and to treat accordingly. In any case the situation is one that should suggest the greatest caution in withdrawing the troops too largely. It is high time that the guerilla warfare desolating the country was stamped out.

THE NEW RÉGIME.

MANY wild statements have been made as to the changes in the Headquarters Staff which may be expected to follow Lord Roberts's advent. As a matter of fact there can be no vacancies except by resignation or transfer, for all the higher staff officers hold their appointments for a fixed term which in every case has some time to run. If Lord Kitchener was to come to the War Office it would have to be in some new post or room would have to be made for him. Sir Evelyn Wood, the Adjutant-General, is not due to leave the War Office until October, 1902. The Quartermaster-General, Sir Mansfield Clarke, was only appointed last year. Sir Robert Harrison, the Inspector-General of Fortifications, in April, 1893. Sir Coleridge Grove, the Military Secretary, alone is near the end of his tenure. It may be taken as certain that Lord Roberts himself will in most cases prefer to retain the services of the capable and distinguished soldiers whom he will find in Pall Mall. He would, in truth, be quite lost without them. Much emphasis has been laid upon the fact that this will be absolutely his first appearance in the War Office, and it is no doubt a fair deduction that he will be free from the prejudices and traditions supposed to lie heavy on all hands. There is the converse, however. A new man must necessarily be very much in the hands of his subordinates in all matters of detail, and whether the coach has been driven well or ill hitherto, it would run no better with an entirely unpractised whip.

There is, however, little reason to believe that any of the higher staff officers will disappear. On the contrary, Lord Roberts is said to have already assured Sir Evelyn Wood and Sir Mansfield Clarke of his satisfaction at knowing he will have their support. Sir Henry Brackenbury, again, has been too closely associated with him in Indian administration not to be fully appreciated, and, indeed, in the Director-General of the Ordnance Lord Roberts will have a pillar of strength. His services of late have been incalculable, and Brackenbury, of all men, could be least well spared from the War Office at this momentous juncture. As regards the patronage department it is different. Although the post of Military Secretary is in no sense on the personal staff, necessarily entailing retirement with the Commander-in-Chief, yet the functions discharged are so delicate and confidential that the man who holds it must be on terms of the closest intimacy and accord with the supreme authority. Lord Roberts would, of course, find in Sir Coleridge Grove the most staunch and loyal subordinate, and could always count upon his cordial help. But he will naturally prefer to have by his side some old friend, someone long versed in his views, familiar with his thoughts, with the inner processes of his mind. We may look, therefore, for an immediate change in this one particular at least. We need not go far to seek the new Military Secretary, for he will certainly be found in Lord Roberts's present entourage. Various names have been mentioned already, and among them those of Sir William Nicholson, General Pretyma, General Ian Hamilton and General Pole-Carew. All have been members of his personal staff in times past, and are known as personæ gratissimæ to the new Commander-in-Chief. The choice will probably be between Ian Hamilton and Pole-Carew, both soldiers, as we now know, of approved prowess in the field. It would be invidious to distinguish between them, premature to discuss their peculiar qualifications. One point is, however, worth noting—General Pole-Carew is a Guardsman, and if he is selected the Household Brigade is not likely in future to be left out in the cold.

There remain many minor staff appointments at the War Office at this moment, held by officers "acting," which have been more or less kept open for their original holders when they went to the front. Will these latter return to their posts? In some cases it would be impossible. Sir Francis Clery, for instance, who was Deputy Adjutant-General to the Forces, is due for retirement under the age clause. Others, like Colonel Ralph Allen, one of the A.A.G.'s at Headquarters, has had a brigade command in South Africa, and must shortly be a Major-General. Others will probably be still retained at the Cape. In any case we may be sure that the "acting" tenure will soon terminate, and that permanent appointments will be made. There will be an embarrassment of choice and a host of conflicting claims, all strongly based, if not always equal, or so considered. How Lord Roberts will deal with the abundant patronage that must soon flow into his hands remains to be seen; but it will be deeply interesting to watch its disposal.

SIR REDVERS BULLER.

NO explanation has as yet been offered for Sir Redvers Buller's return home, the news of which has taken most people by surprise. Yet it is not at all surprising. Buller's work is done at the Cape—how well does the country will realise some day—and he has many uses, many interests at home. His advice and assistance in matters of Army administration would be exceedingly valuable at this time, for no one knows the War Office better, or has probed deeper into its dark corners and devious ways. It is impossible to forget his shrewd hit at clerkdom when he gave evidence before the Committee on Decentralisation and declared that a first indispensable step would be to sweep away half the clerks in the office. Buller is a born administrator, and has proved it to the hilt. In one department alone, that of Supply, taking the expression as covering the whole of the subsidiary Services, commissariat, transport, and so forth, he achieved a monumental work when he was Quartermaster-General to the Forces. There may be many points in the Army Service Corps that still need attention and improvement, but this branch has undoubtedly stood the sharp test of an arduous campaign triumphantly. Despite almost unheard-of difficulties, distance, inadequate means, it has served the Army with extraordinary success. The department was created, practically, by Buller—its best officers, Richardson, Bridge, and Ward, were his choice.

Sir Redvers Buller may count upon a warm welcome. He went out a year ago full of high hopes, carrying with him the confidence of the nation. His hopes were dashed by contretemps that were beyond his control, but in spite of the often rough usage of fate—and luck was long against him—he never forfeited the goodwill of his fellow countrymen. We English most keenly appreciate those qualities which have made us what we are, and Buller possesses some of the best: bulldog determination and a pluck and constancy that rise superior to every obstacle, and lets nothing go until it is carried through. The critics, the cheap experts, might lightly condemn the man committed to a task the magnitude and difficulty of which they could not understand, but the great heart of the nation was always with Buller. Just as the men who so splendidly helped him through stood by him to the last extremity, so the British people at large honoured and trusted in him in their unshaken, unabated faith. Never—except in the newspapers—was a word said against Buller, not even in the darkest hour. Now the ringing cheers of the "send off" by the gallant comrades he led so well will assuredly be loudly re-echoed here when he lands. There can be no question how he will be received.

ARMY CANTEENS.

THE painful character of the court-martial now sitting at Dover upon an unfortunate officer of artillery is plainly apparent from the proceedings. As the case is still sub judice, it would be improper to discuss the nature of the charge or the probable guilt or innocence of the accused. But the moment is opportune for raising a protest against the whole system of barrack and regimental canteens. It cannot be too strongly impressed upon the authorities and on the public, which, after all, is the real authority, that that system demands the strictest investigation, whether or not abuses exist, can only be brought out beyond dispute by rigid inquiry; but there are many ugly rumours current of underhand dealings and unsavoury practices, flourishing with evil growth, despite the checks and safeguards devised, so many of which are said to be nugatory or easily evaded. High above all rises the great question whether the management of the canteen, which is shopkeeping pure and simple, should be included among the duties of any man who bears the Queen's Commission. In these days when the higher training of officers is being so loudly advocated, and the shortcomings in leadership are so constantly quoted as explaining disasters in South Africa, it is monstrous that officers should be diverted from their real work to pore over canteen accounts or concern themselves with the sale of beer, or tea and sugar.

Army Notes.

"An Officer's Wife" writes to us to suggest that the first medals issued for the war in South Africa should be sent to the widows of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men who have given their lives in upholding their country's honour. As "An Officer's Wife" says truly, "there would be no medals more treasured than these; but much depends on the gift being made as early as possible—directly the first batch of medals is ready." We need scarcely say that the idea will be approved by the Army at large, for there can be no questioning that those who have the first claim on the nation's gratitude are the widows of the victims of the war.

Several correspondents have written to us lately on the subject of a medal for the last Boer war. After what has happened lately in Canada, where a medal has been issued to all who took part in the Red River Expedition and against the Fenian Raids, it would be difficult for the authorities to withhold the new South Africa medal from those who were employed in South Africa in 1881. As yet, however, no official notification has been published in Army Orders on the subject of the new decoration. When the Army Order does appear it may be found that the gallantry and self-devotion of those who fought in the campaign of nineteen years ago will have been fittingly acknowledged. At any rate we hope so, as we are well aware what pleasure and satisfaction it would bring to large numbers of officers and men, many of whom have left the Service undecorated. The expense of the extra medals could not be a very big item on the Army estimates, and in an army which relies on the voluntary principle there would be much wisdom in conceding the points.

It is only a year since the separation of the Royal Artillery was carried out, and already we are receiving numerous complaints from officers who beg us to espouse their cause. As one correspondent puts it, "the Garrison Artillery will soon be ruined unless steps are taken to help on promotion." We will not go so far as to say that our correspondent's fears are likely to be realised. It would take much to ruin any branch of the Royal Regiment of Artillery, but that the garrison gunners will suffer materially under the new organisation goes without saying. Another correspondent states the case clearly when he says, "Not more than ten per cent. of garrison gunners in the future can ever hope to see active service, and then only by being on the staff or in a mountain battery. The new heavy howitzer batteries which have been raised, and which essentially belong to the garrison branch of the Service, have been given to the Field Artillery, and mountain batteries with their little pop-guns, which should belong to the Field Artillery, are officered by garrison gunners, brought from forts armed with the latest heavy B.L. guns on complicated mountings! The ways of the powers that be are certainly unaccountable!"

"A Cavalry Field Officer" writes to complain because "a number of corporals and even privates from Colonial corps and the Imperial Yeomanry have received commissions as 2nd Lieuts. in Line cavalry regiments." But, although the reasons for the promotion of these young men may not be apparent, there are, from what we gather, circumstances in many cases which would explain the mystery. In more than one instance the non-commissioned officer promoted is a university man, with between £500 to £1,000 a year private income. It is pretty evident that just now in South Africa matters are somewhat mixed, for we read in a private letter from a youthful 2nd Lieut. in a Line battalion, the son of a country clergyman, that serving side by side with him is the only son of the squire of the parish, a trooper in the Yeomanry, the happy heir to a fortune of some £100,000. A few days ago the will was proved of a deceased sergeant of Imperial Yeomanry, whose personalty was sworn under £120,000, and on several occasions lately deceased troopers of the same force have been shown to have left behind estates of £30,000 and upwards. Doubtless many of the young men who have been drawn to the field during the present campaign in South Africa will be only too ready to accept Line commissions. After the experience they have gained, it would be rather unwise to refuse to take them because they happen to be only privates or corporals, when they possess other qualifications necessary for maintenance of the position of "officer and gentleman."

The 4th Batn. Bedfordshire Regiment, under command of Lieut.-Colonel Lord Cranborne, have seen a good deal of real fighting in South Africa. The battalion has been for some time at Mafeking, and is the only British battalion quartered there, the rest of the force being Australians. Among other things Lord Cranborne's command formed part of Lieut.-General Carrington's force when it was ordered out from Mafeking after the retirement from Zeerust. Every day it had little fights. Patrols were constantly attacked a few miles out. When the mail left the battalion had been ordered to join Lord Methuen's force. It will gratify Militiamen generally to know that at least one unit in South Africa has been well to the fore, although so many have been disappointed in getting beyond the lines of communication. All speak in the highest terms of the discipline and fighting efficiency of the gallant 4th Bedfordshire, who are a credit to the county of Hertford, from which they are recruited.

As one result of the war, the question of the organisation of the Army Service Corps has arisen. The last reorganisation of the corps took place in December, 1888, but the Royal warrant would seem to have been framed on that occasion without consulting the officers of the regimental type. The consequence is that these officers, who form the bulk of the corps, have ever since had a grievance. This is most undesirable. In any reforms contemplated, their advice and opinions as officers of experience belonging to the "permanent list" of the corps should be sought. It should be clearly understood that the interests of the two classes of officers composing the corps are totally distinct. The original officers who serve upon their departmental commissions, and who may be distinguished in the official "Army List" by the letter "x" prefixed to their names, would seem to have been thoroughly well looked after in the existing Royal warrant. They secured a good rate of pay and allowances, together with excellent retiring allowances and the rank of colonel in the Army. A certain number specially selected also had the chance of practically permanent employment until 55 years of age. Officers who joined from regiments were treated far less liberally. This could have been avoided had the authorities consulted certain representatives of this class. Their failing to do this has proved a grievous error of judgment, for it has done much to create a breach between the officers of the supernumerary and the permanent list. The latter feel that one of their own class ought to be selected for the post of A.Q.M.G., A.S.C., so as to look after the interests of the corps, particularly as these officers form, and will for the future be, the permanent corps. Such an officer would know the wants of his corps. There are many proved men of vast experience upon the "supernumerary list," but these officers do not now represent the general body. As it is now, there is no "future" assured to the Army Service Corps, beyond five years' tenure as lieutenant-colonel, except a chance of appointment as A.A.G. of a district. They may, however, be considered with other colonels of the Army and then only upon a considerably lower rate of pay than they enjoyed as lieutenant-colonels. This is clearly a blot and must go far to destroy interest and efficiency. The corps has done marvellously well in South Africa. This has been due to intense esprit de corps and unflagging zeal. The corps deserves—and no doubt in due course will receive ample credit. It would therefore be a well-deserved compliment to select one of its combatant officers, now, for the post of A.Q.M.G. Such a selection would be appreciated, and we commend the suggestion to notice.

Our sympathies are with the Militia subalterns in South Africa. These young officers will be placed at a very serious disadvantage unless some means can be found for giving them their commissions direct. In some cases this has been done. Why should there be exceptions? Why should one young officer be transferred to the Line without examination, whilst another equally deserving is told that he must undergo the ordinary test? We have received from a Militia commanding officer in South Africa a list of recent appointments. A careful examination of this is not calculated to remove the impression that some of the selections made have been influenced far more by interest than by actual merit. As our correspondent points out, "A good deal of bitterness has been produced, when a modicum of common sense would have prevented this." Why, we would ask, in a time like the present, should not the Indian authorities be induced to offer a hundred commissions to young officers of the Militia serving in South Africa, subject to their qualifying themselves in due course. If the augmentation of European officers with native regiments is to be carried into effect within reasonable time a large number of subalterns will be required, who, speaking generally, could better fill the vacancies than these young men who have for upwards of a year been in the field in South Africa. It seems a little unfair, to say the least, that troopers and corporals of the Imperial Yeomanry and Colonial corps should be gazetted continually to 2nd Lieutenancies without examination, whilst subalterns of Militia, who have done duty with their embodied units for ten months or so—part of the time in face of the enemy—should be left out in the cold. It cannot be for the good of the Army when the competitive examination being done away with temporarily, the junior officers of the Militia are placed at such a serious disadvantage. The letters which come to us on the subject show how deep-rooted the feeling of dissatisfaction is, and we are bound to say that there seems to be good reason for much of it.

It does not seem to be generally known that the 2nd Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, which from the very outset of the war has played such a prominent part in the operations in Natal, commencing with the battle of Glencoe, when it led the attack on Talana Hill, up till the battle of Colenso, when with its 1st Batn. it bore the brunt of the fighting in Hart's brigade, is one of the oldest regiments in the Service. Although for many years spoken of as one of the "new Line regiments," it was raised in 1661 to garrison the island of Bombay, which, together with the town of Tangiers, formed part of the dowry of Catherine of Braganza on her marriage with Charles II. Its origin is therefore contemporary with that of the "Queen's," or Royal West Surrey Regiment, which came into existence about the same period to garrison Tangiers. The Bombay Regiment was commanded by Sir Abraham Shipman and arrived in Bombay harbour on September 18, 1662. Owing to some misunderstanding on the part of the Portuguese governor the regiment did not take over the new possession until three years later, being meanwhile quartered on the island of Anchidivah, where, owing to climate and disease, it was so reduced in numbers that when it did eventually land in Bombay it only mustered 119 men out of an original strength of 500. Up to the year 1668 it continued to form part of the King's Army, and was known as "The Bombay Regiment." Having been recruited up to its full strength, it was employed during the early part of its career in suppressing the piracy on the Malabar coast, and served afloat almost as much as on shore. When eventually the East India Company took over Bombay the Bombay Regiment accepted the invitation to join the East India Company's forces, and became its first European regiment. From 1737 to 1740 the East India Company was constantly engaged in hostilities with the Maharrattas, and in all these campaigns the Bombay Regiment took a leading part. In 1747 a strong detachment of the regiment was engaged in operations against the French on the Madras coast, and was foremost in the defence of Cudalore and the capture of Davicottah under Major Turnbull. At the decisive battle of Plassey, 1756, the regiment formed part of the small force which enabled Lord Clive to effect the virtual conquest of India. Later on, in the month of March, 1799, it was present at the famous siege of Seringapatam, where its colours, carried by Sergeant Graham, were the first planted on the walls of Tippoo's stronghold. At the capture of Ahmedabad in 1780, and at Moultan in 1849, its colours were again the first on the walls. In short, in most campaigns which won for us our Indian Empire the "Old Toughs" have borne their share. In 1843, as a mark of distinction for their brilliant services, the regiment was granted the title of "Fusiliers." This was notified in Brigade Orders of March 28, 1843, as follows:—"In circulating the accompanying G.G.O., constituting the 1st Bombay European Regiment 'Fusiliers,' the brigadier has great pleasure in congratulating the gallant 'Toughs' on the distinguished honour which has been conferred on them, and which all military men will admit has been most deservedly and highly merited." In 1861 the 1st Bombay Fusiliers was on the amalgamation transferred to the British establishment, under the title of the 103rd Royal Bombay Fusiliers, and once more, after an interval of close upon 200 years, formed part of the Imperial forces of the Crown. In 1881, when the territorial organization was introduced, the regiment was linked with the 102nd Royal Madras Fusiliers under the title of the Royal Dublin Fusiliers, forming its 2nd Batn. It is to be hoped that on the conclusion of the present arduous campaign the long and distinguished services of this famous regiment will not be lost sight of, but that, as in the case of the Royal Irish Fusiliers, some special distinction will be accorded it in recognition of the heroic manner in which both battalions have upheld the honour of the city and county from which they now take their name.

The conspicuous gallantry of the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers is to be still further commemorated. Some time since, a movement was set on foot to raise a monument to all the territorial corps, including the Inniskilling Dragoons, at Enniskillen, the chief town. It has been thought right, however, that Omagh, the headquarters of the regimental district, should pay its own especial tribute to the Fusiliers. A movement for this purpose has accordingly been set on foot by all the principal personages in the district, which includes the counties of Fermanagh, Tyrone, Donegal, and Londonderry. The honorary secretaries of the scheme are Colonel L. M. Buchanan, C.B., and Lieut.-Colonel H. Irvine. Widespread support will surely be accorded to this most excellent proposal. It can never be forgotten that out of 27 officers and 800 men, no fewer than 25 officers and 300 men of the Inniskilling Fusiliers fell in South Africa between November and March, and that the record of their bravery equal the best traditions of the Service.

The following brief resumé of the Army Health Association at Meerut for 1899 is encouraging, as showing a progressive diminution in the admissions to hospital for preventable disease. The aim of the Association is to interest soldiers in garrisons in the increase or decline of that particular disease which causes so much inefficiency. The following figures enhance the importance of any measures which contend against it. The admission rate of preventable disease among British soldiers in India was, in 1896, 511.6, in 1897, 487.5; and in 1898, 362.9. In other words, in 1898, for every 1,000 men there were nearly 123 fewer admissions to hospital for contagious disease than in 1897. The Army Health Association places spiritual considerations first, but the good of the individual, and loyalty to national, military, social, and family ties is ever brought home to the troops. It is hoped that when the next annual statement of the Association appears, the names (carefully sifted) will amount to 2,000 soldier-adherents of the cause secured in nine years of actual work at Meerut alone. The honorary secretary at Meerut is the Rev. John Crawford, B.D. Many officers are associated with the reverend gentleman in the good work already done. We wish success to the efforts of the Association, whose work we have before noticed.

That most excellent institution, the National Association for the Employment of Reserve Soldiers, has issued a circular to employers of labour, which must surely meet with a cordial response. It reminds the patriotic persons who consented to keep situations open for the men who went to the front that large numbers of Reservists which shortly return to this country, and will very fairly claim the fulfilment of the promises made to them. Moreover, the number discharged must necessarily increase the applicants for employment, all of them good and deserving soldiers, who have fully earned the gratitude of their country. To help forward the good work is a duty incumbent upon every citizen of this Empire, and we may be certain that no soldier of South Africa will be forgotten. There must be no "absent-minded" employers.

In an account of the operations of the troops in South Africa, which appeared in our issue for August 25, it was stated that the Boers had completely surprised Captain Reynolds and twenty-two non-commissioned officers and men of the 5th Dragoon Guards. We now learn that we were misled in this matter by the telegraphed description of the incident. What really happened was that Captain Reynolds, of the 3rd Dragoon Guards, but attached to the 5th Dragoon Guards, with a detachment of twenty-two men of that regiment, made a night attack on a laager of 250 Boers behind the Doornkop. The surprise was completely successful, our men getting within seventy yards of the laager, with the result that, as subsequently related by a prisoner, the Boers lost four men killed, seventeen wounded, and twenty-seven horses killed. So many surprises have been effected by the Boers that it is only fair Captain Reynolds and his men should get the credit when the boot is on the other leg.

The death of Lord Howe draws attention to a fact connected with the colonelcy of the 2nd Life Guards. The colonelcy of a regiment of Household Cavalry in the old days carried pay at the rate of £1,800 a year. But at the time when the new rates of pay and retired pay for General officers came into force, the pay of regimental colonelcies was abolished, except for such officers as did not accept the new rates. This is now all so long ago, that it is impossible to find a Peer of the Realm who is also a General officer in receipt of the old rates of pay, or retired pay. This being so, the successor to Earl Howe in the colonelcy of the 2nd Life Guards may be deprived of the pay which has hitherto been attached to the appointment, unless some special arrangement is come to with reference to the post of "Gold Stick." In 1830, when the Household Cavalry were finally placed under the orders of the Commander-in-Chief in the same manner as regiments of the Line, the King (William IV.) issued an order to this effect, which still remains in force:—"The Gold Stick will continue to perform the duty of that office, and will receive from His Majesty in person the parole and countersign, and will report to His Majesty in person as usual, as well as to the General officer commanding the Army in chief. He will also specially report to His Majesty the receipt of any order from the General Commanding-in-Chief."

We trust, now that a number of Militia units are about to be disembodied, the employers of labour will extend to the men thus thrown on the labour market that generous feeling that they ought to do in the circumstances of the case. It should be remembered that the men were called to arms in a period of emergency, and responded loyally and patriotically to the summons. Their conduct has been most exemplary, and they now return to their homes improved both in health and discipline by their extended period of training. They have a claim, however, on their fellow-countrymen, for it has been in their interests that they have been embodied. It is right that this fact should be kept in view. Colonel B. C. McCalmont, commanding the 5th Batn. Warwickshire Regiment, has addressed a letter to the conductors of the Birmingham Army Reservists' Fund, acknowledging the kindness of employers and he public towards the men during the time the battalion has been embodied, and expressing a hope that the employers will continue their good offices to the men by giving them work, so that the nine months spent in the service of their country may not result in their being out of work during the ensuing winter. Other commanding officers might well make similar appeals. After the great service which the Militia has rendered in a national crisis, it would be a poor return, indeed, if the men suffered by being deprived of the means of earning an honest living. There are few employers, we hope, so wanting in all sense of right and wrong as to punish well-conducted soldiers who have done their duty in a period of national anxiety.

THE WAR AND ITS LESSONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR.—Captain Livett has misread my article. It was mounted infantry, not infantry, which I considered to be the force of the future. I proposed to have at least 30,000 of them trained to the last perfection. Men so trained may be relied upon not to fire away their ammunition in the way that Captain Livett describes. I believe that his criticism of the Highland Brigade at Magersfontein is entirely unjust and mistaken.

THE NEW MUSKETRY REGULATIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR.—I quite agree with the military authorities as to the importance of musketry, and the regulations just issued are unquestionably called for, for there is little prospect of officers being good shots and taking an intelligent interest in musketry, unless they are properly taught the principles of rifle shooting early in their career. But it strikes me we are bringing in the new regulations a little too hurriedly. Where, I would ask, are the whole of the officers to obtain their certificates? If at Hythe, the question will naturally suggest itself: Is Hythe big enough? I know the school there well, and rather doubt its capacity to do all that is required of it. It certainly cannot do so with the present staff. This is only a detail some may say, but it is a detail of some importance. Hence my letter, which I hope you will give a corner for, so that I may be corrected if I am wrong.

CROSS RIFLES.

ALDERSHOT DRILLS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR.—It was stated in your last issue that Lieut.-Gen. Sir William Butler had issued an order at Aldershot, directing "all officers of cavalry not on duty to attend the field operations carried out under his directions. A very sensible and practical soldier, Sir William Butler, who knows how to keep young officers out of mischief. I commend his order, but I should like to ask a question—viz., Are these young officers to attend the drills on their own account in independent squads? Because, if so, I fail to see that much advantage will accrue to them. It would be difficult, perhaps, to always find a staff officer available to explain knotty points for the benefit of the more studious, but I cannot help thinking that each regiment ought to arrange to have a senior officer present to take charge of the squad and explain to young hands what is going on; otherwise, the young idea may get very much mixed in his notion, and horse and rider equally mixed among the marching forces. It is only a small detail to which I allude, but it is as well to have all these details discussed; and from all I can gather here there is much doubt on the point I raise.

A CAVALRYMAN.

Army and Navy Club, October 8.

ACCORDING to the Court Circular of October 6, there is a well-known saying, "As well be out of the world as out of the fashion," and it would seem as if no amount of writing against crape can affect its being extremely fashionable. According to a writer in a Sunday paper, who evidently does not love this material, "a feature of Paris life, which the visitor cannot fail to notice, is the large number of women clad from head to foot in dismal crape. These are widows, young and old." Possibly the writer forgets that a vast number of ladies (the Princess of Wales included) look extremely well in crape, and that would quite account for the quantity to be seen just now in London as well as in Paris.

SPEAKING at Huddersfield, Mr. Wyndham, Under Secretary for War, dealt with the question of pensions for soldiers, and said that the Government had provided that every man slightly injured in the war should have a pension of 1s. 6d., and each totally incapacitated for work 2s. 6d. a day for the remainder of his life. We owed it also not only to our soldiers, but to ourselves, that the State should directly, without any intermediary, contribute to the support of the widows of the men who died for the Empire.

DISEMBODIMENT OF THE MILITIA.

The following Militia units have been, or will be, disembodied on the dates specified:—

ARTILLERY.—Norfolk, Oct. 13; Sussex, Oct. 17; Edinburgh, Oct. 6; Fife, Oct. 12; Forfar and Kincardine, Oct. 6th; Lancashire, Oct. 11; Londonderry, Oct. 3; Sligo, Oct. 10; South-East of Scotland, Oct. 5; Tipperary, Oct. 10; Waterford, Oct. 13; West of Scotland, Oct. 3; Wicklow, Oct. 9; Cardigan, Oct. 5; Carmarthen, Oct. 6; Devon, Oct. 17; Durham, Oct. 11; Glamorgan, Oct. 3; Pembroke, Oct. 3; Yorkshire, Oct. 12; Northumberland, Oct. 11; Cornwall and Devon Miners, Oct. 5.

ENGINEERS.—Royal Anglesey, Oct. 13; Royal Monmouthshire, date to be hereafter notified. Division Submarine Miners.—Humber, Oct. 31; Medway and Needles, date to be hereafter notified; Milford Haven, Oct. 10; Western, Oct. 13.

INFANTRY.—5th Batn. Royal Warwickshire Regiment, Oct. 18; 5th Batn. Royal Fusiliers, Oct. 16; 6th Batn, Oct. 18; 7th Batn, Oct. 15; 5th Batn, King's Liverpool Regiment, Oct. 16; 6th Batn, Nov. 1; 4th Batn. Lincoln Regiment, Oct. 17; 3rd Batn. Devon Regiment, Oct. 20; 4th Batn. Suffolk Regiment, Oct. 15; 3rd Batn. Royal Irish Regiment, 5th Batn. Lancashire Fusiliers, 4th Batn. Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Oct. 17; 3rd Batn. Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, Oct. 16; 4th Batn. Oct. 18; 5th Batn. Worcestershire Regiment, Oct. 15; 6th Batn., Oct. 19; 3rd Batn. East Surrey Regiment, Oct. 15; 3rd Batn. Border Regiment, 3rd Batn. Oxford L.I., Nov. 1; 3rd Batn. Essex Regiment, Oct. 20; 3rd Batn. Yorkshire L.I., Oct. 17; 4th Batn. Shropshire L.I., Nov. 1; 5th Batn. Middlesex Regiment, 7th Batn. King's Royal Rifle Corps, Oct. 15; 8th Batn., Nov. 1; 5th Batn. Manchester Regiment, Oct. 20; 6th Batn., Oct. 18; 3rd Batn. North Stafford Regiment, Oct. 15; 3rd Batn. Highland L.I., Oct. 20; 4th Batn., Oct. 15; 3rd Batn. Royal Irish Rifles, Oct. 19; 4th Batn., Nov. 1; 6th Batn., Oct. 17; 4th Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers, Oct. 19; 5th Batn., Oct. 20; 4th and 5th Batns. Connaught Rangers, Oct. 17; 5th Batn. Leinster Regiment, Oct. 19; 4th Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers, 3rd Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, Oct. 18; 5th Batn. Rifle Brigade, Oct. 20; 7th Batn., Oct. 18.

In pursuance of the provisions of Section 20 (2) of the Militia Act, 1882, the Secretary of State has directed that the parts of the following embodied Militia units now serving in the United Kingdom shall be disembodied on the date specified below, and any individual Militiaman or detachment belonging to the unit arriving in the United Kingdom prior to the return of the headquarters of the battalion will be similarly disembodied on arrival from abroad, or when medically fit:—

3rd Batn. Royal Scots, 3rd Batn. Royal West Surrey Regiment, 3rd Batn. East Kent Regiment, 3rd Batn. Royal Lancaster Regiment, Oct. 13; 4th Batn. Royal Lancaster Regiment, 5th Batn. Northumberland Fusiliers, 6th Batn. Royal Warwick Regiment, 3rd Batn. Norfolk Regiment, 4th Batn. Somerset L.I., 4th Batn. West Yorkshire Regiment, Oct. 12; 4th Batn. Bedford Regiment, 3rd Batn. Yorkshire Regiment, 6th Batn. Lancashire Fusiliers, 4th Batn. Cheshire Regiment, 3rd Batn. South Wales Borderers, 3rd Batn. King's Own Scottish Borderers, 4th Batn. Scottish Rifles, 4th Batn. Gloucester Regiment, Oct. 13; 3rd Batn. East Lancashire Regiment, Oct. 12; 3rd Batn. West Riding Regiment, Oct. 13; 4th Batn. South Stafford Regiment, Oct. 12; 3rd Batn. South Lancashire Regiment, 3rd Batn. Welsh Regiment, Oct. 13; 4th Batn. Derbyshire Regiment, 3rd Batn. Royal North Lancashire Regiment, Oct. 12; 3rd Batn. Royal West Kent Regiment, 6th Batn. Middlesex Regiment, Oct. 13; 9th Batn. King's Royal Rifle Corps, Oct. 12; 4th Batn. North Stafford Regiment, Oct. 13; 3rd Batn. Durham Light Infantry, Oct. 12; 3rd Batn. Seaforth Highlanders, 4th Batn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, Oct. 13; 3rd Batn. Leinster Regiment, Oct. 12; 3rd Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers, Oct. 13; 5th Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, Oct. 16.

Any Militiamen of these units now on furlough will be directed to rejoin, on its completion, the headquarters of their regimental district (or in the case of the 9th Batn. King's Royal Rifle Corps, the headquarters of their battalion at Mallow), where they will be disembodied.

Mobilised Militia Reservists, who have been transferred or appointed out of their original corps, will, on return from abroad, be either posted to a battalion of their new corps, or reposted to their original battalion, as they may elect.

Mobilised Militia Reservists, whose Militia units have been disembodied before they return from abroad, will, on their return home, be posted as Militiamen to the headquarters of their Militia units.

On arrival from abroad, Militiamen, including mobilised Reservists, belonging to the Militia units specified in paragraph 2, will, with the exception of the 9th Batn. King's Royal Rifle Corps, be sent to the headquarters of their regimental district, instead of being dealt with as laid down in paragraph 1814, Queen's Regulations. Men of the 9th Batn. King's Royal Rifle Corps will be sent to Mallow.

Viscount Wolseley will preside at Mr. Winston Churchill's opening lecture on "The War as I saw it," to be delivered at the St. James's Hall on the 30th inst.

We are glad to learn that already it is pretty well settled that a medal shall be issued to mark the services rendered by Admiral Seymour and General Gaselee's forces in China. The India Office is very sensible of the admirable arrangements made for the embarkation of the relief force, and as General Gaselee as Quartermaster-General at Simla had not a little to do in maturing the plans for the despatch of the troops, it may be taken as certain that his reward will be adequate to the value of the great services he has rendered.

Lord Roberts has accepted the invitation of the Ulster Association in London to a banquet in his honour, to be given directly after his return. Communications should be addressed to the hon. secretary, 29, Cannon Street.

Field-Marshal Sir Lintorn Simmons has presented a handsome mission church and parsonage house to the parish of Churchill, Somerset, in which members of his family have for many generations resided. The church and residence, which have just been dedicated by the Bishop of Bath and Wells, in the presence of the Field-Marshal, are a thank-offering for blessings that have been vouchsafed to the donor.

The City of London proposes to celebrate the services of the more prominent generals who have held commands, &c., in South Africa by the bestowal of its freedom and the presentation of swords of honour. It is intended to erect a statue in the Guildhall to Lord Roberts, which is already adorned with statues of Wellington and Nelson.

A correspondent writes from South Africa:—"The foreign attachés, when they came back to Cape Town, were loud in praise of Lord Roberts and his methods, and on leaving the Cape united in drawing up an address expressing cordial gratitude to his lordship for his proverbial courtesy. Every attaché signed his name, and added an expression of appreciation of the consideration he had received. As one of the officers remarked to me: 'It has been a revelation to see on all hands so much kindly feeling; not forced, but real thoughtfulness and soldierly generosity. I do not exaggerate in the least; I mean what I say. We have been made very happy, and I for one shall not forget how good-tempered and free from all bitterness towards their enemies your soldiers and officers have been.'"

General Sir Power Palmer will leave Simla on the 23rd inst. for a frontier tour.

General Sir George White, promoted in Tuesday's Gazette, did not obtain the rank of Lieutenant-General until April 1, 1895. General Sir Henry Brackenbury, the senior Lieutenant-General, obtained that rank April 1, 1888. It may interest those who watch for cases of supersession, to note this one among senior officers.

General Sir George Willis, Colonel of the Middlesex Regiment, who has been lying ill for some time past at Bournemouth from malarial fever, has gradually grown weaker, and his condition is now extremely critical.

General Sir George Higginson, Colonel of the Worcestershire Regiment, presided at a meeting at Marlow, Bucks, on Saturday last, when he spoke of the brilliant services rendered by the Imperial Yeomanry in South Africa, and said there was scarcely a mail but he received letters from officers in the highest position speaking of the Yeomanry as being beyond all praise. The last letter he received contained these words:—

"I cannot speak too highly of Chesham's Yeomanry. They are absolutely fearless. The general officer told me that I could march my division with absolute security so long as I saw the Yeomanry scouting on the right and the left. I feel my flanks are perfectly secure, and I would infinitely prefer their services for this particular duty to those of the Regular cavalry."

Sir Claude Macdonald, retired list, Highland Light Infantry, has arrived at Shanghai, en route to Japan.

Lieut.-General J. W. Laurie, M.P., who has been appointed to the colonelcy of the Royal Munster Fusiliers, served in the 4th Foot, 1854-61. He did duty in the Crimea from November, 1854, until its evacuation, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol, repulse of the two sorties on November 22 and 23, attacks on the Barrack Battery on June 8, and Redan on September 8, and was wounded in December, 1854, and again in March, 1855 (medal with clasp, Turkish medal, and 5th Class of the Medjidie); served in the Indian Mutiny and was staff officer of the Field Force in the Rewah Kantee district in 1860 (medal). He also saw service in the Canadian Rising, 1885, as second in command and as commandant of base (medal).

Lord Kitchener is said to have a great friend and admirer in King Menelik of Abyssinia, who is very interested in his doings in South Africa.

Lieut.-General Sir Alfred Gaselee has returned to Peking. He stated that the British will keep their present force there during the winter.

The Indian Contingent, under Sir Alfred Gaselee, it is now placed beyond doubt, were the first to enter Peking, and relieve the Legations. A correspondent writes:—

"Nothing could exceed the admiration with which foreign officers regard our native Indian troops. Their discipline and marching capacity, and splendid fighting qualities have astonished all, especially the German officers, one of whom remarked lately: 'I could scarcely believe my eyes when I saw your Indian soldiers. They are all heroes of the best type, and no wonder you Englishmen are so proud of your Indian Army; you have reason to be. No finer battalion could be found for the purposes of war. I cannot tell you how these Indians have astonished me by their soldierly bearing. What perfect discipline they possess too!' The officer who spoke thus is one whose opinion I consider worth having."

A stained glass window and memorial brass, given by the county of Cornwall in honour of the late Lieut.-General Sir Penn Symons, will be erected in the church of Botus-Fleming, his native place. The dedication ceremony by the bishop of the diocese took place on October 10. Lady Symons and other members of the family were present.

Major-General J. G. Maxwell, D.S.O., has been appointed Military Governor of Pretoria, for the present at least. It is said that the appointment will be confirmed.

Colonels W. M. Campbell and E. B. Standbridge, Royal Artillery, are to be the two Inspector-Generals of Ordnance in India under the reorganisation scheme which has lately been approved, with Lieut.-Colonel J. L. Fixott and Major K. S. Dunsterville as their Deputies. The idea is to provide two strong officers at Rawul Pindie and Poona instead of four weak ones. Under the old arrangement each of the four commands had an Inspector-General of Ordnance with an assistant who was always a junior officer. When the Inspector-General, therefore, was away, no senior officer was there to take charge. By the new arrangement this difficulty will be obviated, whilst the office of Director-General at headquarters will be strengthened by the appointment of a Deputy Assistant in addition to those already existing.

Colonel G. A. W. Forrest, Commandant of the Duke of York's School, Chelsea, completes his term of appointment on Thursday next but retains his appointment on extension for three years.

Colonel H. W. Jackson, C.B., late of the Gordon Highlanders, having been relieved of his duties as Governor-General of the Soudan on the return of Sir Reginald Wingate to Egypt, should have a good chance of succeeding to the vacant appointment of Adjutant-General of the Egyptian Army. Since the resignation of Colonel D. F. Lewis, C.B., he stands next senior to the Sirdar.

Colonel L. W. Christopher, C.B., I.S.C., has been selected to succeed Major-General T. F. Hobday, C.B., as Commissary General-in-Chief of the Indian Army.

Colonel B. Duff, C.I.E., I.S.C., who has been on active service in South Africa since September last, leaves Cape Town on Wednesday next for India to take up his new appointment on the Staff of the Adjutant-General at Army Headquarters.

Colonel A. W. Proudfoot, I.S.C., has been appointed Colonel on the Staff to command at Nussabad.

Colonel E. W. D. Ward, C.B., A.S.C., has more than upheld his reputation in South Africa. We know what was thought of him by Sir George White at Ladysmith. In a letter from Pretoria we read Colonel Ward is indefatigable: "I never met an abler administrative officer. He seems to foresee all difficulties and arrange accordingly. He is now taking steps to create a large supply depot here and is succeeding in putting all on a proper basis in view of his early departure for England when, as doubtless you are aware, he is to be A.Q.M.G. at Headquarters, a position for which he is admirably fitted."

The operations of the Survey of India during the year 1898-99 have reached us. Colonel St. G. C. Gore, R.E., took over control from Major-General C. Strahan, R.E., when that officer retired after thirty-six years' service on September 30 last. A volume of 120 pages records the work of the department, which may be summarised as the surveying on all scales of 95,934 square miles. The Government of India, in a resolution, reviews General Strahan's work, and testifies to its high standard of efficiency. But, strange to say, General Strahan has received no order of any kind in recognition of his long and faithful service. This must surely be due to oversight.

Colonel G. M. Fox, since he returned to Aldershot as temporary Inspector of Gymnasia, has been devoting much attention to the subject of the soldiers' training, and as the result of his labours in this direction, there will be some further reforms in the preliminary stages of the drill routine, in all probability, when the Army returns from South Africa.

Colonel T. Deane, C.B., late Director-General of Army Remounts in India, who has rendered such invaluable service to the Imperial Yeomanry, is on passage home from Cape Town in the Saxon, which sailed on the 3rd inst.

Colonel W. F. Cavaye's appointment as commandant at Mafeking, raises a question of some importance. It will be remembered that the Promotion Board passed this officer over lately, presumably on the plea that his past services did not justify the belief that he was fitted to exercise the duties of command in the field, notwithstanding his high character and excellent record. Within a few months of his supersession Colonel Cavaye was selected for active service in South Africa, and since his arrival there has shown himself an administrator of marked capacity. Several correspondents write to us from South Africa to point out the anomaly. One of them expresses astonishment that "the Promotion Board should have failed to recognise the merit, which is patent to all who have met Colonel Cavaye, one of the ablest and most popular of staff officers."

It may not be generally known that Colonel C. J. Long, R.A., who was dangerously wounded at the battle of Colenso in December last, has made so good a recovery from his wound (complicated as it subsequently was by abscess of the liver, which necessitated a delicate operation), that he has been able to remain in South Africa, and friends and critics alike will be glad to hear that he is again performing his duty on the strength of the Army of Occupation of the new British Colonies. There are many officers, like Colonel Long, who have returned to duty on recovering from their wounds. We may hope that such officers will be amongst the first to return to England when the re-embarkation of the troops commences, as it would hardly be wise to allow them to undergo the heat of another South African summer so soon after their recovery.

The question of the rewards for the expedition to Kumasi is deferred pending the arrival of Sir James Willcocks' final despatches; but Lieut.-Colonel Burroughs and other officers who have been brought so strongly to notice by Colonel Willcocks will be certain to have their services fittingly acknowledged when the time arrives for issuing a list of honours. An officer who has rendered valuable service is Colonel Man-Stuart, C.M.G., who has been doing duty as Commandant at the base. Colonel Man-Stuart is a soldier of wide experience, as he served under "Chinese" Gordon, both in China and the Soudan, and was for some time on the staff of Baker Pasha.

An officer of the Highland Brigade writes to us from Scotland:—

"I should like, with your permission, to remove erroneous impressions which exist with respect to our brigade. It has been stated several times lately that the Highland Brigade has been more or less inactive. Far from this being the case, there is no brigade in the field force, I think I may say, which has done rougher and more continuous work. Lord Roberts knows Gen. Hector MacDonald well, and is too well aware of his splendid qualities to allow him to be inactive. A better soldier and more popular Highland general never led Scottish troops into action. Under him the Highland Brigade would go anywhere. This was felt, so this brigade was entrusted to perform one of the most trying and difficult duties. Lord Roberts knows how well all ranks have acquitted themselves, and how admirably Gen. MacDonald has done his duty. It is most unfair on the Highland regiments that it should be supposed they have been out of the fighting when, as a matter of fact, they have been on the move since April last, discharging one of the most responsible duties, because it was recognised that they and their distinguished chief would do their duty in any circumstances."

Colonel F. H. Plowden, lately commanding the 2nd Batn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry, has lately issued some well thought out "Notes on Skirmishing," a word which, as he says, "is no longer recognised in military parlance." Colonel Plowden holds that "if we can revive the spirit of independent action in our men we shall have gone a long way towards solving the problem of approaching an enemy's position without suffering enormous losses. That such training is easily acquired any commanding officer can find out for himself by a few trials." What Colonel Plowden does is to explain the system introduced by him in the 2nd Batn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry, which, in India, has been well upholding its old traditions as "the best skirmishing regiment in the Army." We have read the little brochure, published by the Civil and Military Gazette Press, Lahore, with much interest.

The sword of honour which is to be presented to Colonel R. G. Kekewich, 1st Batn. Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, by the inhabitants of Kimberley in commemoration of his splendid defence of the town during the siege, is a fine example of the goldsmiths' art. The whole of the scabbard, hilt, and mountings are of 18-carat gold, studded with jewels; the blade is beautifully etched with laurel wreaths and an inscription; the hilt is chased and enamelled in colours, and the scabbard bears enamelled Lancastrian roses, with uncut Kimberley diamond centres. The work was designed and carried out by Mappin and Webb, Limited, under the supervision of Mr. G. H. Bonas, a prominent citizen of the lately beleaguered town.

Colonel F. S. F. Stokes, late Royal Irish Rifles, on vacating his appointment as A.A.G., Mhow District, has reverted to the home establishment.

Colonel A. A. Pearson, 24th Bombay Infantry, has been granted an extension of command until February 7, 1902, when he will complete thirty-two years' service.

The friends of Lieut.-Colonel J. M. A. Retallick, I.S.C., and the officers of the Hong Kong Regiment have been much disturbed by a statement which appeared lately in the Times, that it was in contemplation to disband the regiment. An officer writing to us from China, where the regiment is now actively employed, says:—

"Pray caution friends at home against placing any reliance in the reports current as to our possible disbandment. If ever there had been any suggestion on the subject, the difficulties here have quite settled matters in favour of the retention of the battalion, which has won the admiration of all with whom it has served. Our men are excellent, their one aim being to get at these miserable Chinamen, to whom as the enemies of their beloved Queen-Empress, they would give no quarter after recent developments."

Lieut.-Colonel W. A. Yule, half-pay, late Royal Scots Fusiliers, appointed, as we stated a month ago he was to be, to the command of the 21st Regimental District, is said by several papers to have organised the successful retreat from Dundee to Ladysmith after the battle of Glencoe. There is a mistake here. The officer who conducted the retreat from Dundee was Colonel J. H. Yule, late of the Devonshire Regiment, who is now on half-pay.

Veterinary Lieut.-Colonel F. Smith, A.V.D., has been appointed Inspecting Veterinary Officer, Madras, and will proceed from South Africa to take up his duties as soon as he can be spared from field service.

Major C. S. O. Monck, Coldstream Guards, has been appointed as temporary D.A.A.G. at Aldershot.

Major E. Druitt, R.E., has been appointed an Inspector of Railways under the Board of Trade.

Major H. P. King Salter, 3rd Batn. Rifle Brigade, has been confirmed as a D.A.A.G. on the Indian Establishment, and is posted to Punjab. Capt. C. W. Garraway, 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Regiment, is similarly confirmed for duty in Bombay.

Major C. W. King, A.S.C., has been appointed D.A.A.G. Home District, vice Colonel E. W. D. Ward, C.B., who on return home from South Africa, succeeds Colonel J. T. Skinner, C.B., as A.Q.M.G. Horse Guards.

Major F. W. G. Wadson, 4th Bombay Cavalry, has been appointed an A.A.G. on the Indian Establishment for four years.

The appointment of military attaché at Washington, becomes vacant in consequence of the election of Lieut.-Colonel (Captain) A. H. Lee, R.A., to a seat in the House of Commons. Colonel Lee was our military attaché at Washington, and took up duty in January, 1899, and accompanied the American army in the campaign of Cuba, where he won golden opinions.

Captain N. Kirby, R.E., on reverting to the Home Establishment from India, has been selected for the appointment of Second Assistant Superintendent of Building Works, Gunpowder Factory, Waltham Abbey.

Captain C. A. Fowler, 22nd Punjab Infantry, has been appointed a D.A.A.G. on the Indian establishment for five years.

Captain F. C. Logan Home, 3rd Madras Lancers, succeeds Captain G. H. Arbuthnot as commandant of the Governor's Body Guard, Madras, this month.

Captain H. R. Hardy, the Queen's, from District Inspector of Musketry, Dublin, has been appointed an Assistant-Inspector of Small Arms.

Captain H. S. Wedderburn, 1st Batn. Gordon Highlanders, has been selected for the adjutancy of the new kilted battalion of the Queen's Edinburgh Volunteer Brigade.

Lieutenant Hugh Hole, son of the Dean of Rochester, has resigned his commission in the Cyclist Detachment of the City Imperial Volunteers, and has been made a Magistrate for the Orange River Colony by Major-General Pretymann, the Governor.

Private E. Seymour, of Lord Strathcona's Corps, described as severely wounded at Kruger's Post in Saturday's casualty list, is the third son of the Marquess and Marchioness of Hertford. He joined Lord Strathcona's Corps in Canada in March, has lately been serving in the field since the corps landed.

THE MILITIA EMBODIMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE." SIR,—May I suggest that in cases in which officers commanding Militia units during the present embodiment have displayed exceptional fitness for command, and have been well reported upon, they should be given a short extra term of service, and not be shelved under any stringent rules. In the case of my own battalion the retirement of our present lieutenant-colonel would be a great loss to the Service, and yet he is fast nearing the end of his tether. No one wishes him to go, and he does not want to retire himself; yet, so far as we can gather, he will be moved on only because his extended term is about to fall in. I cannot think it is well to make rules so hard and fast as this. If the chief goes an outsider will be brought in to replace him. The officer has great influence, it is true, and in some respects would be, perhaps, an acquisition. What we all want is to see our dear old chief's term extended for a year or two, and, considering the excellent work done during the embodiment, I think two years' grace might reasonably be given to the best commanding officers.

A SENIOR CAPTAIN.

A CAUTION TO YOUNG MILITIAMEN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE." SIR,—It is hoped that the disbandment of several Irish Militia regiments will give a fillip to recruiting for the Irish Guards. In the same way the return to their homes of the 5th and 6th Batns. Worcestershire Regiment, and 5th and 6th Batns. Manchester Regiment may be expected to produce a flow of volunteers for the new battalions of those regiments. Several men will no doubt decide to remain with the colours. It would be desirable, however, to induce would-be volunteers to join before their units return to their headquarters. Otherwise the money they would be entitled to will get at them no doubt and help them to the best of their ability to "blow the lot at one sitting" at the nearest public house. It is a danger which I should like through your columns to bring to notice, as it may thus meet the eyes of many young soldiers who deserve a better reward for their patriotism than to fall victims to tricks of the unscrupulous.

Army Foreign.

The accounts which are being given by the German papers, and notably the Militär-Zeitung, of the recent Imperial manoeuvres, are the subject of certain significant reflections in the Progrès Militaire. The period of exploration and reconnaissance during which the German troops engaged in most useful work were the prelude, as the French organ remarks, of operations that were essentially methodical, calm, and serious—a character reflected in the comments and narratives of the German military Press. This tone, says the Progrès, is very different from that which has recently been found in the French Press. This year, more than before, the accounts of the manoeuvres have possessed an enthusiastic or even exalted character, manifested in the somewhat dithyrambic style of their authors. No sooner did the armies meet than the scribes hurled them at one another with veritable fury, which, no doubt, and most happily, did not exist in fact. For, if ardour and courage, and audacity, reaching temerity, are often useful in war to make men forget danger and to secure triumph, they are out of place in manoeuvres, where danger does not exist, and where the purpose is not to make war but to study it. The Progrès proceeds to say that in manoeuvres everything must, nevertheless, be conducted as in time of war, and that the means employed must be adapted to the military ends. The commander who should impose upon his men useless fatigue would deserve to be blamed as much as he who marched his troops through a hostile fire which he knew in reality would have annihilated them. Just as this last would be badly justified if he said there was nothing to fear, since the enemy were firing blank, so would the other in saying that it would be useless to safeguard strength, since it was an affair of only a few days, after which there would be time for repose and recuperation. From the tone of our contemporary's article we gather the impression that in its innermost thought the French generals did not conduct the manoeuvres in such a way as to make them the counterpart of war.

The Militär-Wochenblatt, which has always been a rather stern critic of our operations in South Africa, has given an account of the pursuit of De Wet, which affords it the occasion for some further animadversions. It expresses the opinion that Lord Roberts, at the cost of greater interests, employed a disproportionate number of troops in maintaining communications in the district between Pretoria and Mafeking, its view being that these particular operations did not justify the great force kept in that part of the Transvaal. One great object was the capture of De Wet's 1,500 men, but the only success achieved was the relief of Rustenburg and Elands River, a result which was deprived of much of its importance by the fact that the new enterprise of the Boers against Zee-rust had failed. Moreover, says the Wochenblatt, the attempt made at headquarters to keep the operations in hand, while adequate communication with the scenes of operations was not maintained, proved abortive. Again the inability of British officers to conduct operations demanding unity of effort, was once more demonstrated. We are inclined to say that the Wochenblatt has imperfectly realised the conditions which governed these operations and that some of its criticisms are a little wide of the mark.

The pay of Count von Waldersee in China has been fixed at 2,000 marks (£100) a month. As the annual income of a general commanding in the German Army is 21,900 marks (£1,085), Count von Waldersee does not appear to derive any great increase of pay from his new post. His allowances, however, are on a more liberal scale, as he is granted 10,000 marks (£500) a month as table money; but with this he has to provide for the subsistence of fifty officers of his staff, and also to pay for entertainments he may have to give to the superior officers and diplomats of foreign Powers. He will also continue to draw pay at the rate of 36,000 marks (£1,800) a year as a field-marshal on the active list, and also a certain number of rations. Altogether, therefore, the pay and allowances of Count von Waldersee will amount, while he holds his appointment, to 180,000 marks (£9,000) a year.

Captain Count Herbert Herberstein has been appointed Military Attaché to the Austro-Hungarian Embassy in Paris. It will be recollected that for various reasons connected with the Dreyfus case the German, Austrian, and Italian Governments withdrew their Military Attachés from the respective Embassies in Paris. For some time it has been reported that the three Powers mentioned would appoint new Attachés, and Austria is the first to take the step.

There is some agitation in French military educational circles concerning a matter that will not be without interest to those going up for examinations in England. The Minister of Public Instruction has issued a circular in relation to the teaching of French syntax, which it is proposed to simplify, and the French Academy has deputed a committee, consisting of the Vicomte de Vogué and MM. Jules Lemaitre, Gabriel Hanotaux, and Jose Maria de Heredia to investigate the matter. The French military papers have no doubt that General Andre will adopt the reform. The instruction has reference to the gender of certain words such as amour, gens, hymne, and œuvre, and a contemporary strongly objects to the use of the historic word aigle, as an emblem, in anything but the feminine. There is also great objection to such forms as des tedeums, des exvotos, des galloromains, and des timbrepostes, and again to such phrases as les prêtres en bonnets carrés and les gens qui ont ôté leurs chapeaux. We note these facts because sooner or later they are likely to have their effect upon examination papers in this country.

With regard to the remodelling of the military school of St. Cyr, it is pointed out that, out of seventy-three professors and instructors, twenty-two were sent back to their regiments, and twenty-two other officers appointed in their place. The twenty-two who have left the school are reactionaries educated in the clerical schools. The Patrie states that by a decree of the Constitution the Minister of War was bound to select as professors and instructors former pupils at St. Cyr, but that he ignores the decree and intends to select competent men without regard to the place in which they have received their military education. Further, he has dispensed with the services of some twenty officers from the Paris garrison who used to assist in giving instruction. The number of companies in the school will be reduced from eight to six, but there will be no diminution in the number of pupils. The number of horses at the disposal of the cadets will be increased by 100, so that infantry cadets will have the same opportunities of learning to ride as their comrades of the cavalry.

General André continues to introduce changes into the organisation of the French Army that place more and more real power in the hands of the Minister of War. The latest alteration concerns promotion to the rank of general. Hitherto the Minister has had only to sanction in their order the proposals of a commission of general officers. In future he will be able to pick out here and there in the list submitted to him the names he prefers. Thus an officer classed first by his superiors may never be promoted at all. The same system has been introduced into the distribution of Government bursaries for the military schools. The usual objection is made by the militarist journals to the innovation. With the frequent changes of Ministry, and the possibility of favouritism, intrigue and politics will, they say, be introduced into the army, with the inevitable result of disorganisation.

The Popolo Romano and the Avanti have been discussing the question of the military expenditure of Italy, and it appears that in relation to its population the outlay of the country for naval and military purposes is less than that of Austria and Germany, and, in relation to the general budget, less than that of Germany and a little more than that of Austria. But the Popolo Romano argues that the strength of the forces cannot depend only upon financial consideration. Given the geographical situation of Italy and its population, as well as its relation to the other states of the Triple Alliance, our contemporary remarks that no one can say a permanent army of 450,000 men on a war footing, with troops adequate for reinforcement and of the second line, would be an excessive burden. According to statistics given to the Popolo, an army corps costs in France and Germany from twenty to twenty-five million francs; in Austria nineteen and a-half millions; and in Italy only fifteen millions. This being so, the Popolo offers a stout resistance to much further economy, and argues forcibly against those who cite the example of Switzerland. It is manifest that a state like Switzerland, with a comparatively small population and guaranteed by the Powers, is in a very different situation from Italy, and it would be nothing less than absurd, according to the Popolo, to imitate such a country, especially at a time when permanent armies are being still further developed.

This year 297,100 recruits have been ordered to join the colours in the Russian Army. Last year only 291,100 were incorporated, so that the requirements of the armed forces of the Czar have increased by, in round numbers, 6,000 men.

Attention is drawn by the Medical News of New York to the fact that medical men in the United States had no knowledge of or experience with tropical diseases previous to the war of 1898, and strongly urges that the Government should aid the officers of the Army to study tropical diseases under tropical conditions. It points out the institutions which exist at Liverpool and Hamburg, and the fact that adequate means exist, with some development, in the post graduate course in tropical diseases in the Army and Navy Medical School at Washington. The diseases prevalent among soldiers in the Philippines were diarrhoea, dysentery, malarial fevers, typhoid, small-pox, and intestinal affections. Special diseases are also encountered, including cholera, beri-beri, the plague, and leprosy. Yellow fever is also prevalent in Cuba and Porto Rico. Now that the United States are extending their foreign possessions in tropical countries, the Medical News urges that it is the duty of the Government to appropriate more money in order that better opportunities may be offered to the medical officers of the Army.

The Secretary of State for War has approved of a Volunteer force, numbering about 400 of all ranks, being formed at once in Barbados.

NAVY.

Gen. Sir Anthony Blaxland Stransham, late of the Royal Marines, who died at Ealing on Oct. 6, at the age of 94, was the son of the late Lieut.-Col. Anthony Stransham. He was born in Norfolk in 1805, and received his first commission in the Royal Marines in 1823 and retired in 1875 with the rank of General after 52 years' service. At the time of his death Sir Anthony Stransham was the senior officer of the Royal Marine Forces. His first active service with the Royal Marines was at the capture of Syra, then held by pirates, in 1827, and in the same year he took part in the battle of Navarino. He was ordered to China in 1839, and participated in every action of importance in the campaign of 1840-41. At the attack on Chuenpee he served as Adjutant and Brigade Major, and he commanded the Royal Marines at the storming of the Whampoo batteries, at the reduction of Macao Fort, which he garrisoned, and at the capture of several small forts on March 17, 1841. In the last-mentioned affair he was severely wounded by an explosion, and, for his gallantry, was mentioned in despatches and received the brevet rank of Major on obtaining his company. During the war with Russia Sir Anthony served with the combined expedition to the Baltic, from March to July, 1854. He was Inspector-General of the Corps of Royal Marines from 1862 to 1867, in which year he was created a Knight Commander of the Bath. He received the Grand Cross of the Order in 1897, on the commemoration of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee. When still a Lieutenant in the Royal Marines Sir Anthony, then serving in the Calliope, frigate, on the South American Station, travelled 1,300 miles to the interior of Chile, twice crossing the Cordilleras. He married, in 1843, the daughter of Mr. Harvey Combe, of the Madras Civil Service, who died in 1885.

Major-Gen. Robert William Bland-Hunt, who died at Eaton Lodge, Hove, Sussex, on the 3rd inst., at the age of 69, entered the Royal Marines in 1848, and retired after 37 years' service with the rank of Major-General. At the outbreak of the Crimean War General (then Lieut.) Bland-Hunt was serving in the Cumberland in the Baltic, and landed with the battalion of Royal Marines, which, in conjunction with the French troops under Gen. Baraquay D'Hilliers, took part in the bombardment and capture of the forts at Bomarsund. In 1855 and 1856, until the declaration of peace, he served in the Black Sea and Crimea in the floating battery Meteor. His appointment, in 1864, as aide-de-camp and private secretary to Mr. Eyre, the Governor of Jamaica, took place at a time when affairs were much disturbed in that colony, and when the rebellion broke out he was selected for the command of the Militia and Volunteers of Jamaica. For his services in this capacity he received the thanks of the Legislative Council and the House of Assembly and was mentioned in despatches by the Governor and Brigadier Nelson, commanding the troops. Two years afterwards he was detached to British Honduras to assist and train the militia of that colony and, with the rank of Colonel-Commandant, served during the disturbances with the hostile Indians of Yuccatan and Guatemala, for which he was again mentioned in despatches and received the thanks of the Colonial authorities and the Brevet of Major. His last foreign service was during the Zulu War of 1879, when he was selected to command the special battalion of Royal Marines sent to South Africa. From 1880 till his retirement in 1885 Gen. Bland-Hunt was an aide-de-camp to the Queen.

Capt. the Hon. Francis George Crofton, R.N., died on Oct. 7, at Harbour House, Kingstown, aged 62. He was a son of the second Lord Crofton, and joined the Navy in 1852. He served in the Baltic during 1854-55 in the Neptune and Pembroke, and received the Baltic medal. In 1857 he was engaged in the destruction of the Fatshan flotilla of war junks, receiving the China medal and the Fatshan clasp. As Sub-Lieut. he was at the capture of Canton in December, 1857, being promoted for his services. In 1873 he became a Commander, and a Captain in 1880. Capt. Crofton, who had been harbour-master at Kingstown since 1878, was placed on the retired list in 1882. He was twice married, first in 1864 to Gertrude Caroline, daughter of Col. E. S. Bayley, and widow of Mr. John Talbot, of Mount Talbot, Roscommon; and secondly, in 1878, to Emily Augusta, daughter of Lieut.-Col. Montgomery Caulfield, of Monkston, county Dublin.

Col. Henry George Johnstone Davies, R.M.L.I. (retired), died at Hythe on Oct. 5. He became 2nd Lieut. 1841; Lieut. 1846; Captain 1854; Major 1868; Lieut.-Colonel 1872; and retired with the rank of Colonel the following year.

Fleet-Engineer George Boyd, R.N., died at Takapua, near Auckland, N.Z., on Aug. 23 last. He became Assistant-Engineer 1859; Engineer 1867; Chief Engineer 1876; Fleet Engineer 1886; and retired in that rank 1889. His last service was in the Nelson flagship on the Australian Station, 1884-8, and after she was paid off he retired and settled in New Zealand.

ARMY.

Major-Gen. S. Gatt, C.M.G.—This officer died at Malta, Sept. 30, at the very advanced age of 92 years. He entered the Royal Malta Fencible Regiment (now the Royal Malta Artillery) on its formation as Ensign in the year 1825; became Lieut. and Adjutant in 1837; Captain in 1847; Brevet-Major and Major in 1858; Lieut.-Colonel in 1861; Colonel in 1866; and retired with the honorary rank of Major-General in September 1877, after 52 years' service. He was created a C.M.G. in 1883. During the Crimean War he held the following appointments at Malta: Barrack Master, Brigade Major and Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General. His funeral took place with full military honours at the Addolorata Cemetery on Monday, Oct. 1. A firing party of the Royal Malta Artillery headed the procession, followed by the bands of the corps, of the 3rd Batn. Lancashire Fusiliers and the Royal Malta Regiment (Militia), while after the corpse came escorts from the Royal Garrison Artillery, the Royal Malta Artillery, the Lancashire Fusiliers, and the Royal Malta Regiment. A salute of 11 minute guns was fired from the saluting battery, while three blank volleys were fired over the grave of the deceased, the trumpeters sounding the "Last Post." The pall-bearers were Major-Gen. O'Callaghan, C.R.A., Col. Spencer, D.A.G., Col. Hughes Hallett, A.A.G., Col. Nugent, C.B., A.A.G., Surg.-Lieut.-Col. Manché, Lieut.-Col. Marquis De Piro, C.M.G. The following officers attended the funeral:—His Excellency Gen. Lord Congleton, C.B., and Staff, Col. Cameron, C.R.E.; Col. Bernard, Royal Malta Artillery; Col. Gill, R.E.; Major Alexander, R.A.; Judge Ganado, Judge Pullicino, Marquis Testaferata Ollivier, Hon. R. Micallef, Mons. Saxe, Russian Consul; Mr. Smith, Spanish Consul; the whole of the officers Royal Malta Artillery, and representatives from all the regiments in garrison. Major Biancardi, A.D.C., represented his Excellency Gen. Sir Francis Grenfell, on leave in England. Wreaths were sent by H.E. Gen. Sir F. Grenfell, Lord Congleton, Major-Gen. and Mrs. O'Callaghan, Col. and Mrs. Berwick, Major and Mrs. Briffa, Capt. and Mrs. Enriquez, Mrs. Smith, Capt. and Mrs. Denaro, Capt. and Mrs. Vella, Capt. and Mrs. Ganado, Mrs. Montanaro, the officers Royal Malta Artillery, Royal Garrison Artillery, Royal Malta Regiment, and many others.

Major-Gen. Fairfax Charles Hassard, C.B., Colonel, retired list, R.E., died at Hoddesdon, Herts, on the 5th inst., aged 78. He joined the Army June 20, 1840; became Colonel Aug. 3, 1868; and retired with the hon. rank of Major-General March 15, 1882. He served in the Crimean campaign, from November, 1854, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol, sortie of May 4, and expedition to Kerch and Yenikale (medal with clasp, Brevet of Major, Sardinian and Turkish medals, and 5th Class of the Medjidie). Served as commanding R.E. in the Kaffir War of 1877-78; and in the Zulu War, 1879 (medal with clasp).

Col. Harrington A. Trevelyan, retired, late 7th Hussars, died at Barton State, Fresno, California, on the 29th ult. Col. Trevelyan, who was the son of the late Gen. W. Trevelyan, of Glenfarg, Perthshire, served in the Eastern Campaign of 1854, and rode in the Balaclava Charge with the 11th Hussars. He was also present at the Alma and at the siege of Sebastopol. For his services he received the medal with three clasps, the 5th class of the Medjidie, and the Turkish medal. Col. Trevelyan commanded the 7th Hussars from 1868 to 1871, when he retired by sale of his commission.

Col. Jocelyn Pickard-Cambridge, retired list, Indian Staff Corps, died at Bloxworth House, Dorset, on the 5th inst., aged 73. Col. Pickard-Cambridge joined the Army June 12, 1846; became Captain June 12, 1861; Major June 12, 1866; Lieut.-Colonel June 12, 1872; and Colonel Nov. 11, 1876.

Col. Thomas Henry Stoton, retired list, Indian Staff Corps, died at Eynsham, near Oxford, on the 6th inst., in his 65th year, entered the Indian Army in 1856. He became Captain in 1863; Lieut.-Colonel in 1882; and retired in 1883 with the rank of Colonel.

Lieut.-Col. George Kettlewell, late Bengal Army, who died on Sept. 17, entered the Bengal Horse Artillery in December, 1854; was through the Mutiny, and received medal with three clasps; Delhi, Relief of Lucknow, and Lucknow; served in China War of 1860 (medal and two clasps); Peking and Taku Forts; afterwards served with Horse Artillery at Meerut up to 1867; was in veterinary charge of Home Stud, Kernal, till 1867; in Army Remount Department till 1880; appointed as Professor of Lahore Veterinary College in 1881, and made Principal thereof till 1890; appointed Inspecting Veterinary Officer of Madras Army in April, 1891; retired under age clause, Feb. 17, 1895.

Major the Hon. Denis Lawless, retired list, late Rifle Brigade, died at Blackrock, co. Dublin, on the 5th inst. Born in 1854, the third son of Baron Cloncurry, he joined the Army Feb. 11, 1875; became Captain March 14, 1883; and Major Nov. 23, 1892.

Capt. Henry Topham Clements, late 14th Hussars, of Belmont, East Hoathly, Sussex, died at Buxton from the effects of an accident on the 8th inst., aged 69. On Sept. 29 he was returning to his hotel from a concert in the Pavilion at Buxton when his foot caught in the kerb-stone, and in his fall he sustained injuries to his spine which proved fatal. Capt. Clements, who was the fourth son of the late Rev. J. C. Clements, of Lower Clapton, served as Adjutant of the 14th Light Dragoons in the expedition to Persia in 1857, and with the Central India Field Force under Lord Strathnairn throughout the Indian Mutiny. He married in 1887 Sophia, daughter of Prebendary Borradaile, of Heston, Sussex.

Capt. Herbert Willshire, Reserve of Officers, late 20th Hussars, attached to 5th Mounted Infantry, Lincoln Company, was killed in action about 18 miles south-east of Lindley on the 8th inst., whilst serving with a patrol. He joined the Army Dec. 11, 1886; became Captain March 10, 1895; he served in the Egyptian War of 1882, and was present in the engagement at Mahsma, in the two actions of Kassassin, at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, and the action of Cairo (medal with clasp and Khedive's star); served in the operations in the Soudan in 1889, including the engagement at Tosti (medal).

Lieut. Cunliffe Hamilton Martin, Indian Staff Corps (4th Bengal Lancers), died in India last week, of enteric fever, contracted at the end of a year's famine relief work. The son of Col. Cunliffe Martin, C.B., he was born Aug. 5, 1875; joined the Bedfordshire Regiment, March 25, 1896; and joined the Staff Corps, Oct. 7, 1897.

2nd Lieut. Francis Gerard Stapleton Cotton, R.E., was killed by an explosion, on the 6th inst., at Pienars River camp. Born May 16, 1878, he joined the Army Sept. 23, 1897.

FOREIGN.

Rear-Admiral Montgomery Sicard, of the United States Navy, whose death is reported, was born in New York City in 1836. He entered the Naval Academy at Annapolis in 1851, reaching the rank of Master in 1858 and receiving his commission as Lieut. in 1860. When the Civil War broke out in the following year he served with the blockading squadron in the Western Gulf of Mexico, assisted in the destruction of the Confederate flotilla and transports in April, 1862, and continued to work up the Mississippi river with the fleet that finally succeeded a year later in co-operating with the army and capturing Vicksburg. His active service continued during the whole of the war, which, when ended, left him with the rank of Lieut.-commander. He was afterwards appointed a professor in the Naval Academy, and reached Captain's rank in 1881. From this time he devoted his attention mainly to the study of ordnance, upon which he became and remained an authority, and he acted as chief of this bureau in the Navy Department from 1881 to 1890, during the period that the United States was carrying on the work of reconstructing its Navy throughout. He became Commodore in 1894, and was appointed to the command of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, reaching his final rank as Rear-Admiral, and with it the command of the North Atlantic Squadron, in 1897, just before the outbreak of the war with Spain. His health had so far failed as to make further active service impossible, and at the instance of the President he was transferred to Washington, where he became the head of the Board of Strategy which had the direction of naval movements in Cuban waters. With few opportunities for conspicuous service, Admiral Sicard was an able and distinguished officer and did his full part in the development of the United States Navy.

A CENTRAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR.—My attention has just been drawn to a letter from Lady Hope on page 938 in THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE of Sept. 22, in which the "pressing need of a Central Soldiers Hotel or Home" is urged upon your readers. I think that letter should not be allowed to pass unnoticed, as the very place here described was opened in 1890 by the late Miss Daniell in James Street, Buckingham Gate; and it has been carried on ever since most successfully as "a place of lodging, meals, and reception at the lowest possible cost," and "it is not a denominational home." So successful has it been as an hotel that we have been twice obliged to add to the accommodation, and we now have fifty cubicles and three married quarters. Without encumbering your space with details, I may say that during the first six months of this year the single beds were occupied 3,069 times, and the married quarters 167 times. The business receipts during the same period verged upon £1,000. Since its foundation, the home has been used by men from practically every regiment in the British Army, Hausas from West Africa, Indian troops, many men of the West Indian Regiment, various Colonial troops from South Africa, notably the Canadians, who were installed there by the High Commissioner for Canada, and Thorneycroft's Horse; by Marines, red and blue, and some bluejackets; also by multitudes of soldiers on their discharge. Perhaps I should add that within a few hundred yards another soldiers' hotel has just been established in this very "central" neighbourhood.

KATE MANSON,

Hon. Lady Superintendent of Miss Daniell's Soldiers' Homes.

Mission Hall and Soldiers' Home, Aldershot,

ONE effect of the break-up of double-battalion Militia regiments has been to create a number of vacancies for honorary colonels. At present the honorary colonel is shown at the head of both battalions. This arrangement cannot, however, be intended as a permanency. As vacancies occur in the honorary colonelcies, officers will be appointed under the same rules as apply in other cases.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, Oct. 6.

The transport Aurania, with the City Imperial Volunteers on board, left Cape Town on Saturday evening, at half-past five o'clock, amid a scene of intense enthusiasm. The mayor and town councillors, together with the members of the reception committee, went on board the vessel, and shortly afterwards Sir Alfred Milner, accompanied by Col. Mackinnon and his staff, arrived. They were received by a guard of honour. His Excellency, having boarded the transport, made a short speech thanking the Volunteers on behalf of South Africa for the services they had rendered to the Empire. Their reception there, he added, was nothing compared to the one they would get on arriving in England. He concluded by wishing all the men God-speed. When the vessel unmoored a band on the quay played "Auld Lang Syne." The Volunteers responded by singing "God Save the Queen." All the other transports in the bay sounded their sirens and saluted the Aurania as she steamed past.

A telegram from Lord Roberts, received at the War Office, stated that Lord Methuen arrived at Rustenburg on the 4th inst. He had two engagements on Sept. 28 with a Boer force, in which his casualties were two killed and three wounded. The Boers lost seven killed and 14 taken prisoners. The number of Boers captured and surrendering was put down by Lord Roberts at nearly 16,000. There was a skirmish on Thursday near Bulfontein between a British detachment, under Capt. Henty, of the London Irish Volunteers, and a party of Boers. The British casualties were six wounded; the Boers are reported to have suffered heavily.

Sir Redvers Buller left Lydenburg this morning for the south. His departure was made the occasion for a striking demonstration of farewell on the part of the troops, who lined both sides of the road from the bridge outside the town for about a mile. When the General with his staff reached the bridge, the band of the Gordons formed in front and played him out of the lines. The troops lining the road cheered lustily as Sir R. Buller passed. He constantly acknowledged the cheers of the men. Gen. Lyttelton bade Gen. Buller good-bye outside the town.

Sunday, Oct. 7.

Lord Roberts telegraphed from Pretoria during the afternoon, reporting the capture, by a mounted infantry patrol near Frankfort yesterday of 12 Boers, three of whom confessed to having cut the telegraph line between Frankfort and Heilbron. Edwards, the commandant of a body of the enemy's scouts who had been very active for some months past, surrendered, with six of his men, at Krugersdorp yesterday. He confirmed the report, received from many sources, that the Boers are now broken up into many parties without much fight in them. Major-Gen. Barton took seven Boer prisoners on 5th inst. near Krugersdorp. He had three men wounded. Lieut.-Gen. Kelly-Kenny reported that an armed Boer had been brought in a prisoner by two farmer burghers—an excellent sign that the people are getting tired of the war. The engine of a train conveying men of the Naval Brigade and Coldstream Guards was derailed on the 5th inst., near Balmoral, by the explosion of a dynamite cartridge, but nobody was injured.

The Natal Volunteers arrived at Maritzburg yesterday morning, and met with a cordial reception.

Lord Roberts telegraphed later that he had just bade good-bye to Capt. Bearcroft and the Naval Brigade. They were leaving that night for Cape Town, carrying with them the thanks and good wishes of the Army in South Africa for the able assistance they have afforded throughout the war.

Monday, Oct. 8.

Lord Roberts visited Daspoort, where the Australians and Rhodesians are encamped. He thanked the men for the devotion and bravery they had displayed throughout the war, more especially for their fine defence of Elands River.

Tuesday, Oct. 9.

Lord Roberts telegraphed at 10.45 p.m.:—"Bruce Hamilton reports that on the 4th a patrol came in contact with a party of Boers about eighteen miles south-east of Lindley. Capt. Wiltshire, Reserve of Officers, attached 5th Mounted Infantry Lincoln Company, was killed, and one man wounded and missing. Lieut. Cotton, R.E., and 20705 Corpl. D. H. Wilkinson were killed by an explosion on Oct. 6 at Pienars River Camp."

Wednesday, Oct. 10.

Wepener, Rouxville, and Ficksburg, said to be in the hands of Boer parties who appear to have been driven south by the British columns operating further north. Measures are being taken to surround them and the Basutoland border is strongly guarded.

A telegram from Vredefort Road, yesterday, says that the Colonial Division and Col. De Lisle's force have had a three days' fight with the Boers under De Wet from last Friday to Sunday. They dislodged and dispersed the enemy, who are retreating in a demoralised condition. De Wet had five guns and about 1,000 men. The British casualties are very slight. The action took place in a hilly region near Vredefort.

Thursday, Oct. 11.

Rouxville, Wepener, and Dewetsdorp have been reoccupied by British troops. A flying column of Boers has been seen moving from Abraham's Kraal in the direction of Poplar Grove. Their destination was believed to be Petrusburg.

Friday, Oct. 12.

Lord Roberts telegraphs from Pretoria, Oct. 10, 4.50 p.m.:—

"An unfortunate accident happened yesterday at Kaapmuiden owing to a train upsetting on the diversion over the Kaap River. Three men were killed, 15 injured, and Lieut. C. Hawkes had his leg broken, all belonging to the 66th Battery, Royal Field Artillery. About 40 animals were killed or badly injured. An engine with truck, conveying two Royal Engineer officers and Captain G. Paget, Rifle Brigade, and 18 men of the Vlakkfontein garrison, proceeded along the line yesterday to ascertain nature of damage during the previous night. The Boers were lying in wait and opened fire on the party. On hearing of the attack Capt. A. D. Stewart, Rifle Brigade, went with 40 men in support. The casualties, I regret to say, were very heavy; Capt. Stewart and a private of the Rifle Brigade were killed, and the following were wounded:—Capt. Paget, dangerously, and five men, attached Royal Engineers; Lieut. H. Stubbs, severely. Taken prisoners: Lieut. Sewell, Royal Engineers, and ten men of Rifle Brigade. Charles Knox reports from Heilbron that in an engaged yesterday near that place four Boers were wounded and three taken prisoners. Our casualties nil. The grazing guard near Lydenburg was attacked yesterday, and one man, 5th Lancers, was killed. A number of prisoners have been captured near this lately, and with the men who have surrendered more than 500 will shortly be despatched to Cape Town about half of whom will be sent to Ceylon or St. Helena. Barton, who is clearing the country north of Krugersdorp, reports an engagement with the Boers yesterday, when the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, admirably led by Sir Robert Coleton, behaved very well. Several dead Boers were left on the ground and three prisoners were taken. Our casualties:—Royal Welsh Fusiliers.—Killed: 2nd Lieut. J. R. Williams-Ellis. Wounded: Capt. Gabbett, dangerously, head; 2nd Lieut. H. Kyrke, severely, head; and 11 men. Royal Scots Fusiliers.—Capt. H. M. Trenchard, dangerously, chest. De Lisle's Mounted Infantry and a portion of the Colonial Division have been engaged for the last two or three days with a body of the enemy under De Wet near Reitsburg, and succeeded in driving them north of the Vaal near Venterskroon. De Wet has been making frequent speeches to the burghers lately and assuring them that on Oct. 10 the war would be stopped by European Powers. Yesterday was the anniversary of the ultimatum, to-day is Kruger's 75th birthday, and it will be a year to-morrow since the first shot was fired. These dates the Boers have been looking forward to with considerable interest in the hope that something would intervene to end the war in their favour. I trust they will now realise how futile are their expectations."

OFFICERING THE MILITIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—A large number of young men of good position will shortly be returning to England who have served in the ranks of the Imperial Yeomanry. May I suggest that it would be well for the War Office to take steps to secure some of them as captains of Militia. In my own county I know many of the young men personally, and I have been able to secure at least two of them, and they will be gazetted to companies as vacancies occur. I hope to record the names of others. These young men are members of the best families, but, being younger sons, cannot afford the expense of commissions in the Yeomanry, so rather than not see service they went out as troopers. This shows them to be made of the right stuff. Other counties are bigger than ours, and it may be more difficult for Militia commanding officers to be in touch with everybody, but it seems to me that the Yeomanry commandants would be able to give much useful information. The experience gained in South Africa with the Imperial Yeomanry cannot but have been an excellent preparation, and no doubt many of those who have gone through the war would be only too ready to associate themselves with the Militia if it were shown that the way would be made easy for them. The force will probably lose many good officers when the embodiment is over. Here is a means whereby their places might be taken by qualified men, who would join with a campaign to their credit.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The 22nd, 50th, and 70th Batteries R.F.A., and No. 3 Mountain Battery are under orders of readiness to leave India during the winter for England.

The Government of India have agreed to the 60 artillery officers hitherto detained in India now proceeding to their respective destinations.

All horse and field batteries in India are to be equipped with the spade brake as quickly as possible. The tray system of ammunition supply is also to be introduced forthwith.

Early arrangements are to be made for the despatch from India of 100 additional non-commissioned officers asked for by the War Office. They will be replaced from home by the same number of gunners.

Field howitzers for India will in future be of the pattern adopted for the home service. The formation of two batteries of 5.4 weapons for India will be proceeded with at once.

The following Militia Artillery regiments have been disembodied, viz., South-East of Scotland, Edinburgh, Fife, Forfar, Lancashire, Tipperary, Waterford, West of Scotland, Wicklow, Sligo, Londonderry, Cornwall and Devon Miners, Durham, Glamorgan, Northumberland, Pembroke, Royal Cardigan, Carmarthen.

Major H. Montgomery Campbell, R.F.A., has passed in India the tactical examination qualifying for the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The detachment at the Victoria and Albert Museum, South Kensington, will be withdrawn on Nov. 1.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—The detachment of the 1st Batn. at Chelsea will be moved to Wellington Barracks on Monday next, when the Royal Guards Reserve Regiment, commanded by Col. Broadwood, proceeds to the Tower of London.

Coldstream Guards.—Orderly-room Sergt. Brotherton has been selected for a clerkship in the Colonial Secretary's office, Falkland Islands, with the additional duty of Instructor of the Volunteers.

Irish Guards.—The Queen has approved of the following patterns of uniform for officers and men of the Irish Guards:—Dress of officers.—As for other regiments of the Brigade of Foot Guards, with the following exceptions:—Plume.—St. Patrick's blue, cut feather, 6 ins. high; to be worn on the right side of the bearskin. Tunic.—A shamrock in silver embroidery at each end of the collar; 10 buttons in front, arranged from the top in groups of four, four, and two; four bars of embroidery on skirt and sleeve flaps, grouped towards the centre. Forage cap.—The band will be of black mohair braid. Field cap.—Round cap with projecting soft crown, piped at the edge with green, band of green cloth. Red and blue frocks.—Eight buttons in front arranged in fours, and four small buttons grouped at the cuff. Sword hilt.—The device will be the Order of St. Patrick. Mess waistcoat.—Four buttons in front. Regimental staff.—The plume for quartermasters will be St. Patrick's blue, upright swan feather. Horse furniture.—Buckles rectangular, with the cross of St. Patrick at the ends. Clothing of men.—As for officers, with the following exceptions:—Plume.—brush; tunic—on the shoulder strap the Star of the Order of St. Patrick in embroidery or metal, as for other regiments of Foot Guards; forage cap—worn by warrant officers and staff-sergeants only. Major Hamilton has been selected for the position of second in command of the 1st Batn. Capt. FitzClarence sailed from Cape Town on the 27th ult. in the Buluwayo for England to join, on appointment, from the Royal Fusiliers.

Bufs (3rd).—Lieut. Greatwood, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town in the Buluwayo on the 27th ult., invalided.

Norfolk Regiment (9th).—Lieut. Done, 2nd Batn., sailed from Cape Town in the Buluwayo on the 27th ult., invalided.

Lincolnshire Regiment (10th).—Lieut. Thatchell, 1st Batn., sailed for Cape Town in the Saxon on the 3rd inst.

Devonshire Regiment (11th).—"Soldier" writes:—"Is it not time that something was done to recognise the gallantry displayed by the Devonshire Regiment during the siege of Ladysmith? This ever trustworthy old corps distinguished itself on more than one occasion, but more particularly on Jan. 6, during the attack on Wagon Hill. Here about four companies more than held their own against overwhelming odds, but with terrible loss, and it is doubtful if the flag would have continued to float over Ladysmith had the attack on this position been successful. The sturdy Devon lads, however, never wavered, and the day was ours. I do not wish to infer that the Devons did more than the other regiments who took part in the defence of Ladysmith, but they at least did as much to gain distinction as any. Then, how is it, Sir, that not a single Victoria Cross has yet been awarded to this corps, while they are almost as common as blackberries in a certain other corps? It is not because there have been no recommendations, as I have good grounds for knowing that Sergeant Palmer was recommended for gallantly leading his company. Capt. Lafone and Lieut. Masterson, too, were recommended, the former for leading his company after being wounded (afterwards receiving a fatal wound), the latter for going across the fire-swept zone for reinforcements. This gallant deed was performed not more than forty yards from the enemy, and though 'knocked over' time after time he still continued his journey and delivered his message, and fell wounded in 11 places. Surely, Sir, such pluck and devotion to duty deserve to be recognised, and the Devonshire men are anxious to know what is being done."

Capt. Luxmore, 1st Batn., was dangerously wounded in action at Kruger's Post on the 1st inst., 2nd Lieut. Cuming being killed.

Royal Irish Regiment (18th).—The 2nd Batn. is under orders of readiness to leave India during the winter for Ceylon.

Royal Scots Fusiliers (21st).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. and details moved on Saturday last from Barry to Glasgow.

Cheshire Regiment (22nd).—Capt. Dunn Gardner, 4th (Militia) Batn., is on passage home from the Cape, in the Buluwayo.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—Capt. Morgan has been appointed Commandant and Adjutant of the Convalescent Depot, Southampton.

King's Own Scottish Borderers (25th).—Major Reid, 2nd Batn., has been appointed officiating A.A.G. Madras command. Lieut. Hannay, 1st Batn., sailed from Cape Town on the 27th ult. in the Buluwayo, invalided.

Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (32nd) is under orders of readiness to leave India during the winter for the Mediterranean.

South Staffordshire Regiment (38th).—Brevet Lieut.-Col. Hore, who took part in the defence of Mafeking, and afterwards distinguished himself at Elands River, was on Saturday accorded an enthusiastic welcome at Leamington on the occasion of his arrival to join his wife and her father, Gen. Radcliffe. Col. Hore reached Leamington at 3.15, and was met at the station by the Mayor and members of the Corporation. He met with a hearty reception outside the station. A procession was formed and proceeded to the Town Hall, where the Mayoress gave an "at home" in the officer's honour. He was presented with an address of congratulation, the band playing "See the Conquering Hero Comes." In reply, Col. Hore said it had been his fortune to be in a place where he had opportunities, and he had had good luck. He wished to pay a tribute to those gallant Colonial troops, Rhodesians, New South Wales, Queenslanders, and West Australians, without whose gallantry and co-operation he could not have achieved the success he had. He later addressed a large crowd from the balcony, and subsequently drove, amid deafening cheers, with Mrs. Hore to Gen. Radcliffe's residence.

Black Watch (42nd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. moved on Tuesday from Barry Links to Montrose.

Major Gilstrap, 3rd (Militia) Batn., commanding the guard at Ballater, had the honour of being included in the Royal dinner party at Balmoral on the 4th inst. Lieuts. Graham Murray and MacKenzie Murray dined at the Castle, and were received by the Queen in the drawing-room afterwards.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (43rd).—The 3rd Militia Batn. and details moved on the 4th inst. from Kilworth to Buttevant, and will be disembodied on Nov. 1.

Sherwood Foresters (45th).—Lieut. Watson sailed from Cape Town for England in the Saxon on the 3rd inst.

Royal West Kent Regiment (50th) is under orders of readiness to leave Aden for England during the winter.

Shropshire Light Infantry (53rd) are under orders of readiness to leave India for Aden during the winter.

Essex Regiment (56th) is under orders of readiness to return home from India during the winter.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—The 5th (Militia) Batn. moved, on the 4th inst., from Buttevant to Nenagh. The Pietermaritzburg correspondent of the Daily Mail says a loyal Dutchman, named Hatting, residing near Frere, has made a graceful offer to Lord and Lady Roberts. The remains of their son, Lieut. Roberts, who fell at Colenso, lie on this man's farm, and he offers to make over to the parents of the deceased officer two acres of land round the grave.

Wiltshire Regiment (62nd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. and details moved on the 1st inst. from Kilworth to Cork.

Durham Light Infantry (68th).—Capt. Briggs, 3rd (Militia) Batn., left Cape Town on the 3rd inst. in the Saxon for England.

Highland Light Infantry (71st).—2nd Lieut. Campbell sailed from Cape Town for England in the Buluwayo on the 27th ult.

Shropshire Light Infantry (85th).—The 4th (Militia) Batn. moved on the 3rd inst. from Kilworth to Waterford, and details from Kilworth to Tipperary. It will be disembodied on Nov. 1.

Royal Irish Rifles (86th).—Lieut. Rodney and 2nd Lieut. Bowen-Colthurst are on passage home from Cape Town in the Buluwayo, which sailed on the 27th ult.

Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (91st).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. and details moved on the 3rd inst. from Finner to Belfast.

Wiltshire Regiment (99th).—Although the 2nd battalion has unluckily been out of all the big historic battles of the South African War, it has been seven times engaged in severe fighting—viz., at Rensburg, Arundel, Colesberg, Bethlehem, Fouriesburg, Elands Kop, and Hamman's Kraal, and has also made some fine forced marches. Major-Gen. Paget recently addressed it in the following terms:—"I have come down here to express to you, before you leave my command, my thanks for the gallant way the regiment has behaved. You experienced the other day at Hamman's Kraal bush-fighting which few troops out here have seen. Your steady advance through thick bush, without halting, and under a heavy fire, was most admirable. Gen. Clements and myself are both anxious to keep so fine a regiment, but, of course, he has the prior claim to your services, and it is, therefore, with much regret that I have to part from you. Major Kirkwood, I shall have much pleasure in mentioning your gallant battalion in my despatches to Lord Roberts."

Royal Munster Fusiliers (104th) are under orders of readiness to return home from India during the winter.

Durham Light Infantry (106th) has been placed under orders of readiness to return home from Burma during the winter. Major Saunders has passed in India the tactical examination qualifying for the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

Royal Sussex Regiment (107th), is under orders of readiness to return home from India during the winter.

HOW WE ESCAPED FROM PRETORIA.

Capt. Aylmer Haldane, Gordon Highlanders, recently told in Blackwood the story of "How we Escaped from Pretoria"—his companion in the exploit being Lieut. Le Mesurier. The narrative attracted great notice in its serial form, and we are very glad to welcome it in a permanent shape (Blackwood). We have rarely read anything so dramatic in substance or so graphic in treatment. The reader follows the brilliant story with breathless interest from the first page to the last. The persistent fortitude with which these gallant men, and others, added to their discomforts and accepted danger in order that sooner or later they might strike a blow for freedom excites the utmost admiration. Courage, coolness, fertility of resource, and all the qualities that go to the making of soldiers are disclosed in these pages. Disappointment did not quell the spirit of the captives. When their tunnel failed through inundation, they turned to another device. They had hoped to escape as Latude escaped from the Bastille, but were driven to devices more modern.

They had made trap doors, and collected tools, and the electric light wires were to be cut. Again there was a mischance, and their device being now disclosed, they were compelled to hide beneath the floor, and all the talent of the Vidocqs and Le Coqs ("with apologies for the comparison") of Pretoria failed to scent the lair. At length came the happy day of freedom. Mr. Churchill had got away, and precautions were redoubled, but the crowded state of the Model School making necessary a change of quarters for the captives afforded the chance. We shall not recount the incidents of the glorious dash for freedom which brought the two officers, after many perils and hardships to Lorenzo Marques. They make a splendid story of courageous enterprise, full of the keenest interest, which no one should fail to read.

SPORT IN BURMA AND ASSAM.

Col. F. T. Pollok and Mr. W. H. Thom, Assistant Superintendent of Police in Burma, have written together, under the title of Wild Sports in Burma and Assam, what is really a perfect manual and encyclopædia for the sportsman in those countries (Hurst and Blackett). An opinion prevailed that Burma was a poor sporting country, but the truth is that ignorance of the language, the endless savannahs covered with long elephant grass, and the difficulty of procuring elephants, made it impossible for early sportsmen to discover the real resources of the country. It needed the patient enterprise of Col. Pollok, who was really the pioneer of sport in Lower Burma, to discover what those resources were. It is rather disappointing to be told, however, that to be a successful hunter elephants are requisite, but seldom procurable. Col. Pollok himself was exceptionally favoured, for he had elephants of his own, and experienced no difficulty in procuring others. It was in July, 1853, that he attacked Lower Burma. He used to converse with the men and women in the villages, and he spared no expense, with the result that he was able to amass a vast amount of information, which was published, in a volume entitled Sport in British Burma, in 1879. This book is the staple of the first half of the volume we have before us, although it has been newly written, and is thoroughly up-to-date. Rich people, as the author says, might do much worse than go to the East for a two years' shooting trip. They could get pig-sticking in Tirhoot; elephant, gaur, and tsine shooting in Upper Burma; tiger and rhinoceros in Assam, and good all-round shooting in Lower Burma. Col. Pollok recommends a battery consisting of a Westley-Richards double hammerless Mannlicher, a Paradox of either 8 or 10 bore, a double No. 12 rifle or an Express .577 for deer and soft-skinned animals, and a 12 smooth-bore, carrying either ball or shot. The mammalia in Lower Burma are two varieties of elephants, two of rhinoceros, gaur, tsine or wild cattle, buffaloes, sambar, brow-antlered deer, hog deer, barking deer, wild pig, serow, tigers, panthers, leopards, bears, wild dogs, many kinds of wild cat, and some jackals, while the tapir and mouse deer are found in the Tenasserim Province, and small game are in great variety. The best places are the Arrakan range, Mendoon, 50 miles west of Thayetmyo, the Ma'ee Pass, and along the spurs of the Arrakan, in the Yomahs north of Pegu, and along the base of the range, along the banks of the Attaran River, and in the districts of Mergui and Tavoy. Here there is excellent sport, and good shikarris are many, but elephants appear to be absolutely indispensable. Equally interesting particulars of shooting in Upper Burma are given by Mr. Thom, whose account of the country and the people, as well as of the sport, is admirable. The book concludes with a section on sport in Assam. The volume, in short, is a complete magazine of information concerning its subject, and no sportsman should think of visiting Burma without having mastered it thoroughly. The illustrations are many and very good.

A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF MILITARY BOOKS.

Capt. Maurice J. D. Cockle is an ideal bibliographer, and all students of military history owe him a debt of gratitude for his splendid Bibliography of English Military Books up to 1642, and of Contemporary Foreign Works (Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.). The book has been edited by Mr. H. D. Cockle, and Mr. Oman has contributed a prefatory note. It may be said at this point that the volume is a masterpiece of typography, and a choice production of the Chiswick Press. Only 250 copies have been printed, and no effort has been spared to make the book complete. By the time the English soldier began to put his opinions upon paper the old school of tactics was moribund, and the men who wrote in the time of Elizabeth and James had learned all their skill in France and Flanders. Many English military books were translations or compendiums of bulky foreign treatises, and the works of Christine de Pisan and De Rohan found scores of translators and plagiarists, for our military writers borrowed much from the Continent, while no single English book at that time seems to have had any influence abroad. It was this last circumstance that led Capt. Cockle to include foreign works. His system is admirable. De Morgan has said that the most worthless book of a by gone age is a record worthy of preservation if ranged historically among its contemporaries. Inspired by this idea, Captain Cockle elected to reject the artificial arrangement of an alphabetical catalogue, and has arranged his books chronologically. Therefore, his list is no jejune production, but a military history in brief. He recognises from that point of view that it would have been better to carry it on to 1660, the date of the institution of the standing army, and we hope he may be tempted yet to do so. It is surprising what a vast number of military books were published in the period he surveys, and how extremely interesting many of them are. Capt. Cockle is not content to give bibliographical details only; he adds something of a précis of the contents of the book in many cases, and the illustrations which he gives, and which are most admirably produced, add a great deal to the interest of the book. We are very glad to draw attention to it, because, though it will directly attract few outside the ranks of students, it is an extremely valuable contribution to military history.

SHORT NOTICES.

Stable Management and Exercise, by Capt. M. Horace Hayes, F.R.C.V.S. (Hurst and Blackett), is well described as "A book for Horse-owners and Students." Capt. Hayes is such a well-known authority upon horses and horse-breeding that it is scarcely necessary to deal at length with this new book from his pen. He has had a quarter of a century's experience in writing technical books on horses, and he has here embodied in a volume of first-rate excellence all that concerns the subject indicated by its title. A large portion of the work appeared in the form of articles published in the Live Stock Journal, and it may be commended to all horse-owners.

World Politics at the End of the 19th Century as Influenced by the Oriental Situation, is a volume of Transatlantic origin, published in the "Citizen's Library," by Messrs. Macmillan, and is from the pen of Professor Paul S. Reinsch, of the University of Wisconsin. We shall be content to say that it is a broad-minded survey of the subject, suggestive in its treatment, but embodying a wonderful amount of information. In writing of national Imperialism the author is, of course, treating the subject from the American point of view, and this is especially the case where he deals with the political methods of Imperialism. His account of the opening up of China, and of the railway politics of that country, is extremely interesting, and the subject is very cleverly treated.

How to Read War News from China (Fisher Unwin), is a useful booklet on the lines of a similar issue concerning South Africa. Such a book might, of course, have been extended indefinitely, but it would certainly have been advantageous if an account had been given of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, and if more ample details had been included of railway concessions and works in Manchuria and China. We do not find any account of Admiral Alexieff. However, within its limits, the book is useful.

An admirable little book for pocket use is Formation for Attack, Night Operations, &c., Adopted in South Africa, by Lieut.-Col. Brunker (Holbrook, Portsmouth). The plates and notes on these different formations will be extremely interesting, and the author shows how the frontage for troops in the defence has increased enormously towards the close in the present war. A comparison is made with formations as previously suggested and carried out. The issue is most instructive.

Preparatory Battle Formations, by Major-Gen. H. M. Bengough, is a second edition of a well-known pamphlet (Gale and Polden). It embodies a suggestion for a system intended to replace the rigid and antiquated formations now in use, and the principle consists of small columns composed of companies or half companies, or preferably sections, moving by fours at any required interval. The diagrams show the formations completely.

To the growing number of pocket volumes concerning naval affairs Signor Ulrico Hoepli, of Milan, has added two. The Manuale del Marino, of Admiral De Amezaga, and Le Flotte Moderne, by Eugenio Bucci, are twin volumes, which will doubtless be of great use in the Italian navy and merchant marine. Admiral De Amezaga's little volume describes guns and ammunition with great fulness, as well as the use of electricity on board and submarine arms, and it includes a resumé of the laws which concern the Italian Naval Reserve, with a great number of orders, instructions, and reports, and a précis of steam tactics and naval formations, and international law, with a host of other matters of naval interest. It also includes a classified list of the ships of the Great Powers. In short, it is a wonderful book for the information it contains. Signor Bucci's volume describes the types of Italian ships and contains lists of the ships of all the Powers, being thus a useful naval pocket-book. It is brought up to June 1, last.

Chinas' Kriege seit 1840 (Mittler, Berlin) is a brochure giving an intelligent account of recent events in the history of China, and including a discussion of the present strength of that Power, which is credited with having from 225,000 to 250,000 men, of whom a third are in the provinces of Chihli and Shantung.

We have also received a Projet de Recrutement de L'Armée Belge, by Col. van Bever (Brussels, Lebeque), which includes a proposal to which the Belgian Minister of War would not lend his ear, but which may be interesting to Belgian soldiers all the same.

THE HIGHLAND BRIGADE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."
SIR,—I have received the enclosed cutting from England. I wish to express the indignation and disgust which all who are interested in the Highland Brigade must feel on reading these remarks and the letter which follows them. The special correspondent says it is written by "A By No Means Placid Celt." The gist of this letter is that the Highland Brigade consider themselves ill-treated because they were not included in the general advance to Pretoria. I have the honour to belong to that brigade, and was with them during the period covered by the letter, and there is not a word of truth in this statement. We knew perfectly well we were doing useful work, and had the Field-Marshal's discretion directed that we should be employed on lines of communication, we should have had no right to make this scandalous public complaint. The writer makes a grievance of the fact that there was no correspondent with us to chronicle our doings, and says, by implication, that his deeds of valour must be done in the public eye to be worth doing at all. Sir, Lord Roberts knew what we were doing and if we did well, and, believe me, that is enough for us. The whole tone of this letter is so repugnant to good feeling, and so subversive of all discipline, that I cannot find Parliamentary language strong enough to express my disgust. The writer says he has had complaints made to him by men who have had 30 years' service. I know no one in the brigade who has served 30 years, and much doubt if any exist in the Army who are not major-generals, full colonels, or very old quartermasters. To criticise, or cause to be criticised, in the public prints the uses to which our revered commander may choose to put us is not the habit of the Highland Brigade, and one can only charitably suppose that when the "A By No Means Placid Celt" penned his letter, he must have been so far from placid as to require the serious attention of his friends.

ONE OF THE HIGHLAND BRIGADE.

THE CRIMEAN DEAD.—The remains of the English soldiers and sailors who died during the Crimean war, and were buried in the cemeteries on the Dardanelles, were reinterred in the cemetery at Haidar Pasha on the 1st inst. The ceremony, which was an imposing one, was performed in the presence of the secretary and staff of the British Embassy, the British Consul at Constantinople, and a large number of Turkish officials. A company of Turkish infantry, with band, rendered military honours, playing "God save the Queen" at the beginning and again at the conclusion of the service, while a detachment of Turkish soldiers fired the usual salutes. A number of the members of the English colony, including General Blunt Pasha, and the commander and officers and some bluejackets from H.M.S. Salamander were also present. The chaplain of the British Embassy officiated.

THE NAVAL BRIGADES.

 despatches from Sir Edward Seymour, and the announcement of the departure from the front of Captain Bearcroft's brigade have occurred very opportunely. The report that the bluejackets are to return from South Africa appears to be premature. All that Lord Roberts says in his telegram of October 7 is:—"I wished Captain Bearcroft and the naval brigade goodbye to-day. They leave for Capetown to-night, carrying with them the thanks and good wishes of the Army in South Africa for the able assistance they have afforded throughout the war." The Navy has every reason to be proud of those of its members who represented it in the war.
 Their achievements cannot but add lustre to the pages they have contributed to the glorious history of the Navy. From the time when, under the late Captain Ethelston, a small brigade was sent to Stormberg, until they had done their work in carrying their guns to the uttermost borders of the Transvaal, marines and bluejackets have shown a zeal and devotion and rendered a loyal co-operation to the land services fully deserving of Lord Roberts's meed of praise. Since the relief of Ladysmith it has been only by infrequent reference in the official telegraphic despatches that any indication has been given of the work which the Navy has continued to perform. The story has yet to be written of how the little party of seamen under Captain Jones dragged their guns with Buller's force over the passes of the Drakensberg. And other chapters will tell of how the naval guns accompanied Lord Roberts in that famous march across the veldt to Bloemfontein, how Grant and his tiny band did good service with Hunter in the Orange River Colony, and how one of the most striking scenes in the campaign was the entry of the naval brigade into Pretoria, a significant presentation of the long reach of Sea Power. As a correspondent who was present writes: "When one realised that these great and apparently unwieldy guns had kept pace with the Army in its advance from Modder River, had taken part in each successive action of importance, and had never delayed the infantry in its advance, in spite of a country without roads, and prolific in unbridged drifts, which blocked transport waggons for hours, one understood the gigantic task which the sailors had faced and successfully accomplished." To Captain Percy Scott first of all, for having devised the means by which the seamen could so prove themselves, belongs the credit. But all, naval and marine officers, non-commissioned and petty officers, seamen, stokers, and marines, for their gallantry, their energy, and their ready resource in most trying circumstances, have deserved well of their country for the signal and useful service rendered to the Empire.

Turning from South Africa to China, we find in Sir Edward Seymour's despatches with regard to the operations at Taku and Tien-tsin, similar testimony to the pluck and endurance, the courage and zeal of our bluejackets and marines. The circumstances in which these operations were carried to a successful issue were as unique and extraordinary as those which occurred in South Africa. Nothing is more striking in these reports, as in that of the Admiral on the expedition on which he himself led, than the excellent spirit in which the men of the different nationalities worked together with reciprocal helpfulness. Nothing can be more characteristic of this spirit than the remark of Admiral Bruce in bringing to the notice of the Admiralty the brilliant manner in which Captain Stewart handled his ship in the action with the Taku Forts, "he and the captain of the German vessel Ilis were always contending for the post of danger," and again, in reference to another brilliant officer, at the taking of the North-West fort, "the Japanese commander, as I believe, the first man in, and then assisted Commander Cradock up, when I much regret to say that the Japanese commander was killed." Sir Edward Seymour says in forwarding the reports of the rear-admiral and those of Captains Cradock and Stewart, "It is my pleasing duty to inform their lordships that these operations met with my entire approval. In my opinion they were skilfully planned and executed in a most gallant manner, worthy of the highest traditions of our Service." The remaining despatches, which include those from Captain Bayly, a senior naval officer at Tien-tsin; Captain Burke, commanding the Naval Brigade; and General Dorward, as well as those of the admirals, form a complete narrative of the operations which cleared the Chinese soldiery from the city and opened the road to Peking. The story covers a period from June 10 to July 14, when the walled city of Tien-tsin was taken after two days fighting. It is clear from the despatches that from the date of the departure of the expedition to attempt the relief of Peking, the Chinese authorities adopted a hostile attitude, although it was not until a week later that their troops took the offensive. Then for some days they made repeated attempts to capture the railway station, which may be regarded as the key to the position occupied by the foreigners. Fortunately these attempts, as well as those made to sever the connection with Tongku, all failed, and reinforcements, in spite of much opposition, were brought into the city. When, therefore, Sir Edward Seymour's expedition returned the Allied Forces were strong enough in their turn to take the offensive, and with success. The country will entirely concur with the Admiralty in the expression of their high appreciation of the tact and judgment displayed by the Admiral, and of their thorough approbation of the gallant and valuable services rendered by all concerned in these operations.

THE FRENCH SHIPBUILDING PROGRAMME.

THE document in which is embodied the French shipbuilding programme of the year 1901 embodies an interesting statement meriting study. It illustrates and explains the great effort which France is now making, and at the same time suggests some of the difficulties that are encountered. If we were confronted merely by French naval preparations we might well be content with the progress already achieved. But we have to remember that Russia and Germany, not to name other countries, are just as energetic in their work of naval expansion. The total number of vessels contained in the French list is 111, of which 13 really belong to the present year, and appear only nominally in the programme of 1901, through various delays which have occurred in pushing them forward. The most considerable of these vessels is the battleship Iéna, which is ordered to make her trials, so that she may be attached to the Northern Squadron, but is only now receiving the armour for her gun turrets, and is not likely to be commissioned for six or eight months more. On the other hand, the submarine boats Algérien and Farfadet, the sea-going boats Sirocco, Audacieux, and Trombe, and six first class boats are really approaching completion, while the despatch transport Vauchuse, which was begun years ago, and is still unfinished, will perhaps never be completed unless for harbour service. The Trombe has, indeed, been under trial, and recently had a serious mishap through being driven, during a light fog, upon a rock near the Ile Groix, while steaming at 23 knots. The shock was terrific, and the boat was seriously damaged. She had not properly answered to her helm.

Turning, now, to the new vessels to be completed, continued, and commenced in 1901, which are 98 in number, we find that four are battleships, 15 armoured cruisers, one a protected cruiser, 24 destroyers, 15 submarine boats and 39 other torpedo craft. The coming year will witness the completion of two battleships, the Henri IV. and Suffren; of two armoured cruisers, the Jeanne d'Arc and the Montcalm; of the Jurien de la Gravière, which is a first class protected cruiser of a type and class not to be reproduced; of three destroyers, the Pertuisane, Esco-pette, and Flamberge, and of five submarine boats, the Sirène, Triton, Korrigan, Gnome, and Lutin, as well as of seven sea-going boats and 12 boats of the first class. The most notable feature of French shipbuilding is the large number of armoured cruisers now in hand, of which seven will be launched in 1902, four in 1903, and one in 1904, not, of course, taking account of others which may be laid down. Seven submarine boats are to be completed in 1902, and three more belonging to the present programme in 1903. The two battleships which are to be laid down as "A 8" and "A 10" are intended to be completed in 1905; the other vessels to be begun next year are one armoured cruiser, 10 destroyers, eight submarine boats, and 11 small torpedo boats.

The two new battleships will be laid down as soon as the extensive shipbuilding programme which has been sanctioned by the Chamber receives the assent of the Senate. They will be of a new type, which we have already described, will displace 14,865 tons, and will be intended for a speed of 18 knots. The armoured cruisers belong to five different types. The Jeanne d'Arc, of 11,270 tons, has no sister. Three other vessels of a class are the Dupetit-Thouars, Gueydon, and Montcalm, and displace 9,517 tons. The third class is larger—10,014 tons—and includes the Condé, Gloire, Marseillaise, Sully, and Amiral Aube. The Desaix and Kléber are smaller vessels of 7,700 tons, while the Jules Ferry and Léon Gambetta are of a new type, displacing 12,550 tons, and are intended for 22 knots. They will be built at Cherbourg and Brest, while a third of the same class is to be begun at Toulon. These armoured cruisers displace entirely the protected cruisers, of which no more are intended to be built. It deserves also to be noticed that the construction of sea-going torpedo boats appears to be abandoned, these being now replaced by the larger class, which are really destroyers, and the building of these is being developed with activity. There are fourteen already in hand, and ten are to be begun in 1901. In that year the flotilla of submarine boats completed or in hand will comprise twenty-two units, and the whole will be completed by the year 1903. It will thus be seen that the French shipbuilding programme is extensive, and that there is no relaxation of effort, although some change of direction is apparent. The battleships and armoured cruisers are larger, and generally speaking all the vessels seem to tend more towards our own models, although the triple screw has been adopted without hesitation for all the larger vessels, and there is no tendency to build ships with unarmoured ends. The water-tube boiler is also still holding its sway. In other respects the programme seems to call for little remark, except that its extent will have to be taken into consideration, with many other important matters, by Mr. Goschen's successor.

Navv Notes.

The tale of members returned to the new Parliament is now nearly complete, and of those constituencies which have not yet replied there are few likely to add representatives of the Services. So far as our recollection serves, there has never been a House of Commons before in which there were so few naval officers. Captain Oliver Young, R.N., and Captain Sir John Colomb of the Marines are the only two who have a direct claim to recognition in this respect. The Navy must find its spokesmen outside its own ranks, and there is no lack of gentlemen anxious to take this responsibility upon their shoulders. Sir Edward Reed, who now represents Cardiff, as a late Chief Constructor of the Navy, is, perhaps, more closely connected with the Service than any other member, but there are also two or three members who, like Sir Ughtred Kay-Shuttleworth, have held offices at the Admiralty. Mr. Arnold Forster and Sir J. Fortescue Flannery have devoted special attention to naval matters, and it may be that time will show that there are others who, like Sir Charles Dilke, recognise the needs of the nation in connection with the Navy. We cannot but regret that at a time when the state of the Fleet merits special attention at the hands of the people's representatives, there should be no naval officer in the House whose words are likely to carry weight with the public.

There is very little military news from the Far East this week, and from the naval side the most important announcement concerns the making of a new port at Ching-wan-tao. This place does not appear to be marked in the Admiralty charts and there is no reference to it in the sailing directions, nor can we find it in any recent map. Apparently it is in the Gulf of Pechili and not far from Shan-hai-kwan. It is reported to have deep water close inshore, so that ships can actually go alongside a temporary wharf which has been constructed by the bluejackets. A branch line is also being laid down to connect the port with the railway system leading to Peking. The port is said to be free from ice and to afford protection against the winds which prevail during the winter. What number of ships can use it we are not told, but as the Aurora and other ships of that class have arrived there the facilities are probably good for fairly large vessels. It was essential that such a harbour should be found, as it cannot be long before the Peiho will be frozen over.

It appears to have been taken for granted in some quarters that the Admiralty have determined that the Duke and Duchess of York are to use the new Victoria and Albert for their voyage to Australia. We still, however, are of opinion that it is much more likely that the precedent will be followed which was set by the Prince of Wales when he visited India. There are a number of mercantile vessels on the auxiliary list which would be much more suitable than the Royal yacht. And it is significant that at the present time it does not appear that any further progress is being made with the yacht in the way of preparing her for such a long voyage. While there is good accommodation in the yacht, it is doubtful if there is sufficient for the suite which will probably accompany their Royal Highnesses, and moreover the yacht is not built to make long voyages, and does not carry a large quantity of coal. The use of a battleship, which has also been suggested would be unwarrantable, particularly at a time when we are feeling the need of more vessels of this class for the active service of the Fleet. An escort of cruisers is altogether different, and it would be only in keeping with the official character of the visit if these were provided. The only difference that need be made in this case is that the merchant ship might be actually commissioned, as the Oregon was in 1885 by Captain, now Admiral, Sir E. H. Seymour.

A correspondent writes:—"Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford's appointment as Ministerial Lord of the Admiralty is advocated by correspondents in the Times and other leading dailies. The inconsistency of such suggestions lies in the appointment of an officer who is midway on the junior flag-list to rule over his seniors, unless his professional colleagues were selected from those junior to him as rear-admiral, with the addition of senior captains. Under a civilian First Lord the seniority of his naval advisers is immaterial, but as a rule they are flag officers of standing and experience, who have displayed superior ability while their flags were flying. In the early 'fifties' the First Lord was assisted by two junior rear-admirals and two captains. The senior of this quartette was a captain at the age of twenty-two. Family interest was an important factor in those days. When Lord Charles' present appointment expires he will most probably secure a seat in Parliament, and thus obtain an opportunity as a 'free lance' to vigorously insist on the requirements of the Navy. The law does not admit of the control of the Admiralty being vested in an active admiral, excepting when the Ministerial Lord is temporarily absent, as happened when Lord Northbrook proceeded to Egypt in 1884, and Admiral Sir Cooper Key was sworn to the Privy Council as his locum tenens.

The annual prize firing of the ships of the Navy is apt to be vitally affected by the presence on board any given vessel of one or two exceptionally accurate marksmen. As an instance of this, a correspondent quotes the case of the battleship Majestic, in which a petty officer, named Koggel, is so excellent a shot that he recently fired five rounds from a 12in. gun in the space of three minutes and hit the target every time. The effect of this brilliant shooting upon the average for the great guns was, of course, very marked, and, although the Majestic made a very high average, she would not have been at all superior to some other vessels of the squadron had Koggel been withdrawn. The point is worth noting, but no amount of training in gunnery can ever be expected to equalise the shooting of the gunners, or to discount the effect of one or two exceptionally gifted marksmen. There is no material improvement in the shooting with the great guns from the ships of the Channel Squadron, the average this year working out at 0.25 of a hit per minute, as against 0.20 in the previous year. But, with the 6in. quick-firers, the average shows the highly satisfactory improvement of 34 per cent. in direct hits.

Some interesting experiments in long range firing have recently been carried out in the Mediterranean Squadron. The targets were 30ft. by 15ft., and a marking ship was employed to note the effects of each shot. Eight battleships of the fleet fired off Aranci Bay at ranges varying between 4,200 and 5,500 yards. The best shooting was made by the Cæsar, which, in 43 rounds, was estimated to have made 16 hits. Under the same conditions (speed, ten knots) the Illustrious secured 13 hits out of 32 rounds; the Victorious, 12 hits out of 43 rounds; and the Royal Oak, 6 hits in 26 rounds. The Cæsar was the only ship that used the Scott telescopic sights. Some of the cruisers also fired at the same ranges and under the same conditions with 6in. and 4.7in. guns. In twenty shots from her 6in. guns, the Isis secured 10 hits, and a similar proportion with her 4.7in. gun. A second competition was carried out off Valona at ranges varying between 5,000 and 7,400 yards. Here, again, the practice was good in view of the length of range, but a different system of marking was introduced. A direct hit on the target counted twelve points; a hit on the superstructure of an imaginary battleship counted three points; and a hit on the funnels or masts one point. In this case the best shooting was made by the flagship Renown, which averaged 2.63 points per round. This average was nearly approached by the Canopus and Ocean, whilst the average of the worst ship was only .50 per round. Some of the cruisers also fired at these long ranges with their 6in. guns.

The Admiralty must be credited with a genuine desire to improve the pay of the Naval Engineers under the new scheme of regulations, but the modification of the rates of "charge" pay will undo all the benefit, unless the scheme is reconsidered in that respect. A Fleet Engineer, who does not hesitate to sign his name, informs one of our contemporaries that he stands to be a considerable loser under the revised scheme of pay. His pay has been increased by 2s. a day, but this would have come about in nine months' time in the ordinary course of service. The net gain here he estimates at £28. As against this small gain, he is threatened, he states, with a reduction of charge pay of no less than 4s. a day, so that he will lose £200 during a three years' commission. But surely the Admiralty cannot intend to fix the maximum rate of charge pay for senior officers at 5s. a day? Hitherto, the new scale has hardly been criticised at all in print by the officers concerned.

MESSRS. RICHARD DICKESON AND Co. have been granted permission by Lord Roberts to establish premises in Pretoria, and a manager and staff left Bloemfontein on Wednesday for that purpose.

Navy Personal.

Admiral Lord Charles Scott, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, attains the age of sixty-one next Saturday, and Rear-Admiral Charles Oxley will be fifty-nine on the previous Wednesday. He is next for promotion to vice rank, and can, therefore, remain six years longer on the active list as he became flag officer prior to July 16, 1895.

Admiral Sir Richard Tracey, in responding at a banquet given last week by the officers of the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, on the gallant flag officer leaving that establishment, remarked that the impression left on his mind after three years spent at Greenwich was that in no educational institution of the country was work more conscientiously performed, both by staff and students, than in the Royal Naval College.

Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson assembled the Channel Fleet off the Eddystone on Thursday last, and proceeded to Berehaven. The squadron will remain fourteen days for various exercises at that anchorage, and afterwards proceed to Gibraltar. It is reported that on his return home, about the middle of December next, Sir H. Rawson will hoist his flag on the Glory, the battleship ordered to relieve the Centurion.

Vice-Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge was, we are informed, unable to accept the China command, but it is to be hoped that at some future time his services will be available for the Mediterranean station.

Rear-Admiral Hugo L. Pearson, Commander-in-Chief of the Australia station, arrived at Sydney, N.S.W., on Saturday last in the Royal Arthur. His flagship is to be at Fremantle, W.A., on December 5, to embark the Earl of Hopetoun, Governor-General of the Australian Commonwealth.

Rear-Admiral Sir William Wharton, Hydrographer of the Admiralty, has been visiting Devonport in reference to the facilities for mooring the Western Division of the fleet in Hamoaze, additional accommodation being necessary for vessels that are continuously being added to the Navy.

Captain R. A. J. Montgomerie, who relieved Captain Arthur Barrow in the Prince George on Wednesday last, is the youngest officer in independent command of a first-class battleship.

Captain Frederick Inglefield, of the Devastation, left Gibraltar on Friday in last week to dock and refit that battleship at Malta. It will be a great advantage when the port guardship at the "Rock" can be dealt with at the arsenal to which she is attached.

Captain the Hon. Walter Stopford commissioned the Pallas at Portsmouth on Thursday last, to relieve the Pearl on the North America and West India station.

Captain Hugh P. Williams commissioned the Sybil at Portsmouth on Tuesday last for the Cape of Good Hope and West Africa station, to replace the Barrosa.

Captain the Hon. Foley Vereker, of the Fisheries and Harbour Department of the Board of Trade, has, we are sorry to say, been obliged to withdraw temporarily from duty in consequence of ill-health.

Captain R. K. M'Alpine, of the Hyacinth, is further delayed in his departure from Devonport in consequence of the defective state of that cruiser's engines. He commissioned her on the 3rd ult., and will probably be unable to proceed to sea until the end of the current month. It was intended that he should leave on the 5th inst. for Portsmouth, for experimental trials under the Boiler Committee.

Captain Arthur Barrow, of the Prince George, was entertained at a farewell dinner on Tuesday last by the ward-room officers on board that battleship, on the occasion of leaving her to assume command of the Gunnery Establishment at Portsmouth at the end of the year, when Captain W. H. May's extended period expires.

Captain John Casement, of the Amphion, left Plymouth on Wednesday last for the Pacific Station to relieve the Leander.

Captain Arthur Galloway, of the Scylla, with a relief crew for the Barrosa, arrived at St. Paul de Loanda on Sunday last, and left for the Cape of Good Hope on Tuesday.

Staff-Captain W. J. Symons has arrived at Pembroke Dock from Malta, and commenced duty at that establishment in place of the late Staff-Captain A. J. Neville.

Lieut. A. C. Williamson, who would have commissioned the Speedwell to relieve the Hazard in the Mediterranean had not the former vessel been required as tender to the Rodney, will commission the Hussar instead on the 23rd inst. for that station.

Lieut. Allan Ozzard and Staff Engineer J. M. Thompson, relieved from the Hibernia at Malta, and Fleet-Paymaster George J. Mills, transferred from the Rupert in the Mediterranean to the Island of Ascension, arrived home in the P. and O. steamship Japan on Saturday last.

Lieut. M. Culme-Seymour, promoted Commander from the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert with seniority of August 31 last, had the good fortune to obtain his lieutenant's commission under similar circumstances eleven years ago. He is now thirty-two years of age. His gallant and distinguished father became commander at twenty-three, and captain before he was thirty, but the China War was a valuable stepping-stone, aided by previous services in Burmah and the Crimea.

Sub-Lieuts. Eric Fullerton, Harry Rawson, and Albert Sartorius, recently promoted lieutenant from the Royal yacht, are representatives of naval families. The fathers of the two first-named respectively command, as vice-admirals, the Victoria and Albert and the Channel Squadron, while the last-named officer's grandfather was the veteran Admiral of the Fleet who designed the torpedo vessel Polyphemus.

Sub-Lieuts. J. W. C. Wallace and R. E. Stokes-Rees obtain Lieutenants' Commissions after two years' service, under Clause 9 of the R.N. College examination rules for officers of their rank.

Staff-Surgeon J. Sugrue and Surgeon Edward T. Meagher, invalided respectively from the Devastation at Gibraltar and the Scout at Malta, arrived home on Saturday last by the P. and O. steamship Australia. The latter officer disembarked at Plymouth.

ROYAL MARINES.

Major Gerald Cox relieves Major FitzRoy Scott in the Magnificent, and Captain Frank Chichester takes Captain Arthur Connolly's place in the Excellent, at the expiration of the usual term of sea service.

Captain John H. Abrahall embarks for Bermuda to command the detachment at that establishment in place of the late Captain Herbert Cuttis.

Lieut. - General Gustavus F. Munro retires under the age clause on Friday next, Colonel A. B. Crosbie, Commandant at the Dépôt, becomes Major-General, and Lieut.-Colonel and Brevet-Colonel Townley W. Dowding, Supernumerary Second Commandant and Inspector of Marine Recruiting, will be promoted Colonel Commandant.

THE Secretary of State for India has approved of an officer granted an extension of regimental command after completing nine years' command being permitted, should his tenure be extended for a year or over, to take leave or furlough, subject to the usual conditions, up to the maximum limit of half such extension, and not exceeding one year.

MISS HICHENS, Cert. Med. Rubber and Hospital Trained Nurse. VISITS PATIENTS mornings. RECEIVES from 2 to 6 p.m., or by appointment.—(First Flat), No. 5, Vernon Place, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.

THE FIGHTING IN CHINA.

PEKING RELIEF EXPEDITION.

From the despatch of Sir E. H. Seymour, dated June 27:—

"I might with truth mention favourably all names; it is hard justly to discriminate, and there are probably others who deserve special mention fully as much as those named below. I feel it right specially to recommend for their lordships' favourable consideration the following officers:—Capt. J. R. Jellicoe, my flag captain, who was, as always, of most valuable help, both by his judgment and action, till disabled by a serious wound at the battle of Peitsang on June 21. Commander C. D. Granville, of my flagship, who ably commanded the Naval Brigade with me after my flag captain was wounded. Commander W. O. Boothby, of the Endymion, in command of the seamen from that ship, and at times of others also. He was in every engagement, and I specially noticed his energy and activity. Lieut. G. M. K. Fair, of my flagship, employed on my staff in Intelligence Department, &c., but diverted as required to other duties, such as the very important one of getting along the junks with wounded. Lieut. H. W. Colomb, of the Endymion, was twice slightly wounded on different days. He had charge of Lofa Station Fort, defended it against various attacks, and showed good judgment while in separate command. Lieut. E. G. Lowther-Crofton, of my flagship, most intelligent and active; with great risk to himself he remained behind in the Hsiku Armoury on 26th inst., having made the preparations for so doing, which were carried out by him most satisfactorily. This important service reflects very great credit on him. Lieut. A. G. Smith, of the Aurora, led and commanded an advanced post above Lanfang, on the line towards Peking, with zeal and good judgment. Midshipman W. B. C. Jones, of the Centurion, who took command of Lieut. Wyndham L. Bamber's company in the operations on June 20, after the latter officer was wounded. Mr. C. Davidge, Acting Gunner of the Centurion, who ably assisted Lieut. Crofton in the destruction of the Hsiku Armoury, and shared the risks with him—they two being alone. Major J. R. Johnstone, R.M.L.I., of the Centurion, has been most active throughout. He often commanded all the marines present. He kept pushing ahead of the trains on our advance to clear and protect the line. He it was who led the storming party I sent round on June 22 to carry the north angle of the armoury, near Hsiku, and he has rendered very good service. Capt. R. O. M. Doig, R.M.L.I., Endymion, has been very active throughout, and commanded the night expedition of one hundred men on June 22, sent from the armoury to try and communicate with Tien-tsin, which attempt he made with skill and credit. Mr. F. C. Alton, my secretary, has been near me throughout, and, as at all times, was of the greatest assistance and value by his grasp of matters and good judgment and sense. Mr. C. J. E. Rotter, Assistant Paymaster of my flagship, was in charge of the commissariat arrangements, a most difficult task under the circumstances, but performed by him with constant efforts and all possible success. To this, having regard to our foreign allies, Mr. Rotter's knowledge of German and well-known tact and good temper much contributed. Fleet-Surg. T. M. Sibbald, Centurion, has had charge of the hospital arrangements throughout, and has also been much under fire. His activity, attention, and constant cheerfulness have gone far to mitigate the sufferings of the wounded, and have met with my entire approval. Mr. G. H. Cockey, engineer, Centurion, took over the duties of company officer of the Centurion's marine detachment after Capt. H. W. H. Beyts, R.M.A., fell on June 23, until their arrival at Tien-tsin, and was of the greatest assistance to Major Johnstone, R.M.L.I. Mr. A. E. Cossey, assistant engineer, Aurora, at much risk to himself returned from our most advanced post towards Anting Station to bring important news. Mr. C. Bigham, late Grenadier Guards, honorary attaché to H.M. Legation, at Peking, has been attached to me as Intelligence Officer, and has shown much zeal and ability as such; he has been of great value to me. Mr. A. Currie, C.E., B.Sc., resident engineer in charge of railway line between Tien-tsin and Peking, came with us to take charge of the trains and their personnel, and to repair the line. In this he worked with a skill and energy not to be surpassed. He acted in opposition to the Chinese director-in-chief of the railway for our benefit, and H.M. Service and the Allies owe him a debt of gratitude which I submit must be acknowledged and repaid. He has lost his home and nearly all his worldly possessions out here, destroyed by the Chinese. Mr. C. W. Campbell, H.M. Consul for Wu-chow (on leave), accompanied us as interpreter, and was of the utmost value by his knowledge both of the language and customs of the Chinese. He showed untiring zeal, and I would submit him for the decided acknowledgments of H.M. Government.

THE ATTACK ON THE TAKU FORTS.

From the despatch of Rear-Admiral James Bruce, dated June 17:—

"In forwarding the reports of Commander R. H. J. Stewart, commanding Algerine, and Commander C. G. F. M. Cradock, who commanded the allied landing force, I wish to bring most strongly to the notice of their lordships that the brilliant manner in which Commander Stewart handled his ship immensely contributed to the success achieved, which at one time was extremely doubtful, and his putting her so close under the forts that most of their shot went over her, accounts for his small loss. He and the captain of the German vessel Itis were always contending for the post of danger, and the German officer is, I regret to say, severely wounded in several places."

From the despatch of Vice-Admiral Sir E. H. Seymour, dated July 4:—

"I concur in the Rear-Admiral's commendation of those concerned, and would specially mention Commander Johnston Stewart, of the Algerine, the senior naval officer present at Taku (the rear-admiral being in his flagship outside the bar, 12 miles off). Commander Stewart directed our part of the operations, and well and ably handled his ship under heavy fire from the forts in a most gallant and seamanlike way, and I desire to submit his name to their lordships for their very favourable notice."

From the despatch of Commander Cradock, commanding the landing party, dated June 20:—

"I cannot close this despatch without mentioning the capital behaviour of the men, more especially as there were amongst them many ordinary seamen and lately joined stokers. I would especially remark on the fine examples set by Lieut. Eric Charrington, of the Alacrity, and Lieut. R. Hulbert, of the Endymion, in the firing line, both being worthy of the highest praise. I would also respectfully bring before your notice the pluck and ability of my two A.D.C.'s, Midshipman D. Herbert, Orlando, and Midshipman L. Shore, Barfleur, also the conduct of Midshipman C. Dix, Barfleur, who undoubtedly saved his lieutenant's life. Surg. R. Browne, Alacrity, was quick in his aid and assiduous in his attention to the wounded."

From the despatch of Commander Johnston Stewart, commanding the Algerine, dated June 22:—

"The behaviour of officers and men was admirable, and where all did their duty it is difficult to particularise, Lieuts. Chambers and Duncan were indefatigable in the performance of their duties and in superintending the firing, while Lieut. Robinson navigated the ship down the river as coolly as if nothing was going on."

AT TIEN-TSIN BETWEEN JUNE 10 AND JUNE 26.

From the despatch of Vice-Admiral Sir E. H. Seymour, dated July 8:—

"I am highly satisfied with the behaviour of all employed in these operations, which reflect very great credit on all concerned, but I desire to bring specially to their lordships' favourable notice the conduct of the following officers and men:—

"(1) Capt. E. H. Bayly, of the Aurora, whose duties were most constant, harassing, and onerous. He displayed throughout great calmness, energy, and good judgment, and a tact and temper quite remarkable. He is now performing the same duties with equal efficiency and also those of chief of my staff, which combination he has proved himself quite equal to. (2) Commander D. Beatty, D.S.O., of the Barfleur, although suffering from two wounds only partially healed, one of which is likely to cause him considerable suffering and inconvenience for some time, begged to be allowed to accompany the expedition for the relief of the forces under my command. He is thoroughly deserving of any mark of appreciation of his services. (3) Lieut. P. N. Wright's (Orlando) services have been of a most arduous nature and of the highest character. His coolness and gallantry on every occasion merit the highest praise. Lieut. Wright's very dangerous wound caused a severe loss to the whole force, which was felt by every one. I have recently ventured, by telegraph, to recommend this officer for special immediate promotion, and feel sure that if granted it will give pleasure and satisfaction to the whole force who served with him. (4) Lieut. H. du C. Luard, of the Barfleur, who took on the duties of inspection of defences after Lieut. Wright had been wounded, and the defence of the line—a very long and troublesome one, constantly "sniped" by night—has been most indefatigable. (5) Lieut. F. L. Field, of the Barfleur, deserves mention for his very excellent and arduous services with the repairing and other armed trains, having been hard at work for almost 48 hours continuously on one occasion. (6) Major E. V. Luke, R.M.L.I., of the Barfleur, whose excellent leading and handling of his men at the attack on the Military College contributed very largely to the success of the operation. After Commander Beatty had been wounded, Major Luke assumed the duties of that officer with regard to the military work of the British Defence Force. (7) Surg. J. Falconer Hall, of the Barfleur, whose devoted care and attention to his patients (as well as his professional skill) during a most trying time have been the admiration of all. (8) Mr. G. Gipps, midshipman, of the Orlando, has been almost continuously in charge of a gun at an outlying and dangerous portion of the defences, and has displayed at all times great coolness and ability, calmly waiting the arrival of the enemy within effective range, when he has invariably dispersed them with a few well-directed shells. (9) William Christmas, P.O., 2nd cl., of the Barfleur, for coolness and gallantry during the British attack on the Chinese field guns, on June 19, when he carried Mr. Donaldson, midshipman, severely wounded, on his back out of the firing line while exposed to a heavy rifle fire. (10) Patrick Golden, A.B., of the Barfleur, on the same occasion assisted to carry Lieut. A. J. B. Stirling, severely wounded, across an open ground swept by rifle fire, and was himself wounded in so doing. (11) William Parsonage, A.B., of the Aurora, on the same occasion assisted to carry Lieut. G. B. Powell, wounded, to the rear over open ground swept by rifle fire, and was wounded in so doing."

AT TIEN-TSIN, BETWEEN JUNE 26 AND JULY 11.

From the despatch of Vice-Admiral Sir E. H. Seymour, dated July 12:—

"Before closing my despatch I feel it right specially to recommend for their Lordships' favourable consideration the following officers:—Lieut. T. W. Kemp, Aurora, has been brought favourably to my notice by Commander Cradock in the advance to Tien-tsin. I can also recommend him for zeal and usefulness, and his services as Russian interpreter have been of very great assistance. Lieut. J. E. Drummond, of the Terrible, in command of guns on and near south wall of defences—a very important and exposed position. He has, with all under his command, rendered most valuable service there, and merits their Lordships recognition. Lieut. F. A. Powlett, my flag lieutenant, was with me throughout the expedition towards Peking, and since. He has been most useful at Tien-tsin, in addition to his other duties, in arranging the signals and communications with the tower and our batteries for firing on the Chinese guns, also in trying to surprise and capture Chinese signallers at night. Sub-Lieut. E. C. Kennedy, Barfleur, recommended by Major L. W. F. Waller, United States Marines, placed himself under Major Waller with a maxim, and was most useful firing on the enemy or Chinese guns of the arsenal as they retreated. Mr. G. Ellis, signal boatswain of the Centurion. With me through all the operations hitherto, and has shown the zeal he always does; he was slightly wounded at Tien-tsin. Mr. J. Wright, gunner (act.), Terrible, with Lieut. Drummond. I have noticed the great coolness, energy, and valuable service performed by this officer. Mr. E. O. B. S. Osborne, midshipman, of the Centurion, has been with me the whole time, and shown great zeal, coolness, and courage. Mr. J. Attrill, carpenter, of the Centurion, has been with the expedition towards Peking, and at Tien-tsin, and showed great zeal and energy, first working hard at repairs to railway; secondly, in the mounting of guns. He has been very often under fire. On the evening of July 11, the Allies having received reinforcements of United States and Japanese troops, the officers and men of the Centurion were sent back to their ship, and I then returned with my staff to the flagship outside Taku bar."

THE CAPTURE OF TIEN-TSIN CITY.

From the despatch of Vice-Admiral Sir E. H. Seymour, dated July 23:—

"The following officers and men have been brought to my notice on this occasion:—

"Lieut. V. E. B. Phillimore, Barfleur, who commanded A Company, went to the support of one half-battalion of American Marines, who had so many wounded that they would have been unable to save themselves had it not been for the able and timely support which he gave them. Mr. B. J. D. Guy, midshipman, Barfleur, for the great coolness and bravery he displayed in stopping with and attending to a wounded man under an excessively hot fire, eventually assisting to carry him in across a fire-swept zone. Ernest Whibley, ordinary seaman, Barfleur, for the great coolness and gallantry he displayed in assisting to carry in three men across a heavy fire-swept zone. Thomas Gardner, sick berth steward, Barfleur, for the great coolness and attention he displayed whilst attending to and caring for the wounded (including the Americans) under a very heavy fire. James Drew, petty officer, 1st class, Barfleur, for his coolness and attention to the wounded under a very heavy fire. To these names I should also have added that of Capt. H. T. R. Lloyd, R.M.L.I., had he lived. This officer was with me in the advance towards Peking, and was engaged in every action, showing on all occasions great courage and zeal."

The despatch of Brig-Gen. A. R. F. I. Dorrard, commanding British forces, Tien-tsin, dated July 15:—

"I wish to express my deep sense of the honour done to me by having under my command the officers and men of the Naval Brigade during the long and hard fighting of the 13th inst., which resulted in the capture of Tien-tsin city. The success of the operations was largely due to the manner in which the naval guns were worked by Lieut. Drummond, R.N., the accuracy of their fire alone rendering steady fire on the part of the troops possible against the strong Chinese position and largely reducing the number of casualties. The delicate operation of withdrawing troops from advanced positions at nightfall, to strengthen other parts of the line, and the bringing back of the wounded could not have been effected without the aid of the well-directed fire of the guns. I desire to place on record my appreciation of the gallantry and fine spirit of the men, and to join in their regret for the heavy loss in killed and wounded, and particularly with the Royal Marines in regret for the death of Capt. Lloyd. The Naval Brigade had their full share in the fighting at the centre and right of the position, and had the honour of being among the first troops to enter Tien-tsin. The succour they brought under a heavy fire to the hard-pressed American troops on the right was highly appreciated by the 9th Regiment United States Infantry, who found themselves unexpectedly under the heaviest fire of the day, and were much heartened by the arrival of Lieut. Phillimore, R.N., and his men. It will be my honour to bring their conduct to the notice of the Secretary of State for War. I join with them in their admiration for the gallantry, soldierly spirit, and organisation of our comrades of the Japanese Army. I have the honour to thank you particularly for the ready and unquestioning assistance which you personally gave me at all times during the progress of the operations, and for the cheerful co-operation of your officers and men in instantly carrying out any duty assigned to them."

THE APPROVAL OF THE ADMIRALTY.

In connection with the operations referred in the foregoing despatches the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have caused a letter, of which the following is a copy, to be sent to the Commander-in-Chief on the China Station:—

"Admiralty, October 1, 1900.

"Sir,—My Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty having had before them your letter of June 27 last, No. 384, reporting the proceedings of the allied forces in the gallant attempt to relieve the Legations at Peking, desire me to convey an expression of their high appreciation of the tact and judgment displayed by you on that occasion, which contributed so greatly to the harmonious feeling that prevailed between the various sections under your orders. Their Lordships consider that, having been suddenly called upon to assume command of a mixed force comprising representatives of almost every nation, great credit is due to you for the rapidity with which this force was organised, and for the manner in which the expedition was conducted, in view of the great difficulties necessarily attending it, and the overwhelming numbers of the opposing forces. My Lords have read with pleasure your testimony to the courage shown, and the hardships cheerfully endured by Her Majesty's officers and men during the period in question, and they desire that you will express to Capt. Jellicoe (your flag captain); Commander Granville, of the Centurion; Major Johnstone, R.M.L.I., of the Centurion; and to all concerned, their unqualified satisfaction at receiving this high commendation of their conduct.

"The further reports contained in your letters of the 8th, 12th, and 23rd July, Nos. 388, 402, and 429, respecting the state of affairs at Tien-tsin during your absence and subsequent to your return, have also been laid before their Lordships, and they desire that you will inform Capt. Bayly, of the Aurora, whose tact and untiring energy contributed materially to the successful defence of that place; Capt. Burke, of the Orlando, who ably assisted him; Commander Beatty, of the Barfleur; Lieut. (now Commander) Wright, R.N., of the Orlando; Major Luke, R.M.L.I., of the Barfleur, and the officers and men under their orders, how fully their Lordships recognise the valuable services rendered by them during a time of great peril and anxiety. My Lords, having had before them a letter from the Rear-Admiral, dated June 17, No. 4, containing reports on the storming and capture of the Taku Forts, desire that you will convey to Commander (now Captain) Stewart, of the Algerine, who most ably handled and fought his ship; to Commander Cradock, of the Alacrity, who skilfully led the allied landing force; to Lieuts. and Commanders Keyes and Colin Mackenzie, who did good service in the Fame and Whiting respectively, especially in the smart cutting out of four Chinese destroyers, and to the other officers and men engaged an expression of their thorough approbation of the gallantry displayed by them during these successful operations, which their Lordships are pleased to find from your letter No. 385, of July 4, have met with your entire concurrence.

"Further letters from the Rear-Admiral dated June 27 and July 11, Nos. 24 and 26, have also been received, relating to other events which occurred whilst you were on shore, and their Lordships wish to take this opportunity of recording their appreciation of the manner in which Rear-Admiral Bruce conducted the important duties which devolved upon him during your enforced absence, and of the excellent relations which he maintained with his foreign colleagues throughout a period of exceptional gravity. I am to inform you that the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs entirely concurs in the expressions of approval which it has given their Lordships great pleasure to signify in this letter. The despatches will be published in the London Gazette with the names of the officers and men of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines specially recommended.

"My Lords cannot conclude without expressing their deep regret at the casualties which have occurred amongst the officers and men in the various engagements and operations, especially at the valuable lives which have been lost to Her Majesty's Service, notably that of Capt. H. T. R. Lloyd, R.M.L.I., mentioned favourably on several occasions; and I am to add that they have caused expressions of sympathy to be conveyed to the relatives of those who have fallen. "I am, &c.,

"EVAN MACGREGOR."

The Russian force in the Far East is to receive a large accession of strength, which will certainly demand a considerable addition to our China squadron. The battleships Poltava and Sevastopol will leave Kronstadt towards the end of the month, accompanied by the destroyers Som, Kit, Skat, Dolphin, and Kosatka. Upon the arrival of this reinforcement, Russia will have five battleships, as compared with our three, and, if the French fleet be added to the Russian in those waters, we shall be completely outnumbered in all the important classes. France and Russia will also have regained their advantage over Germany. This is only one of the questions that will engross the attention of Mr. Goschen's successor. The truth is that the naval situation in the Far East is disquieting, and that the balance must be redressed, if we are to dream of maintaining our position in China. It is a situation fraught with danger and that cannot be grappled too soon.

When Admiral Fournier gave up the command of the French Mediterranean squadron he extolled the unlimited goodwill, the indefatigable endurance, and the incessant efforts of all with whom he had been associated, and he described them as true sons of France, tried seamen, consummate in evolutions, and warriors ready for action, saying he handed over to Admiral de Maigret a squadron in a perfect state of training, practised in all exercises, and prepared for all the eventualities of combat, as for all the sacrifices which the country might demand, and animated by the best spirit of discipline and patriotism. And when Admiral de Maigret hoisted his flag on board the Saint Louis he declared that his best efforts and constant object would be to maintain the squadron in the high degree of training and discipline in which he found it.

The French Ministers of War and Marine left Paris together on Wednesday in order to visit the coasts of Corsica and Tunis. They were timed to leave Toulon on Thursday afternoon, and to arrive at Ajaccio yesterday. They will visit Bonifacio and Porto Vecchio, and will spend three days next week at Biserta and on the coast of Tunis, while M. de Lanessan, on his return, will pay special visits to certain places in the north of Corsica. He will be accompanied by Admiral Bienaimé, Chief of the Naval Staff. The Saint Louis was placed at the service of the Ministers, with an escort of the Gaulois, Bouvet, Chanzy, Galilée, and Hallebarde. The object is to investigate the defensive conditions of Corsica and Tunis. At the beginning of the year the Government presented to the Legislature proposals for certain defensive works, and that for the improvement of the ports was adopted by the Chamber, with an amendment giving the Government six million francs more than it had asked for. This sum will enable the mobile defences to be better organised, but will not suffice for the creation of a Corsican port, which would shelter the fleet from the enterprises of an enemy, and Bonifacio, though admirably sheltered, is not at all commodious. It is understood that the Ministers will arrive at some conclusion as to what should be done. At Biserta a transverse mole is to be built, and the canal and gullet are to be widened, while a mobile defence will be organised in the bay Sans Nom.

The Russian Navy Estimates for the year 1901 amount to a total of 97,097,666 roubles, being an increase of 10,469,651 roubles upon those of the current year. A sum of 60,000,000 roubles falls under the head of ordinary expenditure, being for pay, maintenance, &c., while it is estimated that the increase of the Navy will absorb an outlay of 16,000,000 roubles, the harbour works at Libau 3,000,000, those at Vladivostok 2,000,000, and those at Port Arthur 3,000,000. The harbour at Libau is being greatly improved, and is intended in great degree to take the place of Kronstadt.

The visit of British ships to Bar Harbour was the occasion for a very exuberant interchange of international courtesy and for the expression of much good fellowship. A banquet and a smoking concert were given at the Hotel Redich on September 8 by the American petty officers to their fellows of the same rank in the British fleet, and there were 460 guests from the ships and the shore. The New York furnished a band, and the Massachusetts and the Texas vocal quartettes, while a piper appeared from the Crescent. "Everything was sailor-fashion and very military." The first part of the evening was filled with dancing and singing, and officers with their wives began to arrive at about ten o'clock. There was huge cheering when the British officers were announced, and they were greeted with boatswains' calls and with the sounds of "God save the Queen!" The health of her Majesty was drunk, as was that of President McKinley. The speech of Lieut. Dillingham, of the Indiana, punctuated with applause, deserves to be quoted:—

"I am proud to-night to extend a welcome to the English fleet and more especially to its petty officers, don't yer know. I am now addressing the representatives of two great navies, and the only two volunteer navies in this world—England and America. It is a comfort to be able to speak and be understood without being worn out with gestures trying to be. We all speak English. Never has there been such a demonstration of friendly feeling in this country before, but let us hope that these Anglo-American meetings will be frequent. Our interest is one! Our cause is one! Your brother and mine, my dear English cousins, are even to-day fighting shoulder to shoulder; and when one falls the other picks him up. Why, only Wednesday last one of our men captured a Boer flag right here in Bar Harbour! And it was all done for you. As I look over this gathering of bronzed faces to-night it brings to my mind two sayings: England expects every man to do his duty, and damn the torpedoes, go ahead. Put the power of these two countries together and the Powers of the world could not jar us."

On the next day about 1,000 men were ashore from the British ships for church, while the Americans, out of 2,000, mustered only about twelve. Out of the hundreds of sailors ashore, there was not a single squabble regarding race, and British and American seamen paraded the promenade arm-in-arm. The Army and Navy Journal exclaims, "Let Anglo-American feeling grow until we shall be one people, one country, and one God."

It appears that during some recent operations at Newport, U.S.A., the submarine boat Holland claimed to have torpedoed the battleship Kearsarge. The umpiring board has disallowed the claim, on the technical ground that the Kearsarge had withdrawn from the blockade which had been in progress at the time when the submarine attack was made. The blockaded squadron was making a night attack upon the blockaders, and the Kearsarge, under the impression that she had been torpedoed by the Dahlgren, was making for the entrance to the harbour with all her lights showing, when she was attacked by the submarine boat. The operations seem to have been interesting, for on the previous night the blockading squadron had successfully run in past the forts, as was admitted by the umpires, and the Stiletto had torpedoed the Massachusetts. When the torpedo boats went out on the next night to attack the blockaders they were, in the main, unsuccessful, and all were considered to have been sunk except the Gwin, which torpedoed both the Scorpion and the Eagle. Again with the Rogers and Morris, she attacked the Kearsarge, which put all three assailants out of action. It was after this that the incident with the Holland took place.

SIERRA LEONE MEDALS.

Notice is given in last night's Gazette that the medals and clasps awarded to the naval force engaged in the late operations in Sierra Leone are ready for issue. The award is limited to those officers, seamen, and marines of the Alecto, Blonde, and Fox, who during 1898 were actually landed for military operations, or who took part in the boat expeditions up rivers under fire. These include:—(1) The officers and men who took part in the boat expedition to Lokko on March 5. (2) The landing parties and boat expeditions from the Blonde, in the Sherbro District, between May 1 and 15. (3) The parties landed by the boats of the Alecto and Blonde, during the Boom Kittam River Expedition, on May 16. (4) The parties landed by the boats of the Fox, with the Colonial boat Countess of Derby, in the expedition up the Brempe River, May 11 to 14. The medal is the same pattern as that issued for the Ashantee War, with a clasp inscribed "Sierra Leone, 1898-9," and those officers and men already in possession of the medal will receive the clasp only.

BULLER ON HIMSELF.

IT must be clear to all who have read Sir Redvers Buller's speech at Natal this week that he does not mean to sit silent under the criticisms so freely, and often so recklessly, passed upon his conduct during the war. What he said at Pietermaritzburg he will say again in England, and more. A story was told the other day in one of the periodicals that Buller's abuse of the Government so choked the telegraph wires last autumn that no news could come home. We have now from his own lips something like a serious endorsement of this story. "I landed at Cape Town a general without an army." He was faced with a situation more difficult than any general with an army had ever encountered. The Boers held both the main avenues into the Orange State, Kimberley was beleaguered, Ladysmith was on the eve of close investment, by which nearly the whole of the British troops in the colony would be shut in. There remained in Cape Colony only two and a-half infantry battalions, with one cavalry regiment, and in Natal, south of the Tugela, only two battalions and some local Volunteers. The Army Corps which was thought by our Government sufficient to cope with the Boer revolt was still on the sea, in part still in England. The arms most essential for the prosecution of the campaign, the cavalry and the guns, were to be the very last to embark, and, as we know, were quite the last to arrive. Such were the conditions under which Buller assumed command and was called upon to deal instantly with a tremendous crisis. He decided boldly, and to his immense credit, to throw himself into the breach and concentrate his efforts upon the defence of Natal. He did not dare wait, so he told his listeners at Pietermaritzburg. "What would have happened in Natal," he asked, them during the twelve weeks while his forces were crossing the ocean? "What would have happened to the British Empire in South Africa?" Natal must have been entirely overrun, and the Boers, once in possession of the whole colony, would have been more difficult to dislodge than from Ladysmith, while their triumph might have had a disastrous influence on the current of European opinion. It was a forlorn hope, but Buller led it cheerfully, well knowing, nevertheless, that if he failed in his first attempt to relieve Ladysmith he would lose the supreme command. He tried, and failed, and was superseded, "and I think rightly." The words are his own.

No one can hear Buller's self-vindication without admitting its force, or according him ample and ungrudging sympathy. The problem, which was none of his creating, was onerous in the extreme, yet he grappled with it courageously: "I had taken it on, and I was bound to see it through." So fully did he appreciate it and the issues involved, personal as well as public, that he would not devolve the command upon anyone else, although an eminent soldier, his old friend and colleague, Sir Evelyn Wood, had generously volunteered to serve under him, and take over the Natal command. This is the first authentic confirmation of the report current last year that Wood, although Buller's senior, had expressed his readiness to serve under him. "I never was so tempted in my life to take any one at his word," Buller says. But he declined the offer. He thought it would be "a cowardly thing to let Sir Evelyn Wood come here and take the risk while I was in great anxiety myself." Buller had put his hand to the plough, and he did not turn aside. He found himself faced with a new problem, based upon circumstances that were altogether unforeseen, and which had risen into menacing proportions while he was on the voyage. The plans he had made before he left England—the direct advance across the Orange River upon Bloemfontein, which he had realised was the only true line of campaign—had become impossible, or appeared impossible in the pressing dangers of the hour. Buller might have been misled as to the nearness of that danger, which was undoubtedly exaggerated, as the result proved, for Ladysmith and Kimberley both displayed unexpected powers of defence. But he must be upheld in the decision he made, not because it was absolutely necessary, but because it seemed unquestionably so in the knowledge available at the time. It is but common justice to credit Buller with the best intentions, if nothing more. Yet he deserves far more than this, and the proper appreciation of the work he carried through will yet be forthcoming when the history of the war is calmly and dispassionately written. Buller himself appeals to it for a verdict which will assuredly be in his favour.

THE DOVER COURT-MARTIAL.

THE general satisfaction expressed at the acquittal of Lieut. à Beckett sufficiently shows the heartfelt interest that was taken in the Dover trial. There was something so sordid in the offence charged; such a suggestion of meanness surrounded the measures taken to vamp up the case; above all, the central figure was so interesting, so young, so gallant, so unsuspecting, we might have been so irreparably ruined but for the sound, sterling common sense of the Court-martial that the result was everywhere accepted with a sense of the deepest relief. But surely the episode cannot end with the acquittal of the accused. There is more to come out. It is said that Master-Gunner Acheson has applied for a Court-martial to clear himself of the imputations cast upon his conduct. This cannot, must not be, refused. We must still endeavour to solve a mystery which is still inscrutable. There was a plot, of that we cannot have the smallest doubt. Who originated it, and why? It was a poor, flimsy plot too, clumsily contrived and foolishly carried out. It would never have served against anyone less inexperienced, who, in his frank honesty, gave such chances to his enemies. A youngster who made no attempt to secure his room from intrusion, who left his clothes about with money and keys in the pockets, who thought no evil of anyone—here was a victim fair game for any designing villain. We have here temptation enough to encourage conspiracy with the small chance of detection. But still, the hidden motives have to be exposed, and it is surely the bounden duty of the authorities, from the Commander-in-Chief to the battery commander, to spare no effort in reading the riddle. Possibly—very probably—the new Court-martial may let in the light upon this most mysterious affair.

The procedure of Courts-martial generally has been brought in question by some of our civilian contemporaries, who speak a little too lightly of these old-fashioned tribunals. Yet those better acquainted with them claim, and rightly, that the Court-martial is the fairest Court in the world. It may be that they do not always serve justice by ensuring conviction even in pretty clear cases. But there is seldom a miscarriage to the extent that the innocent suffer, even though the guilty may escape. They may fail in the absence of quickcross-examination, but the truth is generally elicited, even without the aid of eminent counsel. As for the present system of canteen keeping which made this prosecution possible, we have already expressed an opinion strongly adverse to its continuance. To revert to the old practice of contract, of letting the canteens to tenants who might make what they could out of them, would be retrograde. The soldier would suffer very materially, not only in the quality of the goods supplied, but in the loss of a share in profits which is at present a very substantial boon. But if canteens are to be managed regimentally, as many advise, on the grounds that the advantage preponderates, then the work should be entrusted to officers other than those on the active list. They could be found, just as the directors of co-operative stores are found, and if wisely chosen they might be expected to achieve the same measure of success as the stores.

THE GUERRILLA WAR.

WITH extraordinary persistency the guerilla war is now being carried on in all parts of the Orange River and the Transvaal Colonies. Lord Roberts's words when addressing the over-sea Colonial contingents and the South African Light Horse at Pretoria, on Monday, aptly describes the position. He told them that "Though the war, as war, was over, important work still remained which greatly required their continued services." Whether we turn to the north, south, east or west, the tale is the same. Fighting is reported from all quarters, and although, as we should expect, victory remains with our troops, a certain amount of loss is almost invariably incurred by us. Lord Roberts on Monday reported that a part of the country south of the railway, in the direction of Heidelberg, not hitherto reached by his columns, was being cleared by General French with the 1st and 4th Cavalry Brigades. General Mahon, with the Mounted Infantry portion of the column, was sharply engaged on Saturday, and although the enemy were defeated the British loss was unfortunately severe, including three officers and eight men killed, with many more wounded. On Sunday Carolina was occupied for the second time in the campaign by French, the Carbineers capturing a Boer convoy on the march. General Lyttelton, to whom Sir Redvers Buller handed over his command on leaving Lydenburg, has also himself marched out of that place, and is moving on Middleburg. Lydenburg being an important strategic point in the heart of an almost impregnable mountainous country has, no doubt, been left effectively garrisoned. The reoccupation by the Boers of towns the capture of which cost us many arduous days, and sometimes heavy losses, is thoroughly unsatisfactory. It will at the same time be apparent that to prevent it in all parts the small British garrisons posted throughout the conquered territories must be almost multiplied indefinitely. General Rundle was engaged on the 11th in driving off a party of Boers who attacked General Campbell's convoy while marching southwards from Standerton to Vrede, when the enemy suffered some loss in wounded. Seventy Boers were met by a patrol of Australian Bushmen near Ottorshoop, further west, on the 12th. There was slight loss on each side, but the result was, as usual, indecisive, as the enemy vacated their position next day. Both the intention and the tactics of the Boers now seem to be to harass the army of occupation to the utmost, and to gain time, hoping against hope for some European or American turn to take place in favour of their cause. To meet and defeat this there is but one effective plan: that of concentrating considerable forces and placing mutually supporting garrisons in all places of importance, more especially along the railways, while lightly equipped mounted columns of sufficient strength continually scour the country in all directions. At the same time the operations should be supported by making it widely known that after a certain date all men taken in arms will be treated as rebels, and dealt with in the sternest manner. At Bloemhof, near the western border, General Settle, who is moving along the east of the Kimberley-

Mafeking railway, captured fifty prisoners, and then moved on Hoopstad. This part of the country was traversed some months ago by Lord Methuen's column, when acting in support of the extreme left flank of Lord Roberts's advance from Bloemfontein. General Kelly-Kenny has reported a skirmish on Saturday near Jagersfontein, in the south of the Orange River Colony, and on the day following the Boers got into the town and a sharp fight ensued. Again, far away to the east, near Vryheid, our troops have been active. Bethune's Mounted Infantry, turning the tables on the enemy, who, during Buller's advance from Ladysmith, entrapped them and caused them heavy loss, prepared an ambush into which a commando fell blindly, with the result that it was entirely wiped out. Sixty were killed, thirty-five wounded, and sixty-five made prisoners. So decisive a success has rarely been scored during the war, and it will, without doubt, materially aid General Hildyard in the pacification of the eastern districts of the Transvaal.

General Louis Botha is reported to have had a conference of his commandants on the 12th inst., on the Olifants River, where the new Republic has its ephemeral existence, to discuss the advisability of abandoning the fruitless struggle. Large surrenders may in consequence shortly take place, but we have never found any great result following the reports of expected surrenders. Moreover, there is no conclusive evidence to show that the various marauding bodies are acting in concert and in conformity with any settled plan. While Botha, in a vacillating mood, holds out near Pietersburg, De Wet engages and nonplusses our columns south of the Vaal, acting with energy and determination. At the same time, scouts are stated to have located two commandoes, numbering respectively 200 and 1,200 men, in the Kroonstad district, intent on mischief, and small marauding bands infest the vicinity of Vryburg on the western main line, looting and plundering. De Wet is said to have 2,000 volunteers with him, and to be determined to continue guerilla warfare until he receives orders to desist from Mr. Kruger, who is no longer in South Africa. It is also stated that there is still ammunition in the country for another year's operations. If that be true it is evident that a very wide distribution of ammunition in varying amounts has been made throughout the country in anticipation of such warfare, showing the necessity for a very careful and thorough search from house to house for both ammunition and arms.

Sir Redvers Buller reached Pietermaritzburg on Tuesday, and was received with acclamation by the people, who, in the sincerity and ardour of their appreciation of his splendid work, styled him the "Saviour of Natal." With the general state of affairs so capricious in the new Colonies there will be many delicate and important matters for the Commander-in-Chief to arrange with the Generals who are to remain behind him before he quits South Africa to assume his new duties in Pall Mall. Generals Hutton, Wavell, and Chermiside are on their way home. Others will probably shortly follow, and we shall watch with much interest the development of any scheme that may be formed and put in execution with a reduced garrison and Baden-Powell's Police for effectually and finally dealing with the marauding bands and their stubborn leaders, and bringing back to the distracted country the peace it so sorely needs.

An impression prevails, and it is growing rapidly, based upon the protests of men upon the spot, that undue leniency is being shown to the Boers still in arms. This leniency has, in fact, characterised the whole of the later phases of the campaign. From the day that Bloemfontein was occupied a tender consideration, which was altogether misplaced, has been shown to the enemy. His feelings have been uniformly spared, his mock surrender accepted, implicit belief has been placed in the word of the most lying and deceitful people upon earth. We have read the results in the many humiliations this over-confidence has entailed. It was the belief that the country was pacified that brought on the disaster of Sanna's Post; Gatacre's fiasco at Reddersburg was really due to the same cause, and many other incidents might be quoted to emphasise the argument. There must be an end of this, or the war, which is now no more than organised brigandage, will linger on indefinitely. Lord Roberts still postpones his departure in the belief that he cannot yet be spared, and with the desire, laudable enough, to finish the work he has carried so near the end. But the question has been mooted whether the job should not be passed on now to someone less considerate, less compassionate, less averse to those firm, vigorous, even harsh, measures which must yet be put in force. The opinion is largely held at the theatre of war that Lord Kitchener, if given a free hand, would make much shorter work of this vexatiously prolonged and yet perfectly futile opposition.

THE FUTURE OF THE WAR OFFICE.

SOME strange rumours have been current this week as to the future of the War Office. The most important, although not necessarily the most authentic, is that Lord Lansdowne will remain at the head of the office. This is a branch of the generally accepted belief that there will be few changes in the Cabinet. If it should prove to be the case it says much for Lord Salisbury's loyalty to his colleagues, for the decision will not be cheerfully or enthusiastically endorsed by the nation at large. Lord Lansdowne may have been rather unfairly and ungenerously attacked; he has been made the scapegoat for shortcomings that ought to have been visited upon the system and not upon its chief exponent. But it was unfortunate that a department called to deal with such tremendous issues should have been in the hands of a statesman like Lord Lansdowne—a minute, painstaking, but still small-minded man who has never been famous for breadth of view, who has shown an unhappy knack of yielding up his judgment and submitting his action to some trusty subordinate who commands his confidence. This was shown repeatedly in India, and when the secret history of the past year comes to be written we shall hear of the preponderating influence of minor people whose names at present are hardly known outside Pall Mall. A minister so constituted will never attack the task of Army Reform on that comprehensive basis which will alone satisfy the public. It might be otherwise if Lord Lansdowne would choose as his confidant and alter ego the person best fitted, the most entitled, to guide or lead him. The Commander-in-Chief is that person, and with Lord Roberts in Pall Mall the continuance of Lord Lansdowne in office might be productive of some good. They have been associated before, and it is well known to all old Indians that Lord Roberts has ever been the predominant partner; Lord Lansdowne has looked to him, and trusted him implicitly. We might hope that under the new combination the same result would be seen. The War Minister would be nominally in the ascendant, but the Commander-in-Chief would practically rule. Under such conditions, with the military element supreme although not officially recognised as such, many salutary changes and improvements might soon be introduced into the military machine.

Army Notes.

We have been hearing a little too much of Mr. Hales, the Australian war correspondent, who has been roundly abusing our officers on the strength of his South African experience. The truth is prejudice has destroyed a clever journalist's insight. He forgets that the British soldier, led by the British officer, has, during the present century, fought his way round the globe empire-building, and, during the eighteenth century, his greatest victories were turning points in the history of three continents. Moreover, Mr. Hales forgets the silent but eloquent testimony of those races with which we have come in contact. If the British officer is "foolish," "conceited," "empty," and altogether a poor creature, how is it that he can transform the most unpromising material into soldiers, and lead Asiatics anywhere? At Kars Williams, with Turkish troops, made one of the finest defences of the century. At Herat with Persians, at Canton with Chinese, at Omdurman with Egyptians, English officers have led the way to victory. At Kumasi, the other day, they so inspired Haussas and Yorubas that they died of sickness and starvation without a murmur, and charged the Ashantis again and again with the bayonet. And it must be remembered that this supreme gift is shared by the average British officer as well as by the greatest British general. It is pre-eminently the mark of a ruling race. Some day when Mr. Hales has discovered things that are now hidden from him, he may be a little more generous in his estimate of the British officer.

The return published by the Treasury showing the number of public appointments open to reserve and retired soldiers calls for attentive consideration just now, when so many men returning from South Africa will be candidates for employment. In the first place, it is evident that, while an urgent appeal is made to the patriotism of private persons to provide for deserving soldiers, the dispensers of patronage in regard to public appointments can hardly be said to behave with much liberality to them. Except as regards the wardships of prisons, or the attendants of criminal lunatic asylums, the park keepers and—partially—appointments in the War Office, hardly anything has been done for retired soldiers. Take a large department like that of the Post Office; he figures stand thus: The postmen in London, Edinburgh and Dublin reach a total of 6,691, of whom only 301 are old soldiers; in the provinces there are 1,891 out of a total of 23,746. Again, in the Metropolitan Police only 2,244 are employed out of 13,276 constables. These are the largest figures; but on sifting the return further we find that there are few office-keepers as messengers in the public offices except at the War Office who have been in the Army, and this also applies to the Patent Office, the Paymaster-General's Office, the Privy Council Office, the Record Office, Registrar-General's Office, and many more. There are forty-one messengers in the South Kensington Science and Art Department, yet room has been found for only one old soldier. In the Treasury not one is employed amongst twenty messengers. In the War Office, certainly, 108 figure as soldiers out of 110 messengers. But neither the Army Clothing Department nor the Ordnance Store Department can find room for more than half in their regular establishment. We may commend the subject to Members of Parliament who are interested in recruiting and the cognate subject of helping Reservists and old soldiers to civil employment.

Some remarks in the letter of an army medical officer of rank, who served through some of the worst episodes of the Boer war, are worth quoting:—

"I am glad," he writes, "that I went to De Aar, as I was able thus to see something of the hospitals in South Africa. De Aar was originally a hospital for 100 beds, but it was expanded to 400 when the outbreak of enteric fever occurred. The accommodation was very good, and the equipment ample and excellent. There were lots of bed-cots, wire mattresses, bedding, &c., &c. Major Perry Marsh organised the hospital and died of enteric himself. I saw the Yeomanry Hospital at Dielfontein. It was got up regardless of expense, and was splendidly equipped, but I was informed that they refused to take patients for a considerable time after they got to Dielfontein—in fact, till they got a most elaborate hospital erected. A great deal has been written about our corps in South Africa. I think we shall come out all right at the inquiry. It is a shame that officers, N.C.O.'s, and men should be abused as they have been. Of 35 N.C.O.'s and men nine died of enteric and 13 were invalided for the same disease, and yet our men have been abused in the public prints as if they were thieves. The fact is the sick men have become demoralised by the enormous numbers of gifts that have been sent out. At De Aar the patients got every luxury, both as regards food and warm clothes, and yet they kept clamouring for more. I used to go round daily with the Quartermaster issuing warm things, and I frequently found men putting down for things who had got complete sets a few days before. I was told that lots of the things were sold to the natives, and I believe it is quite true. Tommy Atkins knows that all he has to do is tell some foolish and meddling visitor that he wants more warm clothes, whereupon he gets them, and yet very likely next day a long letter appears in the local press."

At last, after the lapse of more than a year, effect is given in part to the recommendations of Sir Redvers Buller's Departmental Committee on Army Punishments. The report was submitted in July last, and now such of its suggestions as could be adopted without legislation are embodied in the Queen's Regulations. They bear principally upon the shortening of imprisonment and of the penalty of confinement to barracks. No soldier who is intended to serve on is to be sentenced to more than six months; where the offence is so serious or so often repeated as to need more exemplary punishment discharge from the Army should be also meted out. All who have to adjudicate upon offences in their first stage are urged to discriminate between such as are due to "youth, temper, or unaccustomed surroundings" and those showing premeditation to misconduct. All this points to increased leniency and a more humane system of discipline; yet by a strange neglect soldiers are just now being exposed to the contamination of civil gaols to an extent that is altogether wrong. It has always been held that no man who is to rejoin the colours should enter the same place of penitence as the ordinary criminal. At this very moment, however, according to the report of the Prisons Commissioners for the current year, there are numbers of soldiers in civil gaols, all of whom are to return to their regiments. It is clear to us that either the military prisons are too few and too small or that imprisonment is still very largely imposed upon military offenders.

The cavalry arm has attracted deep and widespread attention in the South African war, and its future, as regards men, horses, and equipment, is of national importance. There can be no sort of doubt that at present the weight of rider and harness is a great deal more than the average cavalryman's mount can cope with if our mounted forces, that is to say, are to be of real service. Whether this is the fault of the equipment, the amount of dead weight that the horse has to carry, or whether it is that the wrong class of animal is utilised, may not yet be exactly determined. Perhaps both causes are in a measure responsible. To the former evil, however, there is a remedy. Sir Walter Gilbey, who knows his subject as do few others, has written a little book entitled "Small Horses in Warfare," in which he condemns the class of animal we have used hitherto. In his opinion, a rougher, harder, and possibly a smaller horse, is what is wanted, and until this class of beast is bred for Government purposes we shall, in all probability, continue to hear of horses "being so exhausted that their riders had, literally, to flog them along with their sabres." To the former question no answer has yet been given. A committee which sat on the subject at Bloemfontein might just as well not have sat at all. No practicable way could be suggested for lessening the cruel load which a charger is called upon to bear to-day. Many maintain that the cavalry soldier is over-armed, and so far as the lancer is concerned this argument gains force. Again, the removal of the sword would lighten the total weight considerably, although in view of meeting European cavalry in the future the sword cannot well be dispensed with before it is given up abroad. Again, artillery horses have been terribly overworked in this war. It is a growing belief with many that before long it will be necessary for each field gun to have two carts in attendance instead of one, as at present. Thus the weight of gun and limber could be diminished, and much of the men's equipment also could be carried in the carts. Similarly in the cavalry, each squadron might well be furnished with a number of light two-wheeled carts, specially constructed, in which about half of their equipment might be borne that they now carry on their saddles. But this is looking far ahead, perhaps; also, the cost would be serious. Still something must be done.

Much evidence is forthcoming as to Army remounts. The horses available are, in fact, too coarsely fed, and were often found at the Cape to lack the courage and endurance needed to face a prolonged and arduous campaign. A first step towards mending this must obviously be to improve the quality of our horseflesh. The Committee of the Hunters Improvement Society has just drawn up a series of recommendations which are now before General Truman, the Inspector-General of Remounts, and which can be strongly recommended for adoption. These include the provision of brood mares from cast chargers to farmers and others, the option to purchase approved three year olds which would be left with their breeders on a Government payment, and the granting of premiums as an encouragement to raise good stock. Another still more important measure does not seem to find favour, and this is the provision of high-class sires throughout the country for general use as required. At present the shire horses available are not always of the best, nor easy to come by, and it should be the business of Government to remedy the defect. In other countries, notably in Hungary, where the feeding of horses has been developed largely, this principle has been adopted with excellent results. It may be noted that Hungary affords a very wide field for horse purchase, and it was largely drawn upon by our remount agents during the War. The Hunters' Improvement Society does not approve of Government breeding establishments, or of establishing great remount depôts. The greatest care must be taken not to interfere with private enterprise in the matter of horse breeding. It is an industry already on the wane and anything like Government competition would kill it.

Well-grounded complaint exists that our artillery in India is to a large extent deficient in the newest appliances of matériel. To remedy this it is decided that at the end of the South African War the two batteries R.H.A. and the three batteries R.F.A., lent from India for the Boer War, will take back with them a full equipment of the latest pattern. This will include 12cwt. wire guns, with a complete spade and tray system. The three new field batteries belonging to the next Indian relief, and proceeding from South Africa, will also be completely equipped, while it is said that the siege train in South Africa will be handed over to the Indian authorities, as well as the 4.7 guns sent to China from the Cape.

The result of Lord Rayleigh's Committee on High Explosives is anxiously awaited. It is generally believed that, as regards cordite, the Committee will recommend some modifications to the extent of adopting a smokeless powder which will contain less nitro-glycerine. It is known that the present smokeless powder has many advantages, chiefly that of a greatly increased muzzle velocity, which ensures a greater flatness of trajectory and greater penetrating power, but it exposes the guns to excessive erosion. It is because the wear and tear is so great with the present mark of cordite that artillerists are in favour of a change. The future use of lyddite must also come under the consideration of the Committee. No doubt this high explosive produced disappointing results in South Africa; much, too much, perhaps, was expected from it, although it must have been well known that lyddite does not develop its full power except when used in guns of heavier calibre than we had in the field against the Boers. Even in 5in. howitzers and 4.7 guns lyddite is said to have behaved indifferently. It is asserted that not more than one shell in four actually detonated. The others merely exploded with consequences that were by no means destructive. The inference is that the lyddite shell will in future be employed for special purposes and not against all kinds of targets. It has not proved itself highly valuable against entrenchments, or on soft ground, and there is Boer evidence to show that beyond the alarm caused by the hideous noise, little mischief was done them by lyddite shells.

In one respect only have the recent French military manœuvres brought to light any novelty in the way of matériel. Though for some years past automobiles have been discussed and tried with a view to their adoption for military purposes, it has yet been reserved for the year 1900 to witness the sight of a general of France—not forgetting his staff and his orderlies—careering along his line in a motor-car. The speed to be obtained by a good vehicle along a moderate road is as high as thirty miles an hour; but whether this rate will be required when a commander moves in person, whether, even, it will be necessary for him to cover any great distance when his force is engaging an enemy, and, if so whether a good road will always be found leading direct to his destination, must be both doubtful and questionable. A ploughed field, a wall or hedge, even a diminutive ditch, may easily paralyse the swiftest automobile. Yet it is certain that the automobile is likely to be of the greatest service at certain times and places, although it can never altogether replace the four-footed beast. But for traction the motor may be quite invaluable, and both with guns and waggons. It has been pointed out by Sir F. Maurice, in his report on the late cyclist manœuvres in the Brighton neighbourhood, that a contingent of 2,000 cyclists cannot be adequately commanded by an officer mounted on a bicycle, as he cannot thus cover the great extent of ground that would be taken up in such operations. "I am quite certain," he says, "that no one could look after the effective training of 2,000 cyclists unless he was on a motor." He had at his disposal a beautiful Ariel machine, and he was able at pleasure to run from rear to front of the moving cyclists so as to direct movements and correct mistakes. It may be noted here in regard to automobiles that General Miles, who commands the army of the United States, has again recommended them for employment. He has reported that when the automobile is perfected it will grow in favour, and that he believes it will become a valuable acquisition to the army.

SOUTH AFRICAN RE-EMBARKATION.

The War Office announces that the order in which the troops will return from South Africa will depend entirely on military exigencies, and will be mainly based on the proportion of the various arms which the military authorities on the spot consider necessary to restore tranquillity. As soon as it is decided that any particular unit is to return home a notification to that effect will be published. No information can be given nor can letters on the subject be answered prior to such notification. Every endeavour will be made, consistent with military requirements, to bring back, as soon as they can be spared, all soldiers due to return to civil life, so as to enable them to resume their civil employment, which has, in many cases, been kept open for them by their patriotic employers; but individual cases cannot be exceptionally treated. Applications for soldiers to be allowed furloughs in order to resume their civil employment should be addressed to, and will be dealt with by, the soldier's commanding officer.

CYCLIST training still proceeds at Aldershot. Two new sections have been formed for training. The instruction is to be developed later when matters settle down at the camp once more, as it is hoped they will do by spring.

GIBRALTAR.—BRISTOL HOTEL.—First-class. Situated in the centre of the town. With a garden. Every modern comfort and best sanitary arrangements. Quiet situation.

ARMY REORGANISATION.

At the present juncture all questions touching the reorganisation of the Army, as well as the reform of the War Office, merge themselves of necessity in the still weightier problem of Imperial defence. The satisfactory solution of this problem should present no insuperable difficulties to a strong Government determined to safe-guard the Empire, and to provide for its expansion, provided always that the country has the good fortune to possess in the Secretary of State for War, and in the Commander-in-Chief, for the time being, men working in thorough harmony with each other, besides having the qualifications, respective powers, and status best calculated to equip them for their high functions.

We have watched with interest for the utterances of leading statesmen on this important subject during the electoral campaign, and have been disappointed by the general vagueness, and the apparent want of appreciation of its magnitude manifested by the speakers. Mr. Wyndham, Under-Secretary of State for War, has, however, explained at some length the difficulties and defects of our present military system. His speeches have not always been commensurate with the scope and importance of the subject, although interesting in many details. We agree with him in viewing the matter as one rather of military defence than of Army reform, because the efficiency of the armed forces of the Crown is but the condition precedent of effective military defence. What is needed is not to throw the whole military machine once more into the melting-pot, in the hope of turning out something altogether different, but rather to properly utilise, expand, and instruct the excellent materials—Regular, Auxiliary, and Colonial—that the Empire possesses in ample abundance. To military men this assertion may appear to be a truism, but we make it here because in certain quarters the opinion is prevalent that rottenness pervades our entire War Office and Army systems, and that our sole hope of safety lies in a clean slate and a fresh start.

The Under-Secretary for War is reported to have said that, "the first duty of the Army is to garrison naval stations; the second to give military defence to India and Egypt." We hardly think the description adequate, and would prefer to say that the first duty of the land forces of the Crown is to defend the Fatherland against all comers, and the second to guard the Empire's interests throughout the world, both being performed in conjunction with the Navy. This definition covers the entire ground of our responsibilities, and includes the defence of all naval stations, India, and Egypt, which, however important in themselves, are but parts of the whole.

Passing to the consideration of the wants of the Army at home Mr. Wyndham asserted, and in this we are entirely in accord with him, that what is needed is not more drill for men or officers, but more military experience to be gained during manœuvres carried out, as far as possible, under modern field-service conditions. This he contended would require the acquisition of largely increased areas for training, under the Manœuvres Act which came into force two years ago. He especially emphasised the importance of fostering professional ambition in the officers of all ranks, from generals in command downwards, and frankly confessed that not even enhanced emoluments and reduced expenditure would suffice to attract men of the highest capacity to the commissioned ranks of the Service unless proper facilities were afforded to the officers for the effective practice of their profession.

In illustration of the limitation imposed by population upon any great expansion of the regular forces in the United Kingdom, he referred to the published opinion of a well known writer that a home army, one of greater efficiency, and numbering 100,000 regulars, should constantly be maintained. In the Nineteenth Century Magazine for October, Mr. St. John Brodrick has directed some trenchant criticism against amateur reformers. He is even bold enough to attribute our recent shortcomings to errors of judgment on the part of amateur military experts in high places, and holds that no less exalted a body than the so-called "Committee of Defence" is a typical example of amateur administration. There is undoubtedly some truth in this, and the source of the evil may possibly be found in the fact that the British officer, as a rule, is not professional, and that the training of the army of which he is a member is of too nondescript and impractical a character to produce a race of instructed officers of sound judgment and strong well-grounded views on military matters. Mr. Wyndham by a reference to numbers showed this proposed home army to be impracticable, as it would add to the establishment 100,000 men, which the country could not produce and maintain of the proper age.

Touching upon the practical working of our existing system Mr. Wyndham considered that in respect of numbers produced, and elementary training, the soundness of the general plan followed by Lord Wolseley had been proved. This plan was to use the home Army as the machine for raising, and as the school for training the drafts required to maintain the Army abroad, supplementing it in cases of great emergency by calling out the Reserves. That plan be claimed to have fulfilled during the recent war, in respect of numbers, all the expectations of its authors, Lord Cardwell and Lord Wolseley. Bearing in mind, however, the assistance rendered by the over-sea colonies, an unexpected asset when the war commenced, and also the denuded state of the United Kingdom in respect of mature regular troops, caused by the war, this statement is fairly open to criticism. It leaves out of account, moreover, the general condition of unpreparedness at the outbreak of the war, of which the country is firmly convinced. In natural sequence, Mr. Wyndham passed on to the territorial system as foreshadowed by the great statesman, William Pitt, in 1804, who apparently supplied the inspiration that moved Lord Cardwell. Pitt foresaw the territorial system of linked battalions, the second battalions of regiments forming "a second line, a constant supply, and an effective connection between the Army and several counties, by which alone the force of this Empire can be fixed upon a solid and durable foundation." But Pitt went further, and would have added "a battalion, a reserve formed in each district, appropriated for the reception of overplus men, together with those who either from age or size were not judged capable of active service." Had Pitt's views been adopted in their entirety our military system would have been sounder. This is no doubt now Mr. Wyndham's own conviction, since he recognises in the existing regimental depot the nucleus of the third battalion. He would make it the county centre of the territorial system, enlarging and equipping it for the duties of raising and training recruits, and forming and training a reserve of officers. Second battalions could then be set free for the practice of the higher training so much needed, and could take their places in adequate numerical strength in the fighting line, if required. Brigades and divisions for grand manœuvres would become more feasible, and the standing camps would become centres of useful military life.

Mr. Wyndham possesses the courage of his opinions, and is not afraid to face existing difficulties. These he epitomised as, (1) higher training for the home army, (2) recruiting, (3) a proper provision for small wars, and (4) an adequate reserve of officers. This covers much of the ground no doubt, but not the whole. Higher training for the home Army must include that of the auxiliary troops, as well as efficient equipment and armament for all. Recruiting brings under consideration the quota to be furnished for imperial defence by each over-sea colony. Proper provision for small wars means doubtless the holding of a force adequate for small expeditions over-sea in constant readiness for immediate mobilisation, but adequate provision for Imperial defence goes further and embraces also such preparatory measures as are imperative in view of possible participation in great wars. Finally, to obtain officers of the right stamp and in sufficient numbers for all arms, military service must be made more of a profession, pay must be adequate, needless expenses must be kept down, and the peculiar circumstances of the medical branch, as well as of the Militia and Volunteers, must be taken in hand and dealt with in a manner more statesman-like and more considerate. This has now been the rule in Pall Mall, over which the spell and dread of the Treasury seem eternally to hang.

Army Personal.

Field-Marshal Lord Roberts has been gazetted Colonel of the Irish Guards from Colonel Commandant Royal Artillery.

Lord Roberts will hold a grand parade at Pretoria on the 25th inst., and will present Victoria Crosses to several distinguished recipients.

Liverpool is anxious to vie with other large towns in recognising the great services rendered by Lord Roberts in South Africa, and has decided to confer on him the freedom of the borough. Lord Roberts has replied in a telegram:—"Gratefully accept great honour you propose to confer on me. Must leave date at present undecided; but not possible before January." Lord Roberts has agreed to accept the freedom of Southampton on landing.

General Sir Redvers Buller has vacated command of the Natal Field Force and leaves for England to-day. Lord Roberts, in an Army Order, has borne testimony to the value and importance of his work, and thanks him for his "great services" recognising "the ability with which he carried out the operations while serving under his immediate command, which resulted in the collapse of the Boers in the eastern portion of the Transvaal." Lieut.-General the Hon. N. G. Lyttelton, C.B., assumed command of the troops in Natal on the departure of Sir Redvers Buller.

General Sir Francis Grenfell, Governor of Malta, who has been in England on leave, left Victoria on Saturday, en route for Malta. He was accompanied by Major-General and Mrs. J. Ramsay Slade.

The Earl of Albemarle will rejoin the C.I.V.'s on their arrival at Southampton.

Sir William Nicholson, who is returning to England en route for India, to take up his new appointment as member of Council, has done excellent work in South Africa. He was one of those, it will be remembered, who was called to Lord Roberts's side as soon as the Field-Marshal went out in supreme command. There were old and strong ties between Nicholson and his chief, reaching back to the Afghan wars, when they served together, although Nicholson was no more than a captain of Engineers in the Candahar march. He saw other active service in Egypt and in Burmah before he joined Lord Roberts's staff as Military Secretary at Simla. From that time forward his rise was rapid and continuous, until he found himself, at the end of last year, Adjutant-General of the Army in India. It was from this that he passed on to be Military Secretary at the Cape, an appointment which he again vacated to take over the supreme direction in South Africa of the transport in February last. The whole of the transport arrangements were then in the melting pot, as Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener decided to substitute the general system for the regimental, which had hitherto existed. Sir William Nicholson's experience of India is almost unique. He has served there nearly continuously, and in the latter period of Sir William Lockhart's tenure of the post of Commander-in-Chief the bulk of the work fell mainly upon Nicholson. As is well known, Sir William Lockhart's health became very indifferent, and he was unable to attend closely to affairs. Of Sir William Nicholson's ability there can be no question; his is a strong, capable personality, and he will assuredly go far.

A very noticeable figure is removed from London by the death of General J. I. Macdonell, who had long since retired from the active part of his profession, and, indeed, was more distinguished as a social character than by his military record. Although he served in his early days in the Crimea, and then in the operations in the Umbeilah Pass, and again commanded the 71st H.L.I. for many years, he was never a very keen soldier at heart. He was at his best at the mess table or in a club smoking-room, where, with his infinite jest and humour and his extraordinary repertoire of stories, he was the most popular of companions. As a raconteur, he had few rivals, his memory being unusually retentive, and his sense of dramatic effect exceedingly strong. He had lived to a good old age, no doubt through his resolute determination to lead an active life. Wet or fine, he made the circuit of the Park once, possibly twice, a day, and almost to the last was the same cheery, jovial, hearty veteran, with a very keen appreciation of the good things of the table and showing a nice discrimination in dry champagnes. "Pug" Macdonell will not be soon forgotten by the present generation, although few are left who remember the origin of his sobriquet, which came from his skill in the noble art of self-defence.

Hythe is desirous of honouring Major-General Ian Hamilton, who was lately commandant of the local School of Musketry. When the general returns from South Africa it wishes to see his name enrolled among the number of its honorary freemen. The muster roll is not a large one, for at present it contains only one name—that of Sir Edward Watkin, who represented the town 1874-95.

Major-General G. de C. Morton, C.B., will conduct a series of hill manoeuvres in the neighbourhood of Dalhousie during the cold season.

Major-General H. Trotter will resume command of the Home District on November 7, from leave. Meanwhile Colonel H. Ricardo performs the duties.

Brigadier-General A. G. Creagh, C.B., R.A., officiating in command at Umballa, has been appointed to the Peshawur district.

Brigadier-General J. W. T. Hume exchanges the command of a Militia Brigade on Salisbury Plain for the command of the 45th Regimental District, Derby, which appointment he will take up at the end of the year in relief of Colonel J. G. Sparkes.

Colonel Henderson, Professor of Military History at the Staff College, has been appointed Assistant-Adjutant-General at Headquarters for special duties in connection with the war in South Africa. Colonel Henderson's high reputation as a military writer encourages the belief that this appointment may lead to his being entrusted with the great official history of the Boer War, which has yet to be written. The work would naturally fall within the scope of the Intelligence Department, with which Colonel Henderson could be associated.

General Sir Frederick FitzWygram, on whom the Portsmouth Town Council has decided to confer the freedom of the town, has represented the Fareham division in Parliament since 1885. He was at one time colonel of the 15th Hussars, and served in the Crimea with the Inniskilling Dragoons. From 1879 to 1884 he was Inspector-General of Cavalry, and he is a recognised authority on all matters relating to horses, being for three years president of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons.

Colonel W. M. Campbell, R.A., is to be one of the Inspector-Generals of Ordnance in India, under the revised scheme recently approved. His active service includes the Afghan war of 1879-80, during which he took part in the operations around Cabul. He was also attached to the Mahsud Waziri expedition in 1881, and in recent years has been Inspector-General of Ordnance in Bengal.

Latest advices from India are to the effect that the three generals lent for the South African War from India will return at its close to their commands. These are Major-General Tucker, Major-General Sir Archibald Hunter, and Brigadier-General Hector Macdonald. This statement is, in all probability, premature, at least as regards Sir Archibald Hunter, for whom an appointment will probably be found in England. Hector Macdonald may possibly be posted to Peshawur, as Brigadier-General Creagh has been transferred to the command of the Sir-Hind district.

Lord Inchiquin has been appointed to the Hon. Colonelcy of the Clare Artillery, the Southern Division of the Militia Garrison Artillery. Lord Inchiquin, who only succeeded to the peerage last April, formerly served in the Rifle Brigade, and had subsequently been on the Reserve of Officers' list, and for a short time in the present year held a commission in the Royal Rifles Reserve Regiment. His father before him filled the Hon. Colonelcy of the Regiment from 1882 till his death.

We referred last week to the appointment of Lieut.-Colonel W. A. Yule, late of the Royal Scots Fusiliers, to the command of the 21st Regimental District at Ayr, and mentioned that his name had been confused with that of Colonel J. H. Yule, who was in command of the force which made its way from Dundee to Ladysmith after the battle of Glencoe. A question has since been raised by a correspondent of the St. James's Gazette as to who was really in command during the retreat. Some claim that all credit was due to Lieut.-Colonel W. P. Campbell—or Major Campbell, as he then was—of the 1st Batn. King's Royal Rifles. "One Who was There" puts the whole matter right, however, in a letter to the St. James's. To quote this correspondent:—

"Sir,—I notice a letter in your paper of to-day, signed by 'Accurate,' stating that Col. Pitcairn Campbell carried out the successful retreat of the Glencoe Field Force from Dundee to Ladysmith. That it was most successfully carried out is only too true, and that the result of the column getting safely into Ladysmith has never been properly acknowledged by the authorities is, I consider, unfair to every member of that force. If Brig.-Gen. Yule had not brought his column into Ladysmith, consisting, as it did, of the 18th Hussars, three batteries of Field Artillery, 14 battalions of infantry, and details, it would have been impossible for Sir George White to have held Ladysmith. Our Brigadier was certainly ill, but to him, and to him alone, should the credit be given, in conjunction with that able veteran, Brig.-Gen. Dartnell, C.M.G. Col. Campbell, then a Major, is, I am sure, the last man to wish to take credit for the successful issue of this hazardous march, in which officers, both senior and junior to him, so ably co-operated with the officer commanding the column—viz., Brig.-Gen. Yule. I may add, as one who from my position had to take my orders direct from the Brigadier, both before we left Dundee and during the whole march, it was from Col. Yule and from no one else I received my orders. May I ask 'Accurate' if Major (now Col.) Campbell conducted this march, what became of the various other commanding officers who were senior to him as Majors, to say nothing of the various colonels commanding units?"

Colonel C. V. F. Townshend, C.B., D.S.O., formerly of the Indian Staff Corps, and now of the Royal Fusiliers, has had a very varied and distinguished career. He began his military service in the Royal Marines, and was engaged in the early operations round Suakim in 1884. While still a Royal Marine he was attached to the Guards' Camel Corps in the Nile Expedition, and fought through all the actions of the desert column from Abu Klea to Metemmeh. After this he was transferred to the Indian Staff Corps and had again the good fortune to see much service. After taking part in the Hunza Nagar Expedition, he greatly distinguished himself at Chitral, having command of the garrison that made such a splendid defence. His services on that occasion justified his selection for employment with the Egyptian Army, which he joined in time to take part in the expedition to Dongola, and he commanded a battalion of Soudanese in the later successful episodes which ended in the capture of Omdurman. Since then he has been employed on the staff in South Africa.

Colonel F. Glennie some time ago completed his term of appointment as Commandant of the Royal School of Music, at Kneller Hall, but he is being kept on for an extended period in order that the post may be filled by some officer who is found to have war claims, in addition to musical qualifications.

Colonel Lord Wantage, V.C., has made a handsome gift to Wantage, the place from which he takes his title, and where he has resided since the end of the fifties. A selection of Victoria Cross pictures has long existed at the Crystal Palace; these his lordship has purchased and presented to the town. They are to be on view in a spacious building which is being prepared at Lord Wantage's expense.

Lieut.-Colonel N. P. O'Gorman, late of the Lincolnshire Regiment, has been granted a further extension of appointment as D.A.A.G., Hong Kong, until June 30, 1901. He has held the position since January 18, 1895.

Lieut.-Colonel (Captain) J. L. Harrington, I.S.C., British Resident in Abyssinia, who has been home on a short leave, is on his way to Cairo, where he will remain for a short time before resuming his duties, which he expects to do at Ades Ababa about December 15. Colonel Harrington, who has taken out, as a present from the Queen to King Menelik, a number of valuable dogs, is a great favourite with the Negus, who fully recognises the importance of being on good terms with the English—"always a fair-dealing people," as he has pronounced them, "whatever their aims and objects may be."

The Marquis of Hertford, who has been Major and Hon. Lieut.-Colonel of the Warwickshire Yeomanry from 1892, is now appointed Lieut.-Colonel of the corps and to command, in succession to Lord Willoughby de Broke, who has recently retired from the command.

Major L. G. Drummond, Scots Guards, having become second in command of the new 3rd Battalion of his regiment, will not resume duty as military secretary to Lord Minto in Canada, which position he vacated in order to proceed on active service to South Africa. The vacancy has been offered and accepted by Major F. S. Maude, Coldstream Guards.

Major Trollope, Reserve of Officers, late Grenadier Guards, has been appointed superintendent of the Aldershot Balloon Factory, as a temporary measure, during the absence of Colonel Templer, 7th King's Royal Rifles, in South Africa.

Brevet-Major D. Henderson, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, D.A.A.G. for Intelligence, Natal, has been appointed Civil Commissioner on the Natal side.

Major Wylie, of the Durban Light Infantry, who was severely wounded at the armoured train disaster near Chieveley, returns to Natal on Saturday, after recuperating in this country. Major Wylie has almost recovered from the effects of his wound.

Captain A. C. Buckle, 1st Batn. South Staffordshire Regiment, has been selected for employment as a recruiting staff officer, North-Eastern District, York.

THE STUDY OF TACTICS.—The Home District Military Society will commence its season of war games at the Royal United Service Institution on Friday, Nov. 2. Meetings will be held on every alternate Friday until March 22. There will be an outdoor exercise at the end of February. It is expected that the effect of the South African war will be to give greater interest to the work of the society, and which promises to increase in importance now that the question of professional study is forcing itself on the attention of all officers, to whatever branch of the service they belong.

MILITARY M.P.'S.

The General Election is over and everyone is busy analysing the returns. To Army men the battle at the polls has not been without interest, for it has involved considerable changes in the Service representation in the House. Some familiar faces will be missing when Parliament assembles in the New Year, but the election, on the whole, has strengthened rather than reduced the military element at St. Stephen's. That this is so will be a matter for satisfaction to all who take an interest in military matters. Whatever else may occupy the attention of the Mother of Parliaments, it is certain that the question of Army reform will loom very large in its deliberations. No one can speak with so much authority on this subject as Army men themselves, and it is decidedly gratifying to find that so many have proved successful at the polling booths. Altogether there is a total of 133 military men in the new House of Commons, which shows an increase of fifteen or sixteen on the figures before the dissolution. Nearly half of this number is at present serving and the following table, giving the rank they hold, may prove interesting:—

Lieutenant-General ...	1
Colonels ...	19
Lieutenant-Colonels ...	7
Majors ...	7
Captains ...	20
Lieutenants ...	5
	59

In addition to these there are nineteen members who have seen distinguished active service, but who are now on the retired list, and there are fifty-three members who are officers in the auxiliary forces distributed among the Yeomanry, Militia, and Volunteers. In other words, something like one-fifth of the new House has had the advantage of some form of military training. The great majority will have seats on the Ministerial side of the House, and their voice and influence will be powerful with the Government if they combine in the interest of the Service. Sir James Fergusson, who presided with so much tact and ability over the deliberations of the Service Members' Committee in the last Parliament, is, we are glad to see, again back at St. Stephen's; and Major Rasch, the popular and energetic hon. secretary, has also found his way back to look after the interests of Militia officers, and, incidentally, to continue his crusade for the slaying of "the Jabberwock." We assume, therefore, that no time will be lost when the House meets in "embodying" the Service Members' Committee. Its proceedings in the past have never failed to be interesting, and in the future it may well be that they will prove important.
